ROUTH v. QUINN et al.

L. A. 18215.

Supreme Court of California.
June 30, 1942.

1. Officers 🔑116

A public officer is liable to respond in damages to one specially injured by his neglect to perform or for negligent performance of an official ministerial duty to the extent of such special injury.

2. Taxation 🔑564

A purchaser of personal property at a delinquent tax sale may not recover damages suffered as result of alleged negligence of assessor in computation of amount of tax, since in tax sales the doctrine of "caveat emptor" applies in all its vigor. Pol.Code, §§ 3820–3823.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Caveat Emptor".

3. Taxation 🔑734(12)

A purchaser of personal property at tax sale takes risk of any defect in proceedings in the taxation process and no warrant of validity or regularity of proceedings exists.

4. Taxation 🔑820

The statute authorizing recovery from county by purchaser of amount paid at tax sale in excess of taxes lawfully due must be strictly complied with and permits only recovery there authorized. Pol.Code, § 3898.

5. Negligence 🔑2

An indispensable factor to liability founded on negligence is the existence of a duty of care owed by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured or to a class of which he is a member.

6. Negligence 🔑6

A duty imposed by a statute may not be foundation for actionable negligence in performance of that duty unless it is owed to the person injured or to a class of which he is a member.

7. Negligence 🔑6

A violation of a statute is "actionable negligence" only as to those persons for whose benefit or protection it was enacted.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Actionable Negligence".

8. Taxation 🔑564

The duty of tax assessor to exercise care in the computation of tax is not owed to a purchaser of property at delinquent tax sale, but only to public as an entity in making secure the public revenue and expediting taxation process and possibly to owner of property upon which tax had been levied. Pol.Code, § 3823.

9. Sales 🔑269

The doctrine of "caveat emptor" relates to existence of warranties in the sale of property.

10. Taxation 🔑734(12)

Purchaser of property at delinquent tax sale is bound to inform himself of the regularity of the tax proceeding, and he assumes risk of any error in the computation of the tax.

11. Taxation 🔑570(1)

Assumption of risk by purchaser at delinquent tax sale of error in computation of tax precludes purchaser from recovering damages suffered as result of alleged negligence in computation of tax, from tax assessor, his deputy and bondsman.

12. Negligence 🔑113(1), 116

Assumption of risk, like contributory negligence, ordinarily must be pleaded as a defense and may not be ground for sustaining a demurrer to the complaint; but, where it appears as a matter of law on the face of the complaint, a demurrer is sustainable on that ground.

13. Pleading ⚷225(2)

Where basis of action of purchaser of property at tax sale against tax assessor, his deputy and bondsman, for damages suffered by purchaser due to invalidity of sale was negligence in calculation of amount of tax claimed against property involved, and where no cause of action existed for such alleged negligence, refusal to permit purchaser to amend complaint to which demurrer had been sustained was not an abuse of discretion.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action by O. B. Routh against John R. Quinn and others to recover damages suffered due to invalidity of delinquent tax sale. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 118 P.2d 34.

Combs & Murphine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Gordon Boller and A. Curtis Smith, Deputies County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

The controversy presented by this appeal is whether a tax assessor, his deputy and bondsman are liable to a purchaser of personal property at a delinquent tax sale for damages suffered by him due to the invalidity of the sale, alleged to have resulted from negligence on the part of the assessor and his deputy in the computation of the tax payable.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after defendants' demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiff charged in his complaint that on June 24, 1938, defendants county tax assessor and his deputy sold to plaintiff certain personal property consisting of a dehydrating plant by means of a delinquent tax sale at public auction for $250; that the delinquent tax for which the property was sold was assessed against said personal property, the correct amount of which was $83.57; that the assessor and his deputy "negligently * * * claimed a tax (on said property) of $84.36 at * * * said sale * * *; that said excessive sum was claimed by * * * an error carelessly and negligently made by defendants * * * in the computation of said tax; that said defendants negligently computed said tax in that they failed to carry the same out to the correct number of decimal places in the computation thereof"; that as a result of the erroneous computation the sale was void and the owner of the property, Becker, recovered judgment for $4,500 against plaintiff for the wrongful conversion of said property. Plaintiff now claims damages resulting from the negligence of defendants in the sum of $14,500 consisting of the above-mentioned judgment, the expense of defending the action brought by Becker, and other damages flowing from that action. Plaintiff received a bill of sale for the property from the assessor which recited that it was sold pursuant to sections 3820, 3821 and 3822 of the Political Code.

[1] Plaintiff relies upon the general proposition that a public officer is liable to respond in damages to one specially injured by his neglect to perform or negligent performance of an official ministerial duty to the extent of such special injury. 21 Cal.Jur. 908.

Plaintiff points to section 3823 of the Political Code as imposing the duty upon the tax assessor to correctly compute the amount of the tax on personal property. Assuming that such a duty is imposed upon the assessor, and that the act of computing the amount of the tax, that is, the application of the rate of tax to the assessed value of the property is a purely ministerial function, still we are of the opinion that plaintiff has failed to state a cause of action.

[2-4] The fundamental principle from which springs the reasons why a purchaser at a delinquent tax sale may not recover damages suffered as a result of the alleged negligence of the assessor in the computation of the amount of tax, is that in tax sales the doctrine of caveat emptor applies in all its vigor. A purchaser of property at a tax sale takes the risk of any defect in the proceedings in the taxation process. No warranty of the validity or regularity of the proceedings exists. See Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 373, 374, 123 P. 258, L.R.A.1915C, 492; 61 C.J. 1304; 4 Cooley on Taxation, 4th ed., § 1553; 77 A.L.R. 824; 116 A.L.R. 1408. Prior to the amendment in 1913 of section 3898 of the Political Code, it was the rule in this state that the purchaser at a tax sale could not recover from the county or state the amount paid, although the sale was void because of some irregularity in the process of the levy or collection of the tax or the sale of the property. Coleman v. Los Angeles County, 180 Cal. 714, 182 P. 440; Loomis v. County of Los Angeles, 59 Cal. 456; Brooks v. Tulare County, 117 Cal. 465, 49 P. 469; Holland v. Hotchkiss, supra; Moyer v. Wilson, 166 Cal. 261, 135 P. 1125. That rule was founded upon the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor. See Brooks v. Tulare County, supra. The rule was relaxed by the 1913 amendment to section 3898 of the Political Code with respect to the recovery from the county by the purchaser of the amount paid at the tax sale in excess of the taxes lawfully due. See Pol. Code, § 3898; Coleman v. Los Angeles County, supra. But that statute must be strictly complied with and permits only the recovery there authorized. See Coleman v. Los Angeles County, supra. There is no statute authorizing recovery against the tax assessor. If the money paid at the sale by the purchaser cannot be recovered from the county or state except by statutory authority, surely for the same reason, caveat emptor, no recovery could be had against them for the negligence of their officers in the computation of the tax. While plaintiff's action is against the tax assessor as an individual, rather than the county, the same rule extends to protect the assessor. See Foster v. Malberg, 119 Minn. 168, 137 N. W. 816, 41 L.R.A.,N.S., 967, Ann.Cas. 1914A, 1116. Reason supports that conclusion inasmuch as the assessor is merely the agent for the county and is not purporting to pass any title in his individual capacity. The doctrine of caveat emptor being the basis for the absence of liability, the same doctrine would protect both the political entity and the officer. It is for that reason distinguishable from the cases where the state is not liable for a tort but the officer is, the non-liability being based upon the doctrine of sovereign immunity.

[5-7] It is an elementary principle that an indispensable factor to liability founded upon negligence is the existence of a duty of care owed by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured, or to a class of which he is a member. Dahms v. General Elevator Co., 214 Cal. 733, 7 P.2d 1013; 19 Cal.Jur. 550, 551. A particular application of that rule finds expression in the principle that a duty imposed by a statute may not be the foundation for actionable negligence in the performance of that duty unless it is owed to the person injured, or to a class of which he is a member, or stated another way, a violation of a statute is actionable negligence only as to those persons for whose benefit or protection it was enacted. King v. San Diego Electric R. Co., 176 Cal. 266, 168 P. 131; 19 Cal.Jur. 635; Restatement, Torts, §§ 286, 288.

[8, 9] We have assumed that the duty to exercise care in the computation of the tax is imposed upon the tax assessor by section 3823 of the Political Code. But that duty is not owed to a purchaser of property at a delinquent tax sale. Such duty would be owed only to the public as an entity in making secure the public revenues and expediting the taxation process as distinguished from the individual members of the public, and possibly to the owner of the property upon which the tax had been levied. There may well be a duty, under proper circumstances, upon the officer making the tax sale of land to execute a proper deed to the purchaser, when the taxation proceedings leading to the sale have been regular and valid (Webster v. Somer, 159 Cal. 459, 114 P. 575; Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 91 P. 1004, 1007; Smart v. Peek, 213 Cal. 452, 2 P.2d 380), but the computation of the tax in such a case is made, of course, before there is a sale, and before the purchaser becomes entitled to an instrument of transfer. These conclusions with respect to the duty of care necessarily follow from the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor to the purchaser. While that doctrine relates to the existence of warranties in the sale of property, which, of course, are contractual in nature, it seems clear that if there are no warranties made by the state with reference to the regularity in computing the tax, there are none made by the assessor, the agent of the state. If they do not warrant or make any holding out as to the regularity of that computation, as to the purchaser, neither is under any duty of care with respect to him. As he is not entitled to any assurance of the regularity of the tax proceedings, he is not entitled to insist that due care be exercised by the assessor or the county. The statute does not impose such a duty upon him as to the purchaser. Nor is there any other source from which such a duty may arise. Sound public policy dictates that no such intolerable burden shall be placed upon a tax assessor that will make him liable for any error he may make in the computation of the tax. The multitude of transactions with which he must deal and the great probability that mathematical error may well creep into the calculations regardless of his competency and efficiency, refutes the wisdom of imposing such duty upon him.

[10, 11] A further ground for the absence of liability of the tax assessor flows from the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor. The essence of that doctrine is that the buyer beware; that he is bound to inform himself of the regularity of the tax proceedings, and that he assumes the risk of any error in the computation of the tax. Assumption of the risk out of which an injury arose by the person injured has consistently been held to bar recovery in an action for the injury alleged to have been negligently caused. See 19 Cal.Jur. 583.

[12] It is true that assumption of risk, like contributory negligence, ordinarily must be pleaded as a defense and may not be the grounds for sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, such as is now before us. But where, as in the case of contributory negligence, that negligence appears as a matter of law on the face of the complaint, a demurrer is sustainable on that ground. Nicolosi v. Clark, 169 Cal. 746, 147 P. 971, L.R.A.1915F, 638.

Courts in two other states have on various grounds denied recovery from a tax official by a purchaser at a delinquent tax sale in actions where improperly performed duty was charged. Foster v. Malberg, supra; Hamilton v. Valiant, 30 Md. 139. Although the action in the Foster case was against the tax official and the sureties on his bond, the discussion there in denying liability is particularly pertinent. The officer failed to give proper notice of the tax sale, with the result that it was void to the purchaser's injury. The basis of nonliability was founded upon contributory negligence, lack of proximate cause, and absence of duty of care, all emanating from the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor. The Foster case was cited with approval in Judd v. City of St. Cloud, 198 Minn. 590, 272 N.W. 577.

It follows, of course, under the circumstances, that if the assessor is not liable neither is his deputy or bondsmen.

[13] Plaintiff complains that the court abused its discretion in refusing to permit him to amend his complaint. There was no abuse of discretion. From plaintiff's complaint the basis of plaintiff's action is clear, that is, negligence in the calculation of the amount of the tax claimed against the property involved. Inasmuch as we have determined that no cause of action exists for such alleged negligence, there are no circumstances under which an amendment would serve any useful purpose.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

S. F. 16678.

June 30, 1942.

1. Contempt 🔑67

Certiorari will lie to review an order in a contempt proceeding.

2. Courts 🔑475(1)

Where petition for prohibition restraining superior court from taking further proceedings in contempt hearing was denied by District Court of Appeal without written opinion, certiorari proceeding brought in Supreme Court before expiration of 30 days after denial of the petition for prohibition, to annul contempt judgment, did not involve same matter as that involved in prohibition proceeding, and hence Supreme Court was not without jurisdiction of certiorari proceeding on ground that a proceeding involving same matter was pending in District Court of Appeal. Const. art. 6, § 4c.

3. Judgment 🔑715(3)

An order of District Court of Appeal denying, without written opinion, a petition for writ of prohibition restraining superior court from taking further proceedings in contempt hearing, was not "res judicata" in subsequent certiorari proceeding to review judgment of contempt, since District Court of Appeal in the prohibition proceeding did not necessarily pass on issues involved in certiorari proceeding. Const. art. 6, § 4c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

4. Judgment ⚷715(3)

The rule that ex parte denial by District Court of Appeal, without a written opinion, of an application for writ of prohibition, is a "final adjudication" of facts stated in the petition, did not preclude Supreme Court from reviewing on certiorari a judgment of contempt entered after such a denial by the District Court of Appeal of petition for writ of prohibition to restrain superior court from taking further proceeding in contempt hearing. Const. art. 6, § 4c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Adjudication".

5. Prohibition ⚷3(3)

Prohibition will not be granted to prevent superior court from proceeding in a contempt matter merely on ground that superior court has erred in the proceeding out of which alleged contempt grew, and remedy of petitioner in such a case is to present his defense on hearing of contempt proceeding, and then, if found guilty of contempt, to apply to higher court for certiorari or habeas corpus.

6. Courts ⚷475(1)

Where petition for certiorari filed in District Court of Appeal to review a contempt order was voluntarily withdrawn, constitutional provision relating to 30-day period after decision of District Court of Appeal is pronounced, in which that decision becomes final was inapplicable, and Supreme Court had jurisdiction of a subsequent certiorari proceeding to review the order, which was filed within 30 days after the voluntary withdrawal of the petition filed in District Court of Appeal. Const. art. 6, § 4c.

7. Contempt ⚷67

Where main issue presented in certiorari proceeding to review contempt judgment of superior court was payment of salaries of certain civil service employees as ordered by mandamus judgment entered against the State Board of Equalization, the State Personnel Board and its executive officer, members of the boards, and the State Comptroller, that the State Board of Equalization adopted resolution declaring intention to comply with all terms of writ of mandate did not require dismissal of certiorari proceeding as involving a "moot question", in view of fact that parties other than the Board of Equalization were affected by the contempt order.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

8. States ⚷59

A civil service employee who is unlawfully prevented by the state from performing duties of his position is entitled to recover only amount of salary which accrues during period he is unlawfully prevented from performing his duties, after deducting from the total accrued amount any compensation he has received in private or public employment during such period.

9. Mandamus ⚷172

Generally, determination of question concerning deductions to be made from amount recoverable by state civil service employee who has been unlawfully discharged, because of compensation received by employee in other employments, should be made by trial court in mandamus proceeding brought by employee to require reinstatement and payment of accrued salary.

10. Mandamus ⚷178

Judgment stating what writ of mandate should contain is controlling over the writ.

11. Mandamus ⚷178

Mandamus judgment was required to be interpreted, if possible, without doing violence to its express language, so that it did not command public officers to perform unlawful acts.

12. Mandamus ⚷186

A mandamus judgment requiring reinstatement of civil service employees and payment of accrued salaries was construable as requiring deduction of compensation received by employees from other employment, and hence contempt order which commanded payment of accrued salaries without taking into consideration such other compensation was in excess of jurisdiction.

13. Mandamus ⚷186

Where mandamus judgment ordered reinstatement of civil service employee to a certain position at fixed salary, Supreme Court, in contempt proceeding based on violation of mandamus judgment, was concerned only with enforcement of the judgment, and was without power to command that employee be placed in higher position and paid higher salary than that required by the judgment, even if there was proper compliance with all requisites to reclassification or promotion to that position.

14. Mandamus 🔑185

Where civil service employee is ordered to be reinstated and paid accrued salary, in mandamus proceeding, it is proper to require on enforcement of mandamus judgment that the employee receive compensation of position to which he was reinstated, including any blanket increases in that compensation, but there should not be included therein any promotion to a higher position.

15. Mandamus 🔑186

Where mandamus judgment ordered reinstatement of and payment of accrued salary to civil service employee, contempt order based on violation of the judgment properly took into consideration in fixing amount to be paid to employee, fact that there was an entire salary range adjustment consisting of blanket increase of minimum salaries, but improperly included individual salary increases which would ordinarily accrue during the period that employees were deprived of their positions. St.1937, p. 2094, § 70.

16. States 🔑63

Reinstated civil service employees, who had been improperly discharged, were not entitled to benefit of periodic individual salary increases which they might have earned if they had been working, since such increases would have been based on efficiency and, although employees were lawfully entitled to perform the duties of their positions, they were not performing them and therefore were not available for observation necessary to ascertain their efficiency. St.1937, p. 2094, § 70.

17. Contempt 🔑67

Order of contempt requiring certain state officers to perform specified acts before certain date and providing that, on failure to perform such acts, the officers would be guilty of contempt and should be imprisoned until complying with order, was a "final order" in contempt proceeding which was reviewable by certiorari. Code Civ.Proc. § 1222.

Certiorari proceeding by the State Board of Equalization of the State of California and others to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County adjudging the petitioners guilty of contempt.

Order annulled.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Robert W. Harrison, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for petitioners.

Robert W. Kenny, Morris E. Cohn, Howland & Prindle, Clayton Howland, and Everett Prindle, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioners seek to have annulled a judgment of contempt rendered for an alleged violation of a writ of mandate issued upon a judgment in a mandamus proceeding. Petitioners are The State Board of Equalization and The State Personnel Board, and the members of those boards, and the executive officer of the latter board, and the State Controller.

On March 29, 1940, respondent Superior Court of Los Angeles County rendered a judgment in a mandamus proceeding commanding petitioners to reinstate Robert A. Brown, Lewis Torrance, George McNamara, John T. Brady, Daniel H. Hudelson, William Magee, and Willard Long, Sr., to their positions as civil service employees of the State of California with The Board of Equalization, and to pay the salaries of those employees. The writ of mandate was issued on April 3, 1940. On February 17, 1941, the judgment was affirmed on appeal by the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division Two; a hearing by this court was denied on April 17, 1941. Brown v. State Personnel Board, 43 Cal.App.2d 70, 110 P.2d 497. Pursuant to the terms of the judgment and on June 6, 1941, the salaries of all the employees which had accrued from the time of their dismissal to the entry of the judgments were paid to the employees, but none of the salaries accruing subsequent thereto were paid.

The writ of mandate directed the reinstatement of the employees Brown and Hudelson to their respective positions of Supervising Liquor Control Officers, Grade 2, employees Torrance, Brady and Long to their respective positions of Liquor Control Officers, and employees McNamara and Magee to their respective positions of Investigators. It was ordered that the petitioners be paid their salary from the date of dismissal until reinstatement less certain deductions; and that the respondents therein, petitioners here, show to the superior court on April 17, 1940, that they have obeyed the writ.

Pursuant to the affidavit of employee Brady, an order to show cause why the petitioners should not be punished for contempt for failure to obey the writ with respect to all of the employees except Long, was issued in the mandamus proceeding on July 19, 1941. It was made returnable August 4, 1941. Brady's affidavit charged that there had been no payment of any salary since the judgment was entered and that the employees had not been reinstated.

After a hearing on the order to show cause, and on October 9, 1941, the superior court made an order finding that petitioners had wilfully failed to comply with the writ of mandate, and that unless there was paid to the employees the sums named therein by October 30, 1941, and employee Brown offered the position of Chief Liquor Control Officer or District Liquor Control Officer, the petitioners would be guilty of contempt and imprisoned until they had performed. It is a review of that order which is here involved.

[1-4] This court's jurisdiction to entertain the present proceeding is challenged. On October 8, 1941, the day before the contempt order was made, petitioners petitioned the District Court of Appeal for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from taking further proceedings in the contempt hearing. On the same day that court denied the petition without written opinion. Respondents assert that inasmuch as the same issues were raised by that petition the matter was still pending in the District Court of Appeal when, on October 24, 1941, application was made to this court for the writ of certiorari here involved; that the matter was pending in the District Court of Appeal until its order of denial of the petition became final thirty days after its rendition, and that in the interim this court had no jurisdiction; that when that order did become final it was res judicata on the issues now presented. That position is not tenable. The two proceedings were separate and distinct, the one for prohibition in the District Court of Appeal was before the contempt order here in question was made, and was an endeavor to restrain the Superior Court from further action, and was before the court at a time when it could not be assumed by the District Court of Appeal that the superior court would make an order in excess of its jurisdiction; rather, its assumption would be to the contrary; the present proceeding was initiated to review the contempt order after it was made and the superior court's action on the matter was known. The superior court undeniably had jurisdiction to hear the contempt proceeding, and, therefore, up to the time it made its decision it could not have been said to be without jurisdiction and thus subject to restraint by prohibition. Certiorari, however, is appropriate to review an order in a contempt proceeding, the basic inquiry being whether the court acted in excess of its jurisdiction. Thus the same proceeding was not pending in the District Court of Appeal when application was made for the present writ, nor was the order of denial res judicata because the District Court of Appeal did not necessarily pass upon the issues here involved. The writ of prohibition may have been refused because the District Court of Appeal did not assume at that time that the superior court would make any order in excess of its jurisdiction. While it has been held that the ex parte denial by an appellate court without a written opinion of an application for a writ of prohibition is a final adjudication of the facts stated in the petition (Reilly v. Police Court, 194 Cal. 375, 228 P. 860), from the foregoing discussion it is obvious that such rule is not applicable under the present circumstances. See O'Brien v. Olson, 42 Cal.App.2d 449, 109 P.2d 8.

[5] With particular reference to the res judicata argument, it is pertinent to observe that the District Court of Appeal in denying the petition for the writ of prohibition may have done so on the ground that such was not the proper remedy, rather than that petitioners' claims were without merit. In so doing it would have been proceeding in accordance with the rule that "prohibition will not be granted in an appellate court to prevent the superior court from proceeding in a contempt matter merely upon the ground that the court has erred in the proceeding out of which the alleged contempt grew. The remedy of the petitioner in such a case is to first present his defense upon the hearing of the contempt proceeding, and then, if found guilty of contempt, to apply to a higher court for a writ of certiorari or habeas corpus. Wessels v. Superior Court, 200 Cal. 403, 253 P. 135; Commercial Bank v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 395, 397, 220 P. 422; Drew v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.App. 651, 655, 185 P. 680." Monjar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. 2d 715, 717, 87 P.2d 694, 695.

[6] Respondent as a further basis for its challenge of this court's jurisdiction herein, points out that after the contempt order of October 9, 1941, was made, but before the petition for review was filed in this court, petitioners applied to the District Court of Appeal for a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the superior court in the contempt matter and respondent filed its answer thereto. That petition for certiorari in the District Court of Appeal was voluntarily withdrawn without prejudice by petitioners before the District Court of Appeal acted upon it and before the present proceeding was commenced, but respondent contends it was still pending therein when the present proceeding was commenced in this court because such dismissal would not become final until thirty days after its entry, and the petition was filed in this court before the expiration of that period. We cannot agree. The thirty days is the period after the decision of the District Court of Appeal is pronounced in which that decision becomes final. Cal.Const. art. VI, sec. 4c. In the instant case the proceeding for a review in the District Court of Appeal was voluntarily dismissed by petitioners before any judgment was pronounced by that court, therefore there was no judgment to become final thirty days after its pronouncement and no proceeding was pending therein awaiting decision. Los Angeles Drug Co. v. Superior Court, 8 Cal.2d 71, 63 P.2d 1124; Fitts v. Superior Court, 6 Cal.2d 247, 57 P.2d 518; and Reilly v. Police Court, supra, cited by respondent all concerned situations where a judgment had been pronounced by the District Court of Appeal.

[7] Respondent asserts that the issue has become moot. That contention is based upon the action of The State Board of Equalization in adopting a resolution on October 24, 1941, the day application was made to this court for the instant writ; the resolution declares an intention on the part of The Board of Equalization to comply with all of the terms of the writ of mandate. There are other parties, however, who were affected by the contempt order, namely, the State Controller and The Personnel Board and the members thereof. As to them the proceeding is not moot. The main issue presented is the payment of the salaries, a matter with which the State Controller is directly concerned.

The judgment in the mandamus proceeding, the violation of which must necessarily be the basis of the contempt order, directed the following: That employee Brown be reinstated as Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2, and receive as salary from the date of his dismissal to the date of the judgment the sum of $205 per month, and at the same rate after the judgment until Brown shall have been reinstated, and after reinstatement Brown shall receive $205 per month until the salary is changed or Brown is laid off or dismissed. With respect to the other employees, the judgment was substantially the same stating the salary and position to be as follows: Hudelson, Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2, with a salary of $225 per month; Torrance, Brady and Long as Liquor Control Officers with a salary of $150 per month; McNamara and Magee as investigators with a salary of $150 per month. On June 6, 1941, all of the employees were paid the salaries specified in the judgment as having accrued at the date thereof. On July 26, 1941, and before the hearing on the contempt citation, employees Brady, Torrance, Magee and McNamara were ordered to report for duty on July 28, 1941; the first three reported for duty as ordered and have held their positions since that time. McNamara requested a leave of absence, he being employed privately. It was understood by him that the request would be denied unless he furnished a certificate showing his employment was necessary to national defense; he did not furnish such a certificate and has continued in private employment. Employee Hudelson was inducted into the United States Army on March 3, 1941, and has remained there since. Employee Long is not a party to the contempt proceeding, he having left his position, his salary having been paid in full. On July 3, 1941, The State Personnel Board attempted to reclassify the position of Brown from Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2, to Chief Liquor Control Officer, also known as District Liquor Administrator. It is alleged in the petition and not denied that he was reinstated on September 22, 1941, as Supervising Liquor Control Officer and he has since held that position.

The contempt order of October 9, 1941, commanded the payment of salaries to the employees from the date of the judgment to the date of their reinstatement, or their separation from state employment by their acceptance of employment elsewhere as the facts with respect to each employee indicated; the amount was expressed only in a lump sum. The total amount ordered paid was in excess of an amount calculated at the rate specified in the judgment ordering the issuance of the writ of mandate. In addition, it was ordered that Brown be paid henceforth $300 per month. Since the judgment in the mandamus proceeding, The Personnel Board has changed the classification of Chief Liquor Control Officer to District Liquor Control Administrator. In 1938 The Personnel Board had adopted a resolution fixing the salary range of a chief liquor control officer at $300 to $380 per month.

On October 9, 1941, petitioners offered to pay to the employees the back salary less the sums they had earned in other pursuits, private, or public, from the date of the mandamus judgment to the time of reinstatement. The chief controversy appears to be whether such earnings should have been deducted from the salary payable and thus whether petitioners were justified in refusing to pay more than the accrued salaries less that deduction. The answer to that issue hinges upon the proper interpretation of the mandamus judgment, and whether such deductions are proper.

[8-12] Considering the latter question first, the rule is now well settled that a civil service employee is entitled to recover only the amount of salary which accrues during the period he is unlawfully prevented by the state from performing the duties of his position, after deducting from the total accrued amount any compensation he has received in private or public employment during such period. Wiles v. State Personnel Board, 19 Cal.2d 344, 121 P.2d 673; Kelly v. State Personnel Board, 31 Cal.App.2d 443, 88 P.2d 264. Ordinarily the determination with reference to those deductions should be made by the court in the mandamus proceeding. See Wiles v. State Personnel Board, supra. That brings us to a consideration of whether the matter was adjudicated in the mandamus proceeding in the instant case. Several factors might possibly indicate that the mandamus judgment settled that issue adversely to petitioners, and that therefore, petitioners were in contempt for insisting on making the deductions. The judgment made deductions of compensation received by the employees in other public service in fixing the amount of salary accrued up to the date of the judgment. The judgment declared that the records of The State Personnel Board should be corrected to show that the employees had a continuous civil service status and "to be entitled to receive the salary thereof;" that each receive the amount specified "per month for each and every month, and at the same rate for each fraction of a month, following date of rendition of judgment, until petitioner shall have been reinstated in his position * * * and thereafter and upon said reinstatement petitioner shall be entitled to receive the sum of (amount stated) per month as and for salary in the occupancy and performance of the duties of said position until said salary shall have been changed or petitioner dismissed or laid off from said position as provided by law." In stating what the writ of mandate should contain, the judgment provided that warrants should be issued in the amount of the stated salary and "for the further sum of (amount stated) for each and every month, and proportionately at that rate for each fraction of a month subsequent to date hereof, to and until said (employee) * * * shall have been reinstated in his position." It will be noted that the writ of mandate issued contains substantially the same language; in any event the judgment for the writ is controlling. It does not necessarily follow, that because the specified salary was ordered to be paid, no lawful deductions could be made. The judgment should be interpreted if it may be, without doing violence to the express language, so that it does not command that the public officers perform an unlawful act. It is the law, as heretofore stated, that deductions should be made for compensation received in other employment while the employees were unlawfully excluded from their positions. Therefore, to order officials to pay public funds in violation of that rule would be unlawful. Such expenditure of public funds would be illegal and contrary to law. In the light of those principles we believe the judgment properly interpreted means that there should be deducted from the salaries accruing between the date of the judgment and reinstatement, the compensation received from other employment. Therefore, the contempt order which commanded the payment of such accrued salaries without taking into consideration that factor was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. In this connection respondent further urges, however, that the petitioners should have at least paid the amount less the deductions. Warrants were offered to the employees on October 9, 1941, the date of the contempt order, but prior to its entry, insofar as it was known what other compensation had been received, and it appears that negotiations were conducted between the employees and the state officials with relation to the amounts, if any, that had been received.

Respondent refers to the delay of the petitioners in reinstating the employees, that is, in waiting until July 28, 1941, after the order to show cause in the contempt citation was issued. But they were reinstated before a hearing in the contempt proceeding, and it was conceded by the employees at the hearing that there was no issue of contempt with regard to the reinstatement. Furthermore, the contempt order stated that the petitioners shall be guilty of contempt unless they made the payments set forth therein on or before October 30, 1941; there was no adjudication that they would be guilty of contempt if they failed to reinstate the employees. That had already been done.

[13, 14] Particularly with respect to employee Brown it appears that the mandamus judgment ordered that he be reinstated to the position of Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2. He was reinstated in the position of Supervising Liquor Control Officer in September, 1941. It is alleged in petitioners' petition and not denied that the two above-mentioned positions are one and the same, and the salary range therefor is $200 to $260 per month. The contempt order, however, commanded the payment of $300 per month to Brown and apparently fixing Brown's classification as a Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 3, also known as Chief Liquor Control Officer and District Liquor Administrator, the salary range of which is $300 to $380 per month. Presumably that was done on the basis of a resolution of The State Personnel Board dated July 3, 1941 , classifying Brown as a Chief Liquor Control Officer, and a resolution of The Board of Equalization to create such a position in the Los Angeles district. There is a conflict as to whether the money became available for that position or the allowance thereof was approved by the Director of Finance. On September 22, 1941, The Board of Equalization reinstated Brown to the position of Supervising Liquor Control Officer, formerly known as Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2. The court exceeded its jurisdiction in its contempt order in so ordering the salary for the position of Chief Liquor Control Officer to be paid to Brown. The mandamus judgment ordered that he be reinstated to Supervising Liquor Control Officer, Grade 2, that position is now known as Supervising Liquor Control Officer and carries a lower salary. The judgment in addition to directing reinstatement ordered that Brown be paid the named salary, that is, in the range for the last-mentioned position, until reinstatement "thereafter according to law." It also provides "and upon said reinstatement (Brown) shall be entitled to receive the sum of $205.00 per month as and for salary in the occupancy and performance of the duties of said position until said salary shall have been changed * * *." Under those circumstances it was not within the proper purview of the contempt order to command him to be placed in the higher position even assuming their proper compliance with all the requisites to a reclassification or promotion to that position. The court was concerned in that proceeding with enforcing the judgment, and it cannot be said that by reason of that judgment the court may for all time in the future determine by contempt proceeding that the employee is receiving his proper classification and advancement. If Brown is entitled to a higher classification and greater salary and has been denied it, he has his remedy in appropriate proceedings. While it is proper as will hereafter appear to require an enforcement of the mandamus judgment that the reinstated employee receive the compensation of the position to which he was reinstated including any blanket increases in that compensation, there should not be included therein any promotions to a higher position. That is a separate and distinct matter that the mandamus judgment did not purport to embrace. Subsequent promotions are dependent on factors not litigated in the mandamus proceeding and are not automatic and therefore a contempt proceeding in execution of the judgment is not the proper method of determining those issues.

[15, 16] It appears that there was an entire salary range adjustment which consisted of a blanket increase of the minimum salary, and the contempt order took that increase into consideration in fixing the amount to be paid the employees for the period after the entry of the judgment in the mandamus proceeding. Petitioners do not question the propriety of such procedure, but insist that the periodical step ups or individual salary increases which would ordinarily occur during that period should not have been included in fixing the amount payable to the employees. It is apparent from the contempt order when the amounts there stated are compared with the period stated to be covered thereby, that those amounts are in excess of that amount which would be reached on a computation based upon either the rate fixed in the mandamus judgment or on a rate fixed by considering an increase by a general salary range adjustment. It is obvious therefore that the contempt order was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court in requiring the payment of accrued salary in excess of that specified in the mandamus judgment as interpreted to include the blanket increase by salary range adjustments. If the excess was due to the addition of the periodic individual salary increases, the order is equally vulnerable because those increases are dependent upon the attainment of a certain percentage of efficiency by the individual employee. It is provided in the State Civil Service Act: "The board [Personnel Board] shall provide for intermediate [between blanket salary readjustments] steps within such limits to govern the extent of the salary adjustment which an employee may receive at any one time. After completion of the first year in a position, each employee shall receive a salary adjustment equivalent to one of such intermediate steps during each year when his service rating, as shown by the current or last performance report shall be equal to or higher than a reasonable percentage to be fixed by rule of the board." Stats.1937, pp. 2085, 2094, sec. 70. Manifestly, no rating of efficiency could be made prior to the reinstatement of the employees. Although they were lawfully entitled to perform the duties of their positions they were not performing them and therefore were not available for the observation necessary to ascertain their efficiency.

[17] Respondent asserts that the proceeding here is premature because the order of contempt is not final. There is no doubt that the order of October 9, 1941, was a final order in a contempt proceeding, as is contemplated by section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The order adjudges "that unless within twenty days from the date hereof, that is to say, on or before the 30th of October, 1941, the respondents hereinafter named do and perform the acts hereinafter specified, the said respondents so failing in the said respective performances shall be guilty of contempt in disobeying and in failing to obey the lawful orders of this Court as aforesaid, they and each of them having the power to obey the said orders." Thereafter follow the salary payments to be made and heretofore mentioned. Then it is ordered that: "Upon the failure of the said respondents or any of them within the time aforesaid to perform and do the acts hereinabove specified said respondent or respondents so failing shall be, as of the 30th day of October, 1941, guilty of contempt; and the said respondents and each of them so failing and so adjudged in contempt shall be imprisoned in the County Jail of the County of Los Angeles until such respondents so guilty of contempt shall have complied with the orders aforesaid, and to that end a warrant of commitment shall on the 30th day of October, 1941, issue against the said respondents so adjudged guilty of contempt." It is clear the order was a final order in a contempt proceeding such as is reviewable by writ of certiorari.

For the foregoing reasons the order of October 9, 1941, herein is annulled.

SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. TRACY et al.

Civ. 13568.

June 18, 1942.

Hearing Granted Aug. 10, 1942.

1. Trusts 🔑270

Where trust document recited that trustor should have exclusive possession and use of trust estate during his life without accounting to trustee and that the latter, on trustor's death, should distribute the trust estate as the trustor might designate in his will, the trustee had duty to distribute the estate as directed by the trustor's will.

2. Action 🔑6

In the performance of trustee's duty to distribute trust estate as directed by trustor's will, the trustee, which was faced with divergent claims of a character possessing legal substantiality, was entitled to safeguard itself against legal liability caused not by its own acts but by that of others, by bringing declaratory judgment action.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑513(9)

An adjudication made by probate court on intermediate account of executor was not "final" except as to parties over which the court had jurisdiction and to the extent that distribution was made under the probate court's order.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Adjudication".

4. Judgment 🔑707

Where trustee of an express trust created by decedent was not made a party to probate proceedings in which executor obtained an adjudication concerning rights to decedent's property, and was not served with process in that proceeding, the Probate Court's order did not "estop" trustee from seeking, in equity, an adjudication of its duties as trustee in regard to a third party who contended that probate court's adjudication was void.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

5. Action 🔑6

Where executor who was also residuary legatee demanded that trustee assign and transfer trust estate to parties found entitled thereto by construction placed on will by the Probate Court in a proceeding to which the trustee was not a party, and a third party contended that the adjudication of the probate court was void and demanded that trustee convey an interest in the estate to third party, the trustee could maintain declaratory judgment action for declaration of the rights of the parties to the trust estate and for declaration of trustee's duties in regard thereto.

6. Trusts 🔑227

The trustee of an express trust, which brought declaratory judgment action for declaration of rights of parties in the trust estate and of trustee's duties in regard thereto was entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust estate for its expenses including attorney's fees which were properly incurred by it in executing the trust. Civ. Code § 2273.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)

Where trial court's findings made on issues necessarily involved in the action were adequate to sustain its judgment, that the findings went beyond the issues was immaterial.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is another companion case to Larrabee v. Tracy et al., 126 P.2d 947, and Salvation Army v. Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, 126 P.2d 953. The appeal is submitted upon a single record made in this and the cases mentioned, notwithstanding they were not consolidated in the court below for trial. In the instant case, however, neither the issues nor the errors assigned are the same as in the two cases mentioned. The questions here are two, viz.: (1) whether this action for declaratory relief was maintainable, and

(2) whether attorney fees could properly be allowed to respondent Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles.

The facts upon which the questions involved turn are these: On August 7, 1930, Mark H. Rice conveyed all the real estate he then owned to the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, and the latter, on its part, executed and delivered its declaration of trust to evidence the trust upon which it had received title to the property involved. By the terms of the trust document it was recited that the trustor should have the exclusive possession and use of the trust estate during his life without rental or other accounting therefor to the trustee, but that the latter should, on the trustor's death, distribute the trust estate as the trustor, might designate in his last will. Upon the death of the trustor the trustee, anticipating that the estate would be promptly closed by appellant, the executor who had been named by the will and appointed as such by the court, consented that the executor might take possession of and manage the real estate involved in the trust and account to it for rents, issues and profits. At intervals between the date of the appointment of the executor in 1931 and the filing of the instant action for declaratory relief in the court below the trustee made numerous demands upon the executor that he close the estate. Not only did the executor fail to accede to these demands, but, after he had filed his third account current and had procured from the probate court its approval and an adjudication that Edith Larrabee was not entitled to any portion of the estate, he made demand upon the trustee, both in his capacity as executor and as residuary legatee, that the trustee assign and transfer the trust estate to the parties found entitled thereto by the construction placed by the probate court upon the will of Rice. Inasmuch as Edith Larrabee had contended that the adjudication by the probate court was void, she made demand upon the trustee that it assign and convey to her the interest which, by the terms of the will, her mother would have received if living at the time of the trustor's death. In view of these adverse claims made upon it, the trustee instituted in the court below the instant action for declaratory relief, asking an adjudication of the rights of the parties involved in this appeal and its duties in the premises. In its complaint it averred, among other things, that it had been required to retain counsel to institute the action and present it to the court, and so it prayed that it might be awarded a reasonable sum with which to compensate its attorney, payable out of the trust fund. It will suffice to say that appellant, by his answer, averred that the will had been construed by the probate court; that that court had held Edith Larrabee had no interest in the estate; that such adjudication was binding upon her and upon the trustee, and by reason thereof there was no occasion for an action for declaratory relief. The answer further averred that attorney fees as prayed were not allowable in a declaratory relief action. With this preliminary statement as to the factual situation we turn to the contentions which are here made by appellant.

[1-5] First. It was the duty of the trustee to distribute the trust estate as directed by the last will of the trustor. In the performance of that duty it was entitled, where it was faced with divergent claims of a character possessing legal substantiality, to safeguard itself against legal liability caused, not by any act of its own but by that of others. The adjudication which had been made by the probate court on an intermediate account was not final except as to the parties over which the court had jurisdiction and to the extent that distribution had been made under the probate court's order. As the trustee was not made a party to the probate proceedings, or served with process, the probate court's order did not bind it nor estop it from seeking in equity an adjudication of its duties as the trustee of an express trust. As to that trust the probate court possessed no jurisdiction. That there was a substantial, actual legal controversy between Wellman, in his capacity as executor and as residuary legatee, and Edith Larrabee is plain. The trustee, accordingly, was entitled to bring and maintain its action for declaratory relief.

[6] Second. The contention here made by appellant that the trial court was without authority to allow attorney fees in a declaratory relief action is readily answered. The trustee sought such fees, not on the theory that it was entitled to them in a declaratory relief action as such, but by virtue of the fact that it was a trustee of an express trust, and therefore under Civil Code section 2273 entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust estate for its expenses, including attorney fees, which were properly incurred by it in executing the trust. It is not open to debate that the statute mentioned permits of an allowance of the character of that which is here involved. In re Duffill's Estate, 188 Cal. 536, 206 P. 42.

[7] Appellant's further contention that the findings went beyond the issues is of no significance, as the findings the trial court made on the issues necessarily involved in the action are adequate to sustain its judgment. Other errors assigned, which have not been argued, require no notice on our part.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Carrie F. Levi, an incompetent person, wherein Edna L. Sturgeon filed a petition for appointment of a guardian and A. F. Levy objected to the appointment of a guardian. From an order appointing a guardian of the person and estate of Carrie F. Levi, an incompetent person, A. F. Levy appeals.

Affirmed.

A. F. Levy, in pro. per., for appellant.

Spray, Davis & Gould, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

This appeal is from an order appointing a guardian of the person and estate of the mother of appellant.

The petition for appointment of a guardian recited in substance that the alleged incompetent was 88 years of age and unable to care for herself and property and that she had requested in writing that petitioner, her daughter, act as such guardian.

Appellant objected to the appointment of a guardian upon the ground that his mother was well able to care for herself and her property; that an unnatural and mentally ill daughter of the alleged incompetent (not petitioner) persuaded her to deed her whole property to said daughter in trust to be reconveyed upon request. In support of such objection he filed his affidavit which stated that he had lived with his mother during the past thirteen years and that petitioner, his sister, had seen her about once a month during that time; that his mother was under the complete domination of said mentally ill daughter at all times; that his mother had just returned from a hospital when she signed the request for a guardian and at that time petitioner told her to sign the guardianship paper, then they could get the property back for her and she would not have to go to court.

Appellant asserts that the order is erroneous for the reasons (1) that the alleged incompetent was not examined by the court at the hearing, and (2) that the finding of the court was based upon testimony of lay witnesses rather than upon medical testimony.

[1] The proceeding was based upon section 1461 of the Probate Code. The alleged incompetent was present at the hearing and had requested in writing that petitioner be appointed guardian of her person and estate. She was not called as a witness or questioned at all except as shown by the following excerpt from the reporter's transcript:

"Mr. Levy: Just a moment, if your Honor please, I would like to put my mother on the stand because I want her to testify, it is very important.

"The Court: Well, she has that right I think.

"Q. By Mr. Levy: Mother, would you want to take the stand and say what you wanted to do whether you want to have a guardian or not?

"Carrie F. Levi: I feel I am getting pretty old and I would rather have some help."

It thus appears that appellant was afforded an opportunity to examine the alleged incompetent as a witness and she was granted the privilege of testifying. Under such circumstances it was not a legal requirement that the alleged incompetent should be examined as a witness. In support of his contention that such examination must be had, appellant refers to section 1461 of the Probate Code which provides in part that the alleged incompetent, if able to attend, "must be produced at the hearing, * * *." As an interpretation of the above quoted part of said section, he cites the Matter of Coburn, 1913, 165 Cal. 202, 217, 131 P. 352, 358, which states that such language relative to producing the alleged incompetent at the hearing "seems to contemplate an examination." He also cites in re Guardianship of Waite, 1939, 14 Cal. 2d 727, 729, 97 P.2d 238, which quotes with approval said statement from the Matter of Coburn, supra. The facts in each of said cases were very different from those in the present matter. In the Matter of Coburn, supra, the alleged incompetent, over his objection, was called and examined as a witness and the court, in considering the alleged incompetent's claim on appeal that he should not have been compelled to be a witness against himself, made the statement that such language "seems to contemplate an examination."

In Re Guardianship of Waite, supra, the alleged incompetent requested permission to testify and the court denied the request, stating that the court did not want to hear any lay witnesses.

It therefore appears that these cases do not sustain appellant's contention.

[2] The further claim of appellant that the finding of the court in such a matter must be based upon medical testimony cannot be sustained. There is no such requirement.

The order is affirmed.

In action to quiet title involving dispute as to boundary line between southeast quarter and southwest quarter of certain section, evidence sustained court's finding regarding true location of the quarter section corner stone.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Felix R. Garnsey and others against Albert Poston and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

George A. Malette, of San Diego, for appellants.

Sloane & Steiner, of San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendants have appealed from a judgment in an action to quiet title. They own land in the southwest quarter of a certain section 19. The respondents own land in the southeast quarter of that section. Each party holds title under a United States patent based upon an official survey made by one Sanford in 1884. The location of the southwest and southeast corners of this section, as originally fixed, are known and are not questioned. The only matter in dispute at the trial and here is as to the location of a quarter section cornerstone on the south line of section 19, as the same was placed by Sanford in his original survey. Admittedly, this stone is not now in the position where it was placed by Sanford. The respondents contend and the court found that the true location where this stone was placed by Sanford is at a point approximately midway between the southwest corner and the southeast corner of section 19. The appellants contend, on the other hand, that this stone was placed by Sanford at a point about 600 feet east of the point thus fixed by the court.

The appellants contend that a reference to Cottonwood Creek in Sanford's field notes is a reference to a natural monument which prevails over courses and distances therein set forth, and must be taken as conclusively determining the present controversy. This is based upon Sanford's field notes in which he states, in substance, that he started at the southeast corner of section 19 and proceeded west on the line between section 19 and the section to the south of it; that after going 40 chains, which would be 2640 feet, he set a temporary quarter section cornerstone; that he proceeded to the southwest corner of section 19 and then returned along the true line between section 19 and the section to the south of it; that after coming 40.53 chains to the point where he had set the temporary quarter section corner he "set granite rock 12 x 8 x 7 in mound of stone for 1-4 sec. cor. marked 1-4 on N. face. Impractical to set stone"; that he then went on to the southeast corner of section 19, which was 80.53 chains from the southwest corner of that section. In that last half mile he mentions Cottonwood Creek which he places at 42.07 chains from the southwest corner of section 19, but he also describes Cottonwood Creek as 37 links wide and about 1400 feet deep. While a creek appears upon the ground in that general location the one that is there in no way answers that description, and the one that is there is not in the position he describes considering the distances he names from known corners. The court found that this quarter section cornerstone was originally placed by Sanford at a point approximately in the middle of the south line of section 19, which corresponds exactly with Sanford's field notes except for the reference therein to Cottonwood Creek, a part of which is obviously incorrect.

[1] The appellants contend, however, that the reference to Cottonwood Creek should govern and that the other courses and distances in the field notes should be disregarded, with the result that the quarter section corner would be placed 1.54 chains (101 feet) westerly from Cottonwood Creek, and with the further result that this would throw the southern end of the middle line of the section 600 feet out of place, giving the east half of the section a very much larger acreage than the west half. The appellants cite Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 589, as authority for the proposition that natural monuments must control over courses and distances. This is not always true, especially where the reference to a natural monument is incidental, the same is at an intermediate point, and no clear intention appears to make such calls locative. Mendenhall v. Paris, 84 Cal. 193, 23 P. 1095; Goss v. Golinsky, 12 Cal.App. 71, 106 P. 604, 606. The last-named case involved facts almost identical with those now before us. In that case the court said: "The calls for these natural objects are intermediate and apparently incidental calls, and are not referred to or marked in such manner as to identify them, or show that the original surveyor considered that they were controlling. Mendenhall v. Paris, 84 Cal. [193] 196, 23 P. 1095. It is clear that confusion would result if we attempt to locate the land from those natural objects, and hence resort must be had to the distances given as controlling. Hostetter v. Los Angeles T. R. Co., 108 Cal. 38, 41 P. 330. Since the marks of the government survey are obliterated, and the corner cannot be located by witnesses or by reference to identified monuments, the measurements indicated in the field notes should be followed. Stangair v. Roads, 41 Wash. 583, 84 P. 405. The irregular shape of the two sections, and the departure from the accepted method of surveying the government land involved in the adoption of appellant's contention, should lead to its rejection, in the absence of any reliable evidence that such an arbitrary and unusual proceeding was adopted in the original survey."

In the instant case, however, we have the testimony of one of the two chainmen who assisted Sanford in making this survey on August 13, 1884. He testified that the quarter cornerstone in question was placed at that time at the point which was accepted by the court as the true location of that stone, and that he thereafter saw the stone in that same location on numerous occasions over a period of many years.

It may be further observed that one of the respondents testified that after the dispute as to this boundary arose both parties agreed to employ a surveyor to locate the boundary, the parties to divide the cost, the boundary so found to be accepted by all parties, and the appellants to have the privilege of removing certain improvements from the land if the boundary was not fixed in accordance with their contentions. This was not denied by the appellants and the trial court so found. A surveyor was employed, the expense being divided between the parties, and his finding as to the location of the quarter section corner and of the boundary corresponds with the location of that corner as found by the court.

[2] The evidence sustains the court's finding and the rule contended for by the appellants is not controlling under the circumstances which here appear.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Forfeitures 🔑5

A "common-law forfeiture" or "judicial forfeiture" does not operate or take effect until, by a proper judgment in suit instituted for that purpose, the rights of state or government have been established, but, in case of a "statutory forfeiture" or "legislative forfeiture", the forfeiture takes place on the commission of the offense.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Common-Law Forfeiture", "Judicial Forfeiture", "Legislative Forfeiture", and "Statutory Forfeiture".

2. Constitutional law 🔑303

Neither the Legislature nor the court can dispense with constitutional requirement of notice and hearing necessary for complete forfeiture.

3. Forfeitures 🔑7, 8

The only important difference between a "common-law forfeiture" or a "judicial forfeiture" and a "statutory forfeiture" or "legislative forfeiture" is that, in case of the former, the rights of the state date from the judicial determination, whereas, in the case of the latter, the rights of the state after such judicial determination date back to the time of the offense and cut off even the rights of a bona fide purchaser.

4. Forfeitures 🔑5

Actions for common-law type of forfeiture are in personam for a money judgment against defendant whereas suits for legislative forfeiture are in rem, not against owner or possessor of the property, but against the property itself which is treated as the real offender.

5. Constitutional law 🔑303

In either common-law or legislative forfeitures, judicial proceedings or special statutory equivalent thereof are essential to provide the "due process of law" without which the original owner cannot be deprived of his property.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑35(1)

In the common-law type of forfeitures where action must be brought upon the statute for the forfeiture and penalty is to the state, the action is governed by the statute imposing limitation of one year on an action upon a statute for a forfeiture. Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 2.

7. Limitation of actions 🔑35(1)

Where no action for forfeiture is required to be brought, or where statute prescribes period within which procedural steps must be taken, statute imposing limitation of one year on action on statute for forfeiture to state is inapplicable. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 2.

8. Forfeitures 🔑5

The provision of forfeiture statute for filing of information or bringing of action impliedly includes adoption of general procedure for acquiring jurisdiction in such proceedings. Pen.Code, § 325.

9. Constitutional law 🔑303

The provision of forfeiture statute for filing of information or bringing of action together with provision for issuance of an attachment against property is designed to provide constitutional "due process of law" essential to accomplish and uphold the forfeiture. Pen.Code, § 325.

10. Limitation of actions 🔑35(1)

Where action of state for forfeiture of defendant's money taken from slot machines which had been seized for operation contrary to law was not instituted until almost two years after the slot machines were seized, the action was barred by statute imposing a limitation of one year on action by state for "recovery of a forfeiture", since fact that action was in rem instead of in personam did not so change its character as to make a different statute of limitations applicable. Pen.Code, § 325; Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 2; § 363.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Recovery of a Forfeiture".

11. Limitation of actions 🔑165

The statute of limitations is to be employed as a shield and not as a sword.

12. Limitation of actions 🔑165

Where state's action for forfeiture of defendant's money taken from slot machines which had been seized because they were being operated contrary to law was barred by statute of limitations, defendant was entitled to recover possession of the money. Pen.Code, § 325.

13. Limitation of actions 🔑165

Where action of state for forfeiture of money taken from slot machines which have been seized because they were being operated by defendant contrary to law, and defendant's cross-action to recover the money, were tried on theory that money at time of its seizure belonged to defendant, and where state's action was barred by limitations, defendant's right to money could not be defeated on theory that he relied on illegal enterprise. Pen.Code, § 325; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 11.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County from an order denying a new trial. Ray B. Lyon, Judge. Judgment affirmed; appeal from order dismissed.

Proceeding by the People against Ernest A. Grant for forfeiture of money wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint against the County of San Luis Obispo and others. From a judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, the plaintiff and the cross-defendant appeal.

Affirmed.

Earl Warren, Attorney General, and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Attorney General, for Appellants.

M. R. Van Wormer, of San Luis Obispo, for Respondent.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

In the month of December, 1937, the sheriff of San Luis Obispo County seized certain slot machines which admittedly were being operated by the defendant contrary to the law of this state. The sum of $404.66 in coins was taken from such machines and deposited with the county auditor. Apparently the slot machines were destroyed, but for more than twenty-two months no action seeking forfeiture of the money was commenced. Finally, on November 1, 1939, this action was filed. In the complaint plaintiff set forth the above recited facts relative to the ownership and operation of the slot machines, their seizure and the deposit of the money, and asked for an attachment against, and declaration of forfeiture of, the deposited money pursuant to the provisions of section 325 of the Penal Code (hereinafter quoted). On November 3, 1939, defendant made written demand for the return of the money and thereafter filed a cross-complaint, alleging, among other things, that such money was his property and that it was being wrongfully detained. His answer to the complaint pleaded that plaintiff's action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, read with section 312 of the same code imposes a limitation of one year on "An action upon a statute * * * for a forfeiture or penalty to the people of this State." The case was tried upon the admissions in the pleadings and the stipulated facts. The trial court found that plaintiff's action was barred by the statute pleaded, that the money was owned by defendant and that it had been taken, detained, and deposited as alleged; concluded that cross-defendants' detention of the money became unlawful, and rendered judgment in favor of defendant on his cross-complaint.

On this appeal plaintiff contends (1) that this action is not governed by section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (2) that defendant cannot in any event recover on his cross-complaint, because his money had been put to an unlawful use. Neither contention can be sustained.

In amplification of its first point plaintiff asserts that the forfeiture provided for by section 325 of the Penal Code is a legislative or statutory forfeiture as distinguished from a common-law or judicial forfeiture and that the one-year statute (§ 340, Code Civ.Proc.) applies only to actions for the latter type. Actions of the type involved here, it is argued, are governed either by subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, applying to actions "upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture," or by the four-year limitation declared by section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure for actions not otherwise specifically limited.

[1-5] Certainly the courts do recognize the two types of forfeitures mentioned. It was said in People v. Broad, (1932) 216 Cal. 1, at page 4, 12 P.2d 941, at page 942, that "The distinction that exists between a common-law or judicial forfeiture and a legislative or statutory forfeiture is simply this: A common-law or judicial forfeiture does not operate or take effect until by a proper judgment in a suit instituted for that purpose the rights of the state or government have been established. But in the case of a statutory or legislative forfeiture the forfeiture takes place on the commission of the offense. But, after the commission of the offense resulting in the forfeiture, the title of the state is inchoate or incomplete until such time as there is a judicial determination of the forfeiture. Neither the Legislature nor the courts can dispense with the constitutional requirement of a notice and hearing. 25 Cal. Jur. [sic: Corpus Juris] 1175, § 65 et seq. The only important difference between the two types of forfeiture [italics added] is that in the case of the common-law or judicial forfeiture the rights of the state date from the judicial determination; while in the case of a legislative or statutory forfeiture the rights of the state, after such judicial determination, date back to the time of the offense, and cuts off even the rights of a bona fide purchaser." It should also be noted that there is a further distinction in that actions for the common-law type of forfeiture are in personam for a money judgment against a defendant while suits upon a legislative forfeiture are in rem, not against the owner or possessor of the property, but against the property itself, which is treated as the real offender. In either event, however, the primary object of the proceeding is to obtain judicial declaration of the forfeiture. In the one case (common-law) it results in a money judgment against a defendant, while in the other (legislative) it results in a decree confirming title. In either case, however, judicial proceedings or the special statutory equivalent thereof are essential to provide the due process without which the original owner cannot be deprived of his property.

There is a pure legislative type of forfeiture in which the statute itself not only transfers title of the forfeited property but within itself prescribes the notice to be given the former owner and the procedural steps essential to constitute compliance with the due process clause of the Constitution. An example of such a legislative forfeiture is provided by Act 6288a, Deering's General Laws (1937), page 3004 (Stats.1937, p. 169). This act sets up complete provisions for notice and procedure. No confirmatory action by the state is required but instead provision is made for an annulment suit within a limited period by persons whose lands have been improperly forfeited. Obviously this type of legislative forfeiture is not pertinent to the proceedings before us. Other examples of legislative forfeitures are found in sections 11610 to 11629 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, pp. 767–769, and sections 49 to 52 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Stats.1935, p. 1123; Act 3796, Deering's Gen.Laws (1937), p. 1719, at pp. 1755 to 1758).

[6] An example of the common-law or judicial type of forfeiture is furnished by section 3867 of the Political Code which provides that "Every county treasurer who neglects or refuses to * * * settle and make payment as required [by law] shall forfeit to the state of California one thousand dollars, to be recovered in an action brought by the attorney general * * *." Another example is furnished by section 3870 of the Political Code: "Every auditor who fails or refuses to make and transmit the report required [by law] forfeits to the state of California one thousand dollars, to be recovered in an action brought by the attorney general * * *." Other examples are found in Political Code sections 3322, relating to auctioneers; 3694, relating to county auditors; 3656, dealing with assessors; 3697, concerning persons served with subpoenas; and 4113, relating to county treasurers. Section 1992 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a similar type of forfeiture, as does section 5460 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, p. 615. In all of the common-law type examples mentioned action must be brought upon the statute for the forfeiture. Such actions (in cases where the penalty is to the state) clearly are governed by the limitation period prescribed in subdivision 2 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, applying to "An action upon a statute * * * for a forfeiture or penalty to the people of this State." Plaintiff argues that the word "forfeiture" as used in the common-law type denotes practically the same meaning as "penalty" and asserts that the words "forfeiture or penalty" appearing in the limitation statute (Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 2) are there used in their related or substantially synonymous sense rather than as implying distinctly different and unrelated meanings. They are used, it is contended, in the statute of limitation and in the common-law type of forfeiture statute in the sense of importing a requirement to pay the sum mentioned or as denoting the mulct, itself, and are not applicable to an action to confirm a legislative forfeiture. However, as is apparent from the examples thereof hereinabove cited, legislative forfeitures differ in the proceedings required and the material question before us is whether the action contemplated by section 325 of the Penal Code is an action upon a statute for a forfeiture as that language is used in subdivision 2 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[7-10] Where no action for a forfeiture is required to be brought, or where the statute itself prescribes the periods within which the procedural steps must be taken, certainly said section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure would have no application, but let us now examine the provisions of section 325 of the Penal Code to ascertain exactly what procedure it contemplates. Its language is: "All moneys and property offered for sale or distribution in violation of any of the provisions of this chapter [chap. IX, tit. IX, pt. I] are forfeited to the state, and may be recovered by information filed, or by an* action brought by the attorney-general, or by any district attorney, in the name of the state. Upon the filing of the information or complaint, the clerk of the court, or if the suit be in a justice's court, the justice, must issue an attachment against the property mentioned in the complaint or information, which attachment has the same force and effect against such property, and is issued in the same manner as attachments issued from the district courts in civil cases."

Whether we regard that section as creating a legislative or a common-law type of forfeiture it is apparent at once that the declaration "All moneys * * * offered for * * * distribution in violation of any of the provisions of this chapter are forfeited to the state" is qualified by the ensuing clause "and may be recovered by information filed, or by an action brought by the attorney-general, or by any district attorney, in the name of the state." The same text cited by the Supreme Court in the Broad case, supra, states (25 C.J. 1176): "If the statute which provides for the forfeiture authorizes the proper officer to seize the thing named, or if a right to sue for the violation of the statute is given to anyone, title does not vest ipso facto by the prohibited act being done, but relates only to the time of seizure or to adjudging of the forfeiture in a suit begun. * * *" Supporting this statement, see New York Fire Dept. v. Kip, (1833) 10 Wend., N.Y., 266. The provision for filing of the information or bringing of the action, which impliedly includes adoption of the general procedure for acquiring jurisdiction in such proceedings (Niccoli v. McClelland, (1937) 21 Cal.App.2d Supp. 759, 763, 65 P.2d 853), together with the provision for issuance of an attachment against the property, is designed to provide the constitutional due process essential to accomplish and uphold the forfeiture. The jurisdictional and procedural step of bringing an action, by filing either an information or a complaint, upon which the attachment may issue and other appropriate proceedings be based, obviously is essential; the statute contains no other provision for notice to the defendant and without due process requirement the statute itself would be void. In the absence of compliance with such process the defendant cannot be deprived of his property. In other words, regardless of whether the Legislature in section 325 may (or may not) have created a legislative type of forfeiture so far as concerns having the forfeited title relate back to the date of the unlawful act upon judicial ascertainment of the facts, it has incorporated into the statute not merely special statutory proceedings but the requirement of resort to an action of apparently a type contemplated by section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mere fact that an action is in rem instead of in personam does not so change its character as to make a different statute of limitations applicable.

*The current edition of Deering's Code uses the word "any"; the original official code shows the word "an".

The state here has chosen to proceed by filing a complaint rather than an information. Whether that action be regarded as an ordinary civil action or as a special proceeding of a civil nature, its object obviously is the same: it seeks recovery of a forfeiture. Precisely, it seeks the "recovery" mentioned in section 325 of the Penal Code, by the procedure therein alluded to, of the forfeiture therein declared. Section 363 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "The word 'action' as used in this title is to be construed, whenever it is necessary so to do, as including a special proceeding of a civil nature." A holding that section 325 of the Penal Code does not require the bringing of an action, or of a special proceeding of a civil nature, for a forfeiture, would be sheer fiat. For the commencement of such an action or proceeding the Legislature has prescribed a limitation of one year. We cannot indulge in judicial legislation to prescribe a longer period; we must conclude that the trial court was correct in holding that plaintiff's action was barred.

Plaintiff states its second point as follows: "Assuming the applicable statutory limitation prevents an affirmative judgment for the state, may the court award the operator and owner of the machines and coins judgment for the return of the coins or their value?" (Italics added.) On the record as presented we find no tenable theory for answering that query other than in the affirmative.

[11, 12] Plaintiff asserts the well-known doctrine that "The Statute of Limitations is to be employed as a shield, and not as a sword; as a means of defense, and not as a weapon of attack." (Grant v. Burr, (1880) 54 Cal. 298, 300.) It argues further that by virtue of the statute and seizure of the money it succeeded to title to the money; that whether or not it brought any action to perfect its title is immaterial so far as defendant's right to recover is concerned; that its right to hold the money continues unabated as does the right of a mortgagee in possession, despite the barring by limitation of the right to foreclose his mortgage. As to the latter situation it is the law that "It can make no difference, in so far as the right of the creditor to continue to hold the security is concerned, that the obligation on account of which he holds it is barred by the statute of limitations." (Bridge v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., (1914) 167 Cal. 774, 778, 141 P. 375, 377.) Plaintiff further argues that defendant should have no affirmative judgment upon his cross-complaint because thereby he is given recovery "of the means and the fruit of his unlawful operation of the slot machines in violation of the Penal Code."

But the difficulty with all of these contentions is that they are based on unsound premises. Defendant in his cross-complaint is not using the statute of limitations as a sword or otherwise. When the trial court was ready to determine the cross-complaint the statute had already been used as a shield; the court had found that plaintiff's action for a forfeiture was barred. In the action it was plaintiff, not defendant, who sought to "recover" title to the money. Defendant's title, except as it was attacked on the theory of forfeiture, was not questioned at the trial; it is assumed here on appeal in plaintiff's formal statement of the question involved. Although neither the complaint itself nor the stipulation of facts specifically mentions the ownership of the money, as distinguished from the slot machines in which it was found, the case was tried on the theory that its ownership was admitted. In his opening statement the district attorney said: "We have set forth in our complaint the fact that there is on deposit . . . the sum of $404.66; that this money was confiscated from slot machines . . . and that the money and machines were then and there owned by the defendant, Grant. The answer admits these allegations, so, as far as we are concerned, that is purely a legal argument." (Italics added.) Hence we have ownership in the defendant conceded except as he may have lost it by operation of the statute. But the statute cannot operate without due process of law and the only process provided is the bringing of the action with its ancillary (and perhaps jurisdictional) remedy of attachment. There was no taking of possession by plaintiff or its agents under a search warrant or by virtue of any authorization other than that provided by the statute. To hold that the statute divested defendant of his title or right of possession without compliance by plaintiff with the constitutional requirements of due process would be to give such statute unconstitutional power and effect. Since the plaintiff has not "recovered" the money, as that term is used in the statute (Pen.Code, § 325), and has lost all right to such recovery, the title and right to possession of such money remain in defendant free of any lien to the state.

The case is not similar to that where a mortgagee or pledgee has possession of property to secure a debt. The plaintiff itself has urged that this is a legislative or statutory forfeiture which affects the property directly rather than constituting any claim of personal debt against the defendant. There is no claim against the defendant in personam; he owes no money debt to the state. Either the precise property was itself forfeited or the state has no remedy in the premises against either the property or the defendant. Since the state has lost all right to forfeiture of the property it has no claim whatsoever against it and it never had a claim against the defendant personally. There is no debt for him to pay as a condition to becoming entitled to his money.

[13] The last phase of plaintiff's contention is likewise untenable. Defendant does not rely on any gambling enterprise to establish his ownership or right of possession. While it would seem an illogical inference to us to deduce that defendant had himself placed the coins in the slot machines, since obviously their very purpose is to procure coins from other persons, and although we recognize that if the money had been placed in the machines by patrons thereof defendant apparently would have to rely on the illegal operation of such machines as a basis for acquiring title to the money, still we are precluded by the record from any inquiry along that line. In view of the opening statement of the district attorney, and the other circumstances shown, it is apparent that the entire trial proceeded on the understanding that the money at the time of its seizure belonged to defendant except as the state is contended to have acquired title by the alleged forfeiture. Furthermore, the presumption declared by subdivision 11 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure "That things which a person possesses are owned by him," supports the finding of the trial court as to defendant's ownership of the money, independently of the statement of the district attorney. The defendant does not rely in this case upon the illegal enterprise. It is only the plaintiff which has sought to rely on that activity. The situation of the cross-defendants then certainly is no better than that of the bank which is spoken of in Kyne v. Kyne, (1940) 16 Cal.2d 436, 440, 106 P.2d 620, 622. The Supreme Court there said "* * * a bank will not be permitted to invoke the illegality of a contract between two individuals and thereby retain money which was the fruit of the illegal transaction and which was deposited by one of them for the account of the other."

The mere fact that money at some time subsequent to its mintage has been in a slot machine or a poker game does not render it permanently contraband so that the state may seize it wherever found. The plaintiff having by its own neglect lost its right to have this money declared forfeited because of the particular usage shown, has no more right to it than to any other money which at some time has been so used. We view with disfavor the implication in the argument of plaintiff on this point to the effect that seizures of the type involved here should be upheld even in cases where the purpose of the state is to ignore the constitutional provisions for due process of law but nevertheless continue to hold the seized money in order to compel its claimant to resort to the courts and to produce legal proof of his title or right of possession as a condition to recovery. It would be unworthy of our democratic form of government for the state or a governmental agency or officer to seek to evade the constitutional process for the purpose of placing a citizen at a tactical disadvantage in the defense of his property rights, and the anomaly would be the more striking where the state sought to justify its act upon the ground that the citizen was a gambler.

[14] Inasmuch as an order denying a new trial in a civil action is not appealable, plaintiff's purported appeal therefrom is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rich & Weis and F. E. Carlin, all of Marysville, for petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., H. H. Linney, Asst. Atty. Gen., A. A. Kragen, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Heenan, Dist. Atty., and A. S. Powell, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Marysville, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a petition for a writ of mandamus to require the respondent to compute the amount of delinquent assessment taxes necessary to redeem real property belonging to Sutter-Yuba Investment Company, and upon payment thereof to issue to it the certificate of redemption as provided by section 4105 of the Revenue and Taxation Code of California, St.1939, p. 1346, formerly section 3817 of the Political Code. The particular issue to be determined is whether the respondent may compel the owner of the real property to pay county taxes which were levied against the land in 1938, 1939 and 1940, while it was owned by Reclamation District No. 784, an agency of the State of California, as a prerequisite to the right of redemption.

The petition alleges that Sutter-Yuba Investment Company is a corporation which owns lot 3, section or block 12, of Farm Land Colony No. 1, in Reclamation District No. 784, in Yuba County, California, according to the map thereof on file in the recorder's office of that county. It further asserts that Reclamation District No. 784 was organized pursuant to law prior to January 1, 1921; that on said last-mentioned date the district was authorized to, and it did issue bonds in the aggregate sum of $834,000, secured by the lands within the district, as provided by section 3480 of the Political Code; that assessments were subsequently levied against said lands in the manner required by law, for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on said bonds as they matured; that the assessment against said lot No. 3 was not paid within the time allowed by law, and it became delinquent; that the county treasurer of Yuba County thereafter published notice of said delinquency and of the time and place of sale of said lot to satisfy the lien as required by section 3466 of the Political Code; that at said time and place of sale no other offer of purchase was made, and the county treasurer, as trustee for said district, then bid in the land for the full amount of the delinquent installment of taxes plus the interest and penalties provided for by law, and, on June 15, 1932, he issued and recorded the certificate of sale thereof; that after the expiration of the time allowed by law, no redemption of the land having been made, the county treasurer, on February 3, 1936, executed and recorded a deed thereof to himself "as Trustee" for said reclamation district, in accordance with said statute; that thereafter, by authorization of the board of directors of the reclamation district, the county treasurer, as trustee thereof, sold said lot at public auction, and conveyed the title to this petitioner, Sutter-Yuba Investment Company, on October 15, 1940.

It is further alleged that subsequent to the execution of the deed to lot No. 3, to the county treasurer of Yuba County, as trustee of the reclamation district, on February 3, 1938, and while said lot was in fact owned by said district, the county assessor of Yuba County illegally assessed said lot and levied county taxes against it for the years 1938, 1939 and 1940, no part of which was paid; that on March 18, 1942, on petition of the trustee of the reclamation district, and upon satisfactory proof of the invalidity of the said assessments, the board of supervisors of Yuba County, by resolution duly adopted, cancelled said levies of county taxes, as authorized by section 4986 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, St.1941, p. 2641, on the theory that the assessments against the reclamation district, as an agency of the State of California, were void under article XIII, section 1, of the Constitution of California.

The Sutter-Yuba Investment Company thereupon demanded of this respondent, as auditor of Yuba County, a statement of the amount of unpaid legal assessments against said land, necessary to procure redemption from the second installment of taxes for 1937, which was acknowledged to be a valid lien on said lot, and then tendered the sum of $20.26 in full payment thereof, claiming that the subsequent assessments of county taxes for 1938, 1939 and 1940 were illegally levied, and that they were cancelled by the board of supervisors. That tender was refused.

The petition for a writ of mandamus prays that the auditor of Yuba County be required to estimate, as required by law the amount of delinquent taxes necessary to redeem said land, which are a valid lien thereon, and that upon payment thereof the respondent be required to issue and deliver to the petitioner a certificate of redemption of said land free and clear of said invalid assessments of county taxes for the years 1938, 1939 and 1940.

The respondent filed a demurrer to said petition on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ.

We are of the opinion the petition states a cause of action justifying the issuance of the writ of mandamus.

[1] Real property which has been sold for delinquent assessments may be redeemed by the original owner or by any successor or party in interest. (§ 4101, Rev. & Tax. Code, St.1941, p. 1430, formerly § 3780, Pol. Code.) The county treasurer of Yuba County was authorized by section 3466 of the Political Code to, and he did, take title to the lot in question, as trustee for the reclamation district, by deed dated February 3, 1936. That deed conveyed title to the treasurer, as trustee for the reclamation district, as provided by the seventh paragraph of the last-mentioned section, "free of all liens and encumbrances except any prior or subsequent district assessment." At the time of that conveyance to the treasurer as trustee, there was but one delinquent district assessment. No subsequent district assessment was levied against the property. No county taxes had then been assessed against the property. Indeed none could legally be assessed against the land for it was then the property of a reclamation district, which is an agency of the State of California. Pursuant to the authorization of the board of directors of Reclamation District No. 784, and in accordance with said section 3466, the treasurer, as trustee, sold and conveyed the lot to this petitioner, Sutter-Yuba Investment Company, by deed dated October 15, 1940. The petitioner took title to that property "free and clear of all liens and encumbrances except any prior or subsequent district assessment." The last paragraph of the last-mentioned section provides in that regard: "Any parcel of land bid in and purchased by a county treasurer as aforesaid, as trustee of the district, may be sold and conveyed by him or his successors in office, at any time after the expiration of said redemption period at public or private sale, and with or without notice, to any person paying him the amount for which said parcel was bid in by said county treasurer at delinquent sale, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum, compounded yearly from the date of said delinquent sale together with any call that has been made upon any prior or subsequent assessment; and the deed executed by the county treasurer in pursuance of such sale shall convey said property free of all liens and encumbrances except any prior or subsequent district assessment."

After the treasurer acquired title to the property, as trustee for the reclamation district, in February, 1936, and before the lot was sold and conveyed to the petitioner, Sutter-Yuba Investment Company, in October, 1940, the county assessor of Yuba County illegally assessed the lot for county taxes, for the years 1938, 1939 and 1940.

[2] The board of supervisors, upon satisfactory proof that the county taxes which were levied against said lot for the years 1938, 1939 and 1940, was authorized to, and it did cancel those assessments as illegal and void. These assessments were deemed to be void for the reason that the real property was then owned by Reclamation District No. 784, which was an agency of the State of California, and therefore exempt from such taxes, under the provisions of article XIII, section 1, of the Constitution. § 4986, Rev. & Tax.Code, formerly § 3804a, Political Code. Reclamation districts are agencies of the state. Hensley v. Reclamation Dist. No. 556, 121 Cal. 96, 53 P. 401; Housing Authority of County of Los Angeles v. Dockweiler, 14 Cal.2d 437, 453, 94 P.2d 794; Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. County of Sacramento, 134 Cal. 477, 66 P. 668; River Farms Co. v. Gibson, 4 Cal.App.2d 731, 744, 42 P.2d 95; 24 Cal.Jur. 102, § 85. It has been held that the property acquired by a reclamation district, as an agency of the state, is state-owned property and therefore exempt from taxation. In the case of Reclamation District No. 551 v. County of Sacramento, supra, 134 Cal. at page 479, 66 P. at page 669, it was said in that regard: "The whole scheme of reclamation originates with the state, and is carried to a conclusion by agents of the state—the district, as we have already seen, being a public agency—in furtherance of public policy. The property mentioned in section 3471 [of the Political Code] is public property acquired by the agents of the state for state purposes, and, we think, is exempt from taxation as such."

In the preceding case from which we have last quoted, the county of Sacramento levied and collected county taxes, which were paid under protest, upon a pumping plant and an irrigation system which were constructed upon land owned by the district. Suit was brought by the reclamation district to recover the taxes paid under protest, and to declare the county assessment void. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and the defendant declined to answer. Judgment was rendered accordingly. From that judgment the county appealed. This court held that the district was exempt from county taxes, and affirmed the judgment, saying: "To allow the county to assess the works (i. e., the canals, ditches, drains, embankments, pumping plants, etc.) for general taxation purposes might lead to the sale of the works of reclamation, and the ultimate destruction or abandonment of an important undertaking of the state."

That language is peculiarly pertinent to the present case in which the assessor of Yuba County levied county taxes upon real property belonging to the reclamation district. If the improvements upon reclamation land are exempt from county taxes, certainly the land belonging to the district would also be exempt under the same provisions of law.

[3] It has been definitely determined by the Supreme Court that all land and property belonging to the United States, or to the State of California or any subdivision thereof, is absolutely exempt from taxation regardless of whether it is held in a proprietary sense, or is used in a governmental capacity. Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District v. Klukkert, 13 Cal.2d 191, 88 P.2d 685; Glenn-Colusa Irr.Dist. v. Ohrt, 31 Cal. App.2d 619, 624, 88 P.2d 763; Laguna Beach County Water Dist. v. County of Orange, 30 Cal.App.2d 740, 87 P.2d 46; 129 A.L.R. 481 note; art. XIII, § 1, Const. of Cal. In the Klukkert case, supra [13 Cal.2d 191, 88 P.2d 689], which is the latest decision of the Supreme Court on that subject, the facts are nearly identical with those of the present case. In that case, lands within the district were sold to the district for delinquent assessments. Subsequent to that sale the county assessor of the county in which the land was situated levied an assessment against the land for county taxes. Suit was commenced by the district to prohibit the county from collecting the taxes, or for cancellation thereof, as an illegal assessment. The trial court decided that the county taxes imposed a valid lien against the land. On appeal, that judgment was reversed. The Supreme Court held that the levy of county taxes was illegal and void under article XIII, section 1, of the Constitution, regardless of whether the land was held by the irrigation district in its governmental capacity or in a proprietary sense. Summing up its conclusions in the last paragraph of the opinion in that regard the court says: "Under the constitutional provision which makes ownership the sole test of exemption, the use to which the property is put would be immaterial." (Italics added.)

In the case of Conley v. Hawley, 2 Cal.2d 23, 38 P.2d 408, upon which the respondent in this case relies, the contrary conclusion of the court is based on the case of La Mesa Lemon Grove and Spring Valley Irr. Dist. v. Hornbeck, 216 Cal. 730, 17 P.2d 143. But the latter Klukkert case specifically distinguishes that case from the La Mesa case in the following language: "In the light of the holding of this court in the recently decided cases, to which reference hereinbefore has been had, to-wit [citing several late cases] the decision that was rendered in the La Mesa case loses its importance as far as its applicability herein is concerned. Furthermore, in the La Mesa case, the court specifically left open the settlement of the question here presented, holding it unnecessary to re-examine the decisions in the cases entitled [citing several other cases] and therein declared that none of those cases dealt with the question there under consideration."

Supplementing the annotations found in 101 A.L.R. at page 787 note, to the effect that "where the exemption of property owned by the state or subordinate municipal bodies is express and unqualified, it cannot be taxed, irrespective of the use to which it is put," the later annotation, which is found in 129 A.L.R. at page 481, reaffirms that declaration, and supports it by citing the Klukkert case, supra, decided by the California court in 1939, together with several cases in other jurisdictions.

In the Ohrt case, supra, which was also decided in 1939, this court, in determining what property, belonging to the state or an agency thereof, is exempt from taxation under article XIII, section 1, of the Constitution, distinguishes between "property used exclusively" for public schools and property "belonging to the United States, the State of California," or any subdivision or agency thereof, and gives the reason for that distinction in almost the exact language used in the Klukkert case. In the Ohrt case [31 Cal.App.2d 619, 88 P.2d 766], we conclude by saying: "If the intention were to exempt from taxation only such property of the United States or the state of California as is actually used exclusively for the operation of those political entities, it would have been very easy to have thus expressed it. The intention appears to have been clearly otherwise expressed."

[4, 5] We therefore conclude that the lot which is involved in this proceeding was absolutely exempt from county taxes which were levied for the years 1938, 1939 and 1940, while that land was owned by the reclamation district, which is an agency of the State of California. Those assessments were illegal and void. The successor in interest, Sutter-Yuba Investment Company, which acquired title after those assessments were levied against the land, is therefore entitled to redeem the property from the previous valid assessment lien of the reclamation district, free and clear of the invalid county taxes for 1938, 1939 and 1940.

The petition states a good cause of action. The demurrer is overruled and the respondent is granted twenty days in which to answer.

The language of the statutory provision respecting distribution of a corporation's assets to its shareholders upon dissolution implies that all common stockholders are to be treated alike and in proportion to their holdings of stock. Civ.Code, § 401a.

5. Corporations 🔑629

While the statute respecting distribution of a corporation's assets to its shareholders upon dissolution permits the distribution of assets other than money where this can be done fairly and ratably and in conformity with the articles, nothing therein indicates an intention to permit a distribution in kind to some of the common stockholders while compelling others to turn in their stock for its present cash value, and the subsequent statute respecting distribution of securities or assets in kind does not authorize such procedure. Civ.Code, §§ 401a, 401c.

The exception provided in statute respecting distribution of securities or assets in kind to shareholders upon dissolution of a corporation does not apply to common stockholders but provides, even where assets other than money have been distributed to all shareholders alike, for a liquidation preference. Civ.Code, § 401c.

A plan of distribution, upon the voluntary dissolution of a public utility corporation, whereby corporation's minority common stockholders would be paid the value of their stock and remaining assets of corporation as a going business would be distributed to its majority common stockholder, could not be carried out through proceedings under statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations. Civ.Code, § 403.

8. Corporations 🔑610(1)

While the statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations confers upon the court broad powers in passing upon and adjudging controversies in connection with winding up the affairs of a corporation the statute is procedural in nature and adds nothing to substantive rights which stockholders already have through other statutes. Civ.Code, § 403.

9. Corporations 🔑610(1), 617(1), 629

A corporation in the process of voluntary dissolution does not have the right to adopt and carry out a plan of distribution whereby its plants and business properties are distributed to a majority stockholder and its minority common stockholders are compelled to take their share of value of distributable assets, such value to be ascertained in a proceeding under statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations. Civ. Code, § 403.

10. Corporations 🔑610(1)

Where a public utility corporation engaged in process of voluntary dissolution had complied with provisions of statutes relating to dissolution, and proceedings for dissolution had commenced, and corporation filed a petition in superior court under statute respecting such court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations for a determination of rights of minority common stockholders with respect to corporation's assets, it was error to sustain demurrers to petition and dismiss the proceeding without hearing or determining matters authorized to be raised in such proceeding. Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

11. Corporations 🔑610(1)

Where a petition was filed in superior court as authorized by statute by a public utility corporation engaged in process of voluntary dissolution for a determination of rights of minority common stockholders with respect to corporation's assets, the court then had power to order and adjudge as to any matters in and for the winding up of affairs of corporation, including a determination of rights of shareholders to corporation's assets. Civ.Code, § 403.

12. Corporations 🔑610(1)

Under statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations, an absolute right to petition for supervision and direction with respect to rights of shareholders in corporation's assets is impliedly given, and the court not only has power to order and adjudge as to all matters thus presented but is bound to do so. Civ.Code, § 403.

13. Corporations 🔑610(1)

The right to invoke the supervision and settlement of disputed matters which is contemplated by provisions of statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations depends upon the conditions set forth in statute for the filing of a petition, and not upon whether such a petitioner is correct in all his contentions with respect to questions and issues which are to be presented for determination. Civ.Code, § 403.

14. Corporations 🔑610(1)

The mere fact that part of the plan proposed for distribution of a public utility corporation's assets upon voluntary dissolution was unauthorized did not mean that corporation could not dissolve or that its legally commenced dissolution must be abandoned. Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

The purpose of a proceeding under statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations is to settle disputes, correct errors, and obtain such orders as may be necessary to carry out and accomplish the end in view, and not merely to arbitrarily pass upon what has already been done, and the proceeding provided for by the statute is in some respects not unlike the one for declaratory relief, authorized by the Code of Civil Procedure. Civ.Code, § 403; Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

16. Action 🔑6

The statute authorizing proceedings for declaratory relief should be liberally construed to the end that intent of the statute may be carried out. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

17. Action 🔑6

Where a pleading discloses facts required by statute authorizing proceedings for declaratory relief, such as an interest in a particular matter and the existence of an actual controversy relating thereto, it is unnecessary to allege matters which will justify the precise relief which may ultimately be given by the court. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

18. Action 🔑6

Where the basic facts required by statute authorizing proceedings for declaratory relief are alleged, demurrers should not be sustained, and the court should proceed to hear and determine the matters relating to which a controversy exists. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

19. Corporations 🔑610(1)

In proceedings under statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations by a public utility corporation for a determination of rights of its minority common stockholders with respect to corporation's assets, a petition, alleging facts showing that corporation had adopted a plan of distribution whereby its minority common stockholders would be paid the value of their stock and remaining assets of corporation as a going business would be distributed to its majority common stockholder, was sufficient to require a hearing. Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

A public utility corporation and its majority stockholder had a right to proceed by way of voluntary dissolution of corporation rather than by way of merger or consolidation, and, while they were bound by statutory requirements therefor, they were also entitled to invoke provisions of statute respecting superior court's supervision over the voluntary winding up of corporations, to secure both a determination of a controversy which had arisen respecting rights of corporation's minority common stockholders and an adjudication of matters necessary to complete the winding up of corporation's affairs. Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

The application of rule respecting powers of equity to protect the rights of third parties in proceedings for a determination of rights of a corporation's minority common stockholders upon voluntary dissolution of corporation was for trial court's consideration, after the full facts had been developed, and was not a matter to be determined on appeal from a judgment of dismissal. Civ. Code, § 403.

22. Judgment ⚷231

In proceedings by a public utility corporation for a determination of rights of its minority common stockholders with respect to corporation's assets upon voluntary dissolution, a provision, in a judgment of dismissal purporting to decree that attempted distribution of corporation's assets to its common stockholders by a distribution to corporation's majority stockholder of all of its assets other than cash was void as to minority stockholders, was "surplusage". Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

23. Corporations ⚷610(1)

A superior court may construe an order of the railroad commission authorizing a transfer of assets by a corporation in voluntary dissolution and may hold that such order has not been complied with.

24. Corporations ⚷610(1)

That a plan of distribution upon the voluntary dissolution of a public utility corporation was unauthorized did not warrant conclusion that corporation was without a remedy, since it might go back to the point of divergence and then follow procedure leading to a final dissolution as outlined in statutes or obtain some form of equitable relief. Civ.Code, §§ 369, 400 et seq., 400a, 401, 401a, 401c, 403.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered in a proceeding brought under section 403 of the Civil Code.

We will refer to the San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation as San Joaquin and to Pacific Gas and Electric Company as Pacific. For many years prior to the time in question San Joaquin was a public utility supplying electricity, gas and water to consumers in Fresno and other counties. In August, 1938, it began proceedings to voluntarily dissolve and wind up its affairs as provided for in sections 400 et seq. of the Civil Code. About 89 per cent of its outstanding stock was then owned and held by Pacific.

On August 10, 1938, Pacific executed a written consent to the voluntary dissolution and winding up of the affairs of San Joaquin. On August 11, 1938, San Joaquin's board of directors adopted a resolution electing to proceed to wind up its affairs and effect its voluntary dissolution, and authorizing the taking of steps to that end. A certificate was filed with the secretary of state and recorded in Fresno County in accordance with section 400 of the Civil Code, and a notice to creditors and stockholders was mailed as provided for in section 400a of that code.

On August 11, 1938, San Joaquin and Pacific executed a contract reciting that San Joaquin has elected to wind up its affairs and voluntarily dissolve; that San Joaquin has outstanding 129,569 shares of common stock and 206,718 shares of preferred stock, all of which except 702 shares of common stock and 34,849 shares of preferred stock are owned by Pacific; that San Joaquin is indebted to Pacific for money advanced in a sum exceeding $32,700,000 and has outstanding mortgage bonds in the sum of $9,181,500; and that it is the desire of both parties to expedite the winding up and liquidation of San Joaquin and the distribution of its assets. This contract then provided, in brief, as follows: 1. Pacific will, subject to the approval of the Railroad Commission, submit to the holders of San Joaquin's preferred stock (other than Pacific) a fair offer to exchange its own preferred stock for their San Joaquin stock. 2. Pacific will loan to San Joaquin all money necessary to enable it to comply with this agreement. 3. San Joaquin will pay in full the par value and accrued dividends to minority preferred stockholders who do not accept Pacific's offer for an exchange of preferred stocks. 5. San Joaquin will purchase "at their fair value and retire" all shares of its common stock held by its stockholders (other than Pacific) or "will cause the fair value of such minority common stockholders' proportional share of its net distributable assets to be ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the general corporation law" of this state and will pay to such minority common stockholders "the full amount of money to which they shall be entitled." The next four paragraphs provide that San Joaquin, after paying its current debts and the other payments required by the contract, will pay and assign to Pacific on account of its debt to the latter all remaining money, all securities and all current assets, and Pacific will release San Joaquin's remaining indebtedness to it and will assume and agree to pay the funded debt and all other debts and liabilities of San Joaquin. Paragraph 10 then provides that San Joaquin "will distribute to Pacific Company, as its sole remaining stockholder, after payment of all amounts payable to its minority preferred stockholders and minority common stockholders, all of its plants, properties and other assets." The remaining paragraphs of the contract provide that both corporations shall apply to the Railroad Commission and to the Federal Power Commission for the necessary orders authorizing San Joaquin "to distribute and transfer to Pacific Company its plants, properties and other assets, in conformity with the provisions of this agreement."

On October 13, 1938, the Railroad Commission entered and filed an opinion setting forth a summary of the contract of August 11, 1938, including the provision that San Joaquin's plants, properties and other assets were to be distributed to Pacific "as its sole remaining stockholder," followed by an order permitting San Joaquin to distribute and transfer to Pacific its plants, properties and other assets "in conformity with the provisions of the agreement between said companies dated August 11, 1938." By December 27, 1938, Pacific had acquired all of San Joaquin's outstanding preferred stock except 799 shares, and San Joaquin had retired these 799 shares by paying the holders the par value thereof with accrued dividends. Also, San Joaquin had offered to purchase for retirement and cancellation all shares of its common stock at $120 per share and had thus purchased and retired 349 shares of such stock.

On December 27, 1938, San Joaquin adopted a plan for the disposition of its current assets and for the distribution among its stockholders of its plants, properties and other assets. So far as material here, this plan provided that San Joaquin would: 1. Set aside $250,000 for the purpose of paying its common stockholders (other than Pacific) "the fair value of their proportional shares" of its net distributable assets; 2. Assign all current assets, pay all other money and distribute all other assets to Pacific; and 3, institute a proceeding in the Superior Court of Fresno County for the purpose of obtaining a determination of the rights of all common stockholders (other than Pacific) in and to San Joaquin's assets in conformity with the provisions of section 403 of the Civil Code, prosecute such proceeding to its conclusion, and pay these minority stockholders the amount which should be awarded to them or, as an alternative, pay said minority common stockholders $120 a share for the stock held by them.

On December 31, 1938, San Joaquin deposited $250,000 in a special account, assigned and paid to Pacific all its current assets, securities and other money, and "distributed" and conveyed to Pacific all of its plants, properties and other assets, although the transfer of certain licenses and permits was not fully completed until a later date when the approval of the Federal Power Commission had been obtained.

This proceeding followed, the order to show cause being issued on January 10, 1939. The second amended and supplemental petition sets forth the above facts and further alleges that the contract of August 11, 1938, is equitable, just and reasonable; that the plan of distribution adopted on December 27, 1938, is in substantial conformity with that contract and is equitable, just and reasonable; that San Joaquin has offered and now offers to purchase any and all stock held by its minority stockholders at $120 per share; that the four named respondents have rejected San Joaquin's offer to purchase and retire their stock; and that these four persons have at all times since December 27, 1938, controverted the validity, equity and fairness of the plan of distribution adopted, the right of the San Joaquin to dispose of and distribute its assets according to this plan, and its right to wind up its affairs and voluntarily dissolve without their consent. The prayer is that the court will appoint a referee to take evidence and ascertain and report the facts found with respect to any issues of fact which may arise in the proceeding, that the court will pass upon and determine the right of the minority stockholders to the assets of San Joaquin, will pass upon and determine any and all other matters concerning the dissolution and winding up of the affairs of San Joaquin, and will make and enter such judgment as shall be in accordance with law and equity.

Pacific filed an approval and ratification of all matters recited in the petition, with the request that the court determine all matters in controversy between San Joaquin and its stockholders and thereupon make and enter such judgment as should be just and equitable. The individual respondents filed demurrers raising the points that the petition stated no cause of action or facts warranting any relief, and stated no justiciable controversy; that the court was without jurisdiction under Civil Code section 403, or otherwise, to grant any relief here sought; that there was a want of a necessary party (Pacific); that there were no facts sufficient to show the existence of any controversy; that neither San Joaquin nor Pacific had the capacity to sue or bring this proceeding; that several causes of action were improperly joined; and that this proceeding constitutes an attempt to condemn and take private property for private use in violation of the state and federal constitutions. The court sustained the demurrers, with twenty days in which to amend. No such amendment being filed, the court entered a judgment decreeing that this petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or ground for any relief against any of the respondents; that Pacific is a trustee for the minority stockholders of San Joaquin and neither it nor San Joaquin on any attempted dissolution of San Joaquin is entitled to distribute assets of San Joaquin in kind to Pacific as a common stockholder of San Joaquin and to require the other common stockholders to take cash in satisfaction of their rights, or to make any distribution in kind except ratably to all of the common stockholders of San Joaquin; that the plan adopted by San Joaquin for the distribution of its assets to its common stockholders is null and void as to the individual respondents; that the attempted distribution by San Joaquin to Pacific of all of its assets other than certain cash is null and void as to the individual respondents; that the contract of August 11, 1938, is null and void as to the individual respondents; that upon the facts alleged Pacific has no right to any preferential treatment and the individual respondents are each entitled to his proportionate share of any distributable assets, and to participate proportionately in the distribution of its assets in like manner as is Pacific; that neither San Joaquin nor Pacific take anything by reason of the petition filed; and that the respondents recover their costs. From this judgment both San Joaquin and Pacific have appealed, and the appeals have been presented together. After the entry of judgment respondents Simonson and Harper sold their stock to San Joaquin and have disclaimed any further interest in the proceeding. It now appears that all of San Joaquin's outstanding stock, other than that owned by Pacific, has been retired or disposed of with the exception of 253 shares of common stock, 250 shares of which are owned by respondents Gherini and Nicolai.

[1] Appellants' main contention is that a corporation in the process of voluntarily dissolving and winding up its affairs under sections 400 et seq. of the Civil Code may adopt and execute a plan of distribution under which its plants and business properties shall be distributed to a majority stockholder and the remaining shareholders shall be paid in cash their proportion of the fair value of the net assets, and that such fair value, if not agreed upon by the parties, may be judicially determined in a proceeding under section 403 of that code. It may be here observed that the Articles of Incorporation of San Joaquin provide that in the event of any dissolution the preferred stockholders are to be paid in full and that "the remaining assets and funds shall be divided and paid to the holders of the common stock according to their respective shares." Simply stated, the question here is whether upon a voluntary dissolution of this corporation this provision of the Articles may be disregarded and the main assets constituting the going business may be distributed in kind to the majority common stockholder while compelling the minority common stockholders to take the cash value of their proportionate share of the total assets. The weight of authority appears to be that this may not be done in the absence of statutes permitting such a form of distribution. Ervin v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., C.C., 20 F. 577; Id., C.C., 27 F. 625, 23 Blatchf. 517; Forrester v. Boston & M., etc., Co., 21 Mont. 544, 55 P. 229, 353; Theis v. Spokane Falls Gas Light Co., 34 Wash. 23, 74 P. 1004; Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 8 Cir., 144 F. 765, 75 C.C.A. 631; William B. Riker & Son Co. v. United Drug Co., 79 N.J.Eq. 580, 82 A. 930, Ann.Cas.1913A, 1190; Paine v. Saulsbury, 200 Mich. 58, 166 N.W. 1036; In re Doe Run Lead Co., 283 Mo. 646, 223 S.W. 600. In Ervin v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., supra [27 F. 629, 23 Blatchf. 517], the court said:

> "They never contemplated winding up the business of the old company, and distributing the assets among its stockholders, otherwise than as a formal mode of doing what they could not do by legal sanction. What they intended to do, and what they practically did, was to effect a consolidation of the old company with the new, using as the means for the end the statutory power which authorized a majority of stockholders to dissolve the corporation, settle its business, and dispose of its property. * * *
> "The defendants have adjusted their own interests on the basis of a consolidation of the two corporations and a continuance of their business as a joint venture; but they now insist that the interests of the minority stockholders, who have not been permitted to participate with them, shall be adjusted on the basis of a dissolution and a cessation of the business which they originally associated together to conduct."

In Re Doe Run Lead Co., supra [283 Mo. 646, 223 S.W. 611], the court said: "It cannot be that the Legislature intended that a statute which was designed merely to facilitate a bona fide dissolution should be used as an easy method of effecting a consolidation, particularly when one of the avowed purposes of this proceeding is to enable the interested corporations to evade certain revenue laws of the state. 'Dissolution' means a going out of business, a cessation of business activity—business death, in short. Sections 2996 to 3000, supra, were designed to furnish means of accomplishing that end. Consolidation implies continued life and increased activity. 'Over all things certain, this is sure indeed,' that business death is the thing farthest from the intention of the St. Joseph Company and the will of the St. Joseph Company is the will that controls this proceeding, though it is brought in the name of the Doe Run Company. 'The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.' To use a somewhat gruesome metaphor, what is here being attempted is not corporate suicide, but corporate homicide. It is equally plain that the statute by which the St. Joseph Company seeks to attain that end was never intended to be used to permit one corporation to take the life of another."

[2] Nor do we think the form of distribution upon dissolution which is here contended for is authorized or permitted under our statutes. Section 343a of the Civil Code formerly provided for the giving of "compensation" to dissenting stockholders in certain cases and under certain conditions. But that section was repealed in 1933. The code provisions relating to the consolidation or merger of corporations now provide a method (Section 369 of the Civil Code) whereby dissenting stockholders may be paid the value of their shares instead of receiving an interest in the new or surviving corporation, but only in case they themselves elect to do so and take the proper steps therefor.

The statutes governing the voluntary dissolution of a corporation, so far as material here, are sections 400 to 403 of the Civil Code. Section 401, among other things, gives to the directors of such a corporation the power to sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of all or any part of the assets. Section 401a provides that after taking care of the debts and liabilities the directors "shall distribute all the remaining corporate assets among the shareholders and owners of shares according to their respective rights and preferences" and that "distribution may be made either in money or in property or securities, if this can be done fairly and ratably and in conformity with the provisions of the articles and the rights of the shareholders." It further provides that a distribution among shareholders of shares in or securities of another corporation shall be deemed to be a fair and ratable distribution if made in accordance with the plan provided for in section 401c. That section provides that a plan for distributing the shares or securities of another corporation or "assets other than money" among the owners of common and preferred stock in a corporation which is being wound up may be adopted if such distribution is approved by the directors and by two-thirds of the stockholders, and that such plan shall then be binding upon all shareholders "except as hereinafter provided." The exception then provided is that dissenting shareholders "having a liquidation preference" may within thirty days demand payment of "the amount of such liquidation preference in cash," and that if such a demand is made the directors may then abandon such plan of distribution in which event "all shareholders shall then be entitled to distribution according to their rights and liquidation preferences."

Section 403 of the Civil Code provides that where a corporation is in the process of voluntary winding up and upon the petition of the corporation the superior court shall have power "to order and adjudge as to any or all matters in and for the winding up of the affairs of the corporation," including "(3) The determination of the rights of shareholders and of all classes of shareholders in and to the assets of the corporation."

[3] It seems clear that under the provisions of sections 401 and 401a the directors of a corporation may sell and convert into money all of its properties and assets, and after paying its debts distribute the remainder among the stockholders according to their respective rights. It seems equally clear that a corporation's properties and assets, other than money, may also be distributed among its stockholders if this can be done fairly and ratably and in conformity with the provisions of the articles and the rights of the shareholders. The appellants further contend, however, that section 401c, taken in connection with sections 401 and 401a, should be interpreted as permitting the adoption of a plan whereby minority stockholders may be paid the value of their stock and the rest of the properties and assets of the corporation may be distributed to the majority stockholder; that in the absence of agreement between the parties such value may be determined in a proceeding brought under the provisions of section 403 of the Civil Code; that there was no lack of equity, fairness or reasonableness in the plan here adopted; and that through this plan the minority common stockholders would receive the cash value of their shares which is exactly what they would have received had the directors sold all of the assets for money and distributed the proceeds. In connection with this last contention it may be here observed that had all of the assets been sold and the proceeds distributed all of the stockholders would have been treated alike whereas under the plan here attempted the majority stockholder obtains and may continue a going business, whereas the minority stockholders are compelled to take the present value of their respective shares.

[4-6] While we think the court erred in other respects we think it was correct in its conclusion that the plan here proposed was not authorized by our statutes and, clearly, it was not in accordance with San Joaquin's Article provisions. While section 401 permits the sale or exchange of all assets of a corporation section 401a provides for the distribution of all remaining assets among the stockholders according to their respective rights. Not only was there no sale or exchange of the corporate assets here, but the language used in section 401a clearly implies that all common stockholders are to be treated alike and in proportion to their holdings of stock. While section 401a also permits the distribution of assets other than money where this can be done fairly and ratably and in conformity with the articles, nothing therein in any way indicates an intention to permit a distribution in kind to some of the common stockholders while compelling others to turn in their stock for its present cash value. Nor do we think section 401c authorizes such a course of procedure. That section provides for a plan of distribution of shares or securities of another corporation or of "assets other than money." It contains no provision for a plan of distribution calling for the distribution of assets other than money to certain stockholders and all money to other stockholders, and much less does it provide for compelling certain stockholders to take money while others receive assets other than money. The exception provided therein does not apply to common stockholders but provides, even where assets other than money have been distributed to all shareholders alike, for a liquidation preference, in other words shareholders holding preferred stock may at their option demand payment of their full preference instead of accepting a share in a distribution in kind.

[7-9] Under such circumstances, the particular plan of distribution here in question cannot be legalized or carried out under and through the proceeding provided for in section 403. While that section confers upon the court broad powers in passing upon and adjudging controversies in connection with winding up the affairs of a corporation it is procedural in nature and adds nothing to the substantive rights which stockholders already have through the statutes, or otherwise. With respect to the first point raised, we therefore hold that a corporation in the process of voluntary dissolution has not the right to adopt and carry out a plan of distribution whereby its plants and business properties are distributed to a majority stockholder and its minority common stockholders are compelled to take their share of the value of the distributable assets, such value to be ascertained in a proceeding under section 403.

[10-12] We think, however, the trial court was in error in dismissing this proceeding and in denying the petitioner any relief without hearing or determining the matters authorized and permitted to be raised in such a proceeding. San Joaquin had complied with all of the provisions of the statutes relating to the dissolution of a corporation, at least up to the point of arranging for the disposal and distribution of its assets. Proceedings for a dissolution had commenced (§ 400a, Civ.Code) and the corporation was in the process of a voluntary winding up. A petition was filed as authorized by section 403 of the Civil Code and the superior court then had "power to order and adjudge as to any or all matters in and for the winding up of the affairs of the corporation," including "(3) the determination of the rights of shareholders * * * in and to the assets of the corporation." An absolute right to petition for such supervision and direction is impliedly given and we think it follows that the court not only has the power to order and adjudge as to all matters thus presented, but that the duty of so doing is imposed upon the court.

[13-15] The right to invoke the supervision and settlement of disputed matters which is contemplated by the provisions of section 403 depends upon the conditions therein set forth for the filing of a petition and not upon whether or not such a petitioner is correct in all of his contentions with respect to the questions and issues which are to be presented for determination. The mere fact that a part of the plan here proposed for the distribution of its assets was improper and unauthorized did not mean that this corporation could not dissolve or that its legally commenced dissolution must be abandoned. Presumably, errors could be corrected and proper steps could be ordered and taken to dispose of the assets, to make a legal distribution and to wind up the corporation's affairs in accordance with our statutes and under the direction and guidance of the court. In any event, a hearing on the merits was called for and the matter could not be disposed of by sustaining demurrers and denying all relief to the petitioner. The purpose of the proceeding is to settle disputes, correct errors and obtain such orders as may be necessary to carry out and accomplish the end in view, and not merely to arbitrarily pass upon what has already been done.

[16-18] The proceeding thus provided for by section 403 is in some respects not unlike the one for declaratory relief, authorized by section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It has been held that that statute should be liberally construed, Tolle v. Struve, 124 Cal.App. 263, 12 P.2d 61, to the end that the intent of the statute may be carried out. Hess v. Country Club Park, 213 Cal. 613, 2 P.2d 782. Where a pleading dis-closes the facts required by that statute, such as an interest in a particular matter and the existence of an actual controversy relating thereto, it is unnecessary to allege matters which will justify the precise relief which may ultimately be given by the court. California C. P. Growers v. Corcoran, 14 Cal.App.2d 264, 57 P.2d 1360. Where the basic facts required by that statute are alleged, it has frequently been held that demurrers should not be sustained and that the court should proceed to hear and determine the matters relating to which a controversy existed.

[19, 20] We think that a similar situation prevails here and that the facts alleged in the petition were sufficient to call for and require a hearing with such adjudications and orders as might prove necessary under the facts as they developed at the hearing. The appellants had a right to proceed by way of dissolution if they were willing to accept the consequences of proceeding in that manner rather than by way of merger or consolidation. And while they are bound by the statutory requirements therefor, they are also entitled to invoke the provisions of section 403 in order to secure both a determination of the controversy which has arisen and an adjudication of the matters necessary to complete the winding up of the affairs of this corporation. It follows that the demurrers to the petition should have been overruled and that the court should have permitted further proceedings to the end that it could hear the matters presented, determine the respective rights of the shareholders and hear and determine the other matters relating to the winding up of this corporation.

[21] The appellants suggest that it may be difficult to undo what has been done and to segregate San Joaquin's properties which have been knit into and have become a part of Pacific's system, and that the rights of the public should be protected. It is, therefore, argued that respondents should be limited to a determination in the trial court of the fair value of their proper share of San Joaquin's distributable assets and to the payment of the amounts so found. Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 8 Cir., 144 F. 765, 75 C.C.A. 631, is cited as showing the powers of a court of equity in such a situation. In that case it was pointed out that the rights of many third parties might have intervened and it was stated that these might be considered by the court below and that the rules of equity were broad enough to permit relief other than that specifically asked for, if it became necessary, in order to substantially protect the interests of some without unduly prejudicing the interests of others. Any possible application of the rule suggested in that case is a matter for consideration in the trial court, after the full facts have been developed, and is not a matter to be determined on this appeal from a judgment of dismissal.

[22] The appellants further contend that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the trial court to declare null and void the transfer of San Joaquin's assets to Pacific since that transfer was made pursuant to an order of the Railroad Commission and such orders are reviewable only by the Supreme Court. In its judgment of dismissal, the court included a provision purporting to adjudge and decree that the attempted distribution of San Joaquin's assets to its common stockholders by a distribution to Pacific of all of its assets other than cash is, and was, null and void as to the respondents. This provision is surplusage in what is, in practical effect, nothing more than a judgment of dismissal.

[23] It does not appear, however, that the court was attempting to set aside an order of the Railroad Commission or to invade the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. In declaring this transfer null and void as to the respondents it was merely construing the order of the Railroad Commission and holding that such order had not been complied with. This may be done by a superior court. Coast Truck Line v. Asbury Truck Co., 218 Cal. 337, 23 P.2d 513. The Railroad Commission referred in its opinion to the contract of August 11, 1938, between San Joaquin and Pacific and pointed out that therein San Joaquin agreed to first retire all its minority common stock or to pay the amounts due its minority common stockholders, and thereafter to distribute to Pacific "as its sole remaining stockholder" its plants, properties and other assets. The order of the commission specifically authorized the transfer to the Pacific "in conformity with the provisions" of the contract of August 11, 1938, and further stated that in granting the application no determination had been made of the value of San Joaquin's properties. It would appear that the order of the commission has never been complied with, as Pacific is not yet the "sole remaining stockholder" of San Joaquin. The particular point raised by the appellants is without merit, although the provision in question had no proper place in the judgment for the reasons above suggested.

[24] While we regard the method of distribution of its assets adopted by San Joaquin as not authorized by our law it does not necessarily follow that that corporation is without a remedy. It might go back to the point of divergence and then follow the procedure leading to a final dissolution as outlined in our statutes. Another possibility is some form of equitable relief under the broad powers suggested in Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., supra, if the facts developed at a hearing justifies such a course and the court considers it necessary and proper. Incidentally, some generous purchaser might be found to take over the common stock of the two dissenting stockholders, thus making possible an adjustment without injury to anyone. In any event, the right of the appellants to invoke the benefits offered by section 403 and to obtain the relief and assistance therein provided for should not be foreclosed on demurrer to their petition.

The judgment is reversed with directions to overrule the demurrers, to allow the respondents to answer, and thereafter to proceed, allowing such amendments as may be necessary or proper, with a hearing and determination of the issues and matters which may be presented.

Rehearing Granted July 25, 1942.

1. Wills 🔑386

Whether will contestants had capacity to maintain the contest was a matter purely for determination of jury and of trial judge on motion for new trial, and their determination that contestants had sufficient capacity would not be disturbed on appeal, where substantial evidence was offered both by contestants and proponents, which if believed by jury, would have been sufficient to show capacity or lack of capacity.

Legislative control over adoption and succession is absolute, and statutes of adoption must be read into the succession laws.

5. Adoption 🔑14

The laws of Kansas and California are not at variance in regard to sanctity of adoption decrees against collateral attack and as to presumptions which must be indulged in to support them.

6. Judgment 🔑818(5), 820

A judgment of sister state is binding on California courts, if valid, by virtue of "full faith and credit" clause of federal constitution, but jurisdiction of court of sister state in which judgment is rendered can be questioned collaterally in another state notwithstanding full faith and credit clause and jurisdictional recitals in judgment, if extrinsic fraud exists with respect to jurisdiction, and judgment can be ignored if want of jurisdiction appears on face of record or is shown as to the subject matter or the person. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 4, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Full Faith and Credit".

7. Judgment 🔑818(4)

The presumption in favor of recitals of due service in judgment of sister state will not be indulged in California or Kansas where it affirmatively appears in the record that the proceedings were not regular. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 4, § 1.

8. Judgment 🔑818(4)

In Kansas, the presumption that necessary jurisdictional facts existed in support of judgment of sister state is not indulged in where the record shows what was done in the attempt to make service, and those facts are insufficient to constitute legal service. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 4, § 1.

9. Judgment 🔑818(5)

In collateral attack on Kansas order placing child in custody of children's home as a neglected, abandoned and dependent child, recitals in order that notice was issued to mother of child and that notice was returned by sheriff with report that sheriff was unable to find the mother within the county, were not conclusive that Kansas probate court had jurisdiction over child's mother and over the custody of the child. To give adoption decree validity, court entering decree must have acquired jurisdiction over parties seeking to adopt child and over the child and over child's parents, and decree is not binding on a person who has not had his "day in court", which means that such person has been duly cited to appear and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Day in Court".

12. Adoption 🔑12

The mere fact that parent has neglected or abandoned child does not dispense with parent's right to actual or constructive notice of abandonment proceedings which are instituted for purpose of awarding child to custody of children's home for ultimate purpose of allowing home, rather than the parent, to consent to adoption of child.

In will contest, trial court's remarks that counsel was inclined to impede progress in the path of justice was not prejudicially erroneous, notwithstanding that the remark would have been better unsaid or made in absence of jury.

18. Evidence 🔑90

The term "burden of proof" is used in different senses, sometimes being used to signify the burden of making or meeting a prima facie case and sometimes the burden of producing a preponderance of the evidence.

21. Appeal and error ⚷1170(9)

A judgment can be reversed for giving of erroneous instructions only when rights of complaining party have been prejudiced, and such action will not generally be taken by appellate court for error in modifying or in giving instructions if verdict is manifestly right upon the evidence. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

22. Trial ⚷296(1)

In will contest, reading of portion of decision of appellate court rendered on the last appeal bearing on the law of the case was not error, where the trial court fully instructed the jury at appellants' request on the limited purpose of trial court in reading the decision.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Katherine Hampton, deceased, wherein Bertha Houghtaling offered for probate a will which was opposed by W. A. Bolton, who offered for probate another will which was opposed by Bertha Houghtaling. Thereafter Hazel L. Sliff filed opposition to the probate of both wills. From orders denying the probate of both wills, W. A. Bolton and Bertha Houghtaling appeal.

Order affirmed.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant Bolton.

John W. Holler and Sloane & Steiner, all of San Diego, for appellant Houghtaling.

Stickney & Stickney, of San Diego, Clarence B. Smith, of El Centro, and William H. Wylie, of San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Proponent Bertha Houghtaling offered for probate a will of the deceased dated April 6, 1938. Proponent W. A. Bolton offered for probate a will dated March 31, 1938. On April 20, 1938, Bolton filed a contest to the Houghtaling will. May 4, 1938, Houghtaling filed a contest to the probate of the Bolton will. Subsequently, respondent Hazel L. Sliff filed opposition to the probate of both wills. On the first trial of her contest, the trial judge then presiding, ruled that the validity of the Houghtaling will should be tried first and at the conclusion of the evidence it erroneously granted a nonsuit as to the contest of that particular will (In re Estate of Hampton, 39 Cal.App.2d 488, 103 P.2d 611, hearing in the Supreme Court denied), admitted the Houghtaling will to probate and consequently no further proceedings were had in respect to the Bolton will. On the second trial, from which this appeal originates, over the objections of both proponents, the trial court ruled that all issues involving both wills should be tried together and before the same jury. The jury returned verdicts against both proponents and in favor of Hazel L. Sliff as to both wills. Probate as to these wills was thereafter, by order of the court, denied. From this order, after denial of a motion for a new trial, both proponents appeal.

Appellants' main grievance now is that the court improperly recognized Hazel L. Sliff and W. A. Bolton as contestants. At the outset of the hearing, the court overruled appellants' objection to the capacity of Hazel L. Sliff to maintain a contest and to the capacity of Bolton to appear further as a contestant. It was claimed that both rulings were erroneous and that neither of these persons was entitled to be heard in challenge of the proffered will or wills. The evidence produced at the second trial was, for all practical purposes, so similar to that set forth in the decision on the former appeal that we will not again repeat it here. There was, however, some additional testimony offered by appellants which, in effect, only create a conflict with that offered by respondent.

[1] The evidence offered by the respective parties, which from the record appears to be substantial, if believed by the jury, would have been sufficient to support either contention. This was a matter purely for the determination of the jury and the good judgment of the trial judge on the motion for a new trial. Their determination being adverse to appellants, it will not now be disturbed on appeal. Chichester v. Seymour, 28 Cal.App.2d 696, 83 P.2d 301; Raymond v. Glover, 144 Cal. 548, 78 P. 3. Appellants claim that since the perfection of the last appeal they discovered that respondent Hazel L. Sliff had been legally adopted in the State of Kansas in October, 1901, by Jesse and Mary Ann Parker; that under section 257 of the Probate Code she was not entitled to maintain the contest and had lost her right to inherit by reason of that fact. In support of this defense appellants offered in evidence an authenticated copy of the record of proceedings in reference to the abandonment and adoption proceedings had in the State of Kansas. The trial court sustained an objection of respondent to the offer on the ground that "lack of jurisdictional findings being apparent on the face of the record, I am compelled to hold that the adoption in the State of Kansas is a nullity."

Appellants contend that the authenticated copy of the proceedings had in the Probate Court of Sedgwick County, Kansas, is conclusive and is not subject to collateral attack on the ground of lack of jurisdiction.

It is conceded by respondent that if the proceedings above mentioned are valid section 257 of the Probate Code would compel a reversal of this judgment insofar as any judgment rendered in her favor is concerned. That section provides that "An adopted child succeeds to the estate of one who has adopted him, the same as a natural child * * *. An adopted child does not succeed to the estate of a natural parent when the relationship between them has been severed by the adoption * * *." In re Darling's Estate, 173 Cal. 221, 228, 159 P. 606.

[2, 3] Section 370 of the Probate Code provides that any person "interested" may contest a will. Under the uncontradicted evidence in this action the question whether respondent is a person "interested" is a question of law. In re Estate of Nelson, 191 Cal. 280, 283, 216 P. 368. The burden was upon the contestant Hazel L. Sliff to show her interest. In re Estate of Land, 166 Cal. 538, 137 P. 246; In re Estate of Butzow, 21 Cal.App.2d 96, 99, 68 P.2d 374. Although appellant Houghtaling's original answer denied that respondent Sliff was the daughter of the deceased, on the first trial of the action counsel for this appellant stipulated in open court in reference to the capacity of respondent to maintain the contest, as follows: "Mr. Sloane: * * * I think we may be able to save time here. I will say I have read these depositions, and it is all the information any of us are going to have on subject of relationship of this Mrs. Sliff to Mrs. Hampton, and I am satisfied that they make a prima facie showing of the fact that Mrs. Hampton did bear an illegitimate child and that that child was given to the Parker family to be brought up and that she has the capacity to maintain that contest." Then, in answer to the court's question, "* * * she is the daughter?" Mr. Sloane answered: "That she is the daughter by blood of the decedent and that would make it unnecessary to read all of this evidence. We concede that she is entitled to maintain a contest as a daughter." In the trial of the second action appellants made no such stipulation but relied upon the denial of such relationship in their answer.

In reference to the facts leading up to the offer of the proffered abandonment and adoption proceedings, the following evidence was produced: That respondent was the illegitimate daughter of Katherine Hampton, deceased; that she was born in Arkansas City, Kansas, March 19, 1897, at which time her mother "Kitty Higgins" was about 16 years of age; that some six weeks later the mother took the child to Wichita, Kansas, and placed her in the home of Jesse and Mary Parker, now deceased; that the mother visited the Parkers two or three times during 1898 and 1899; that at that time the Parkers wanted to adopt the child but, as stated by the Parkers' own son, "* * * my mother wanted to adopt the child, and I believe she went so far at one time as to promise to let her adopt her, and then when the time came right down to the point, she said that she could not give her away"; that on May 12, 1900, the mother wrote to Mrs. Parker from Little Rock, Arkansas, seeking a picture of her child, stating: "Hazel is on my mind all the time and I pine to see her. Enclosed find a $2 bill. * * * I will send you some more when my hubby comes back"; that she stated that she was going to California; and that the Parkers heard nothing further from the mother.

In October, 1901, proceedings were taken to declare Hazel Higgins (now Sliff) a neglected child. Adoption proceedings followed. The nature of these proceedings must be set forth to properly analyze their validity. The forms prescribed in section 4215, section 34, chapter 67, article 2, page 890 of the 1901 General Statutes of Kansas were followed.

One F. B. Stanley signed and verified "an information and complaint" addressed to the Probate Judge of Sedgwick County, Kansas, alleging that Hazel Higgins is "a neglected child, who is dependent on the public for support, having no home or proper guardianship; in circumstances exposing the child to an idle and dissolute life, being deserted by its parents, in violation of the statutes of the state of Kansas. * * *" The probate court then issued an order to show cause directed to the Parkers, and to "Kitty Higgins, parents and custodians of Hazel Higgins," requiring them to appear before it on a day fixed to show cause why the judge of that court should not order the delivery of the named child to the Kansas Children's Home Society. On this order was an endorsement by the sheriff to the effect that he received the writ and "served same by delivering a certified copy of this writ personally to Mary Ann Parker and Jesse Parker on the 9th day of Oct., 1901, and I could not find the within named Kitty Higgins in my County, (Sedgwick County)." (Italics ours.) A decree followed reciting that on October 14, 1901, "Hazel Higgins, a neglected child, having been brought before me by F. B. Stanley * * * to determine if the said Hazel Higgins is a neglected child within the meaning of the statutes of Kansas * * * and whereas, due notice of said investigation has been served according to law on Jesse Parker and Mary Ann Parker, custodians and persons having the actual possession of said child, and notice was issued to the mother of said child Kitty Higgins, and said notice was returned by the sheriff of Sedgwick County, Kansas, with the report that said sheriff was unable to find said Kitty Higgins within the county and the said Jesse Parker and Mary Ann Parker now appearing in open court: Upon examining the notice and hearing the evidence offered * * * and having investigated the facts, I do find that the proper notices have been served, and that the proceedings are regular, and that the said Hazel Higgins is a neglected child within the meaning of the statutes." (Italics ours.) "* * * that the said Hazel Higgins is a neglected child who is dependent on the public for her support having no home and having been deserted by her mother and only parent and having had almost no support from her said mother or other relatives; and it being found in circumstances exposing it to an idle and dissolute life; I do hereby order * * * that * * * Hazel Higgins be delivered in the care, custody and control of the Wichita Children's Home * * * pursuant to said findings and the provisions of the act of the legislature of the state of Kansas, in the year 1901."

The following day a relinquishment was signed by the president of the home, an offer to adopt was signed by the Parkers, and after these documents were filed a decree was signed in that same court reciting that "on the application of Mary E. Larkin, president of the board of directors of the Wichita Children's Home, for the adoption of Hazel Higgins * * * and the said Jesse Parker and Mary Ann Parker file their consent in writing to adopt the said Hazel Higgins as their child and heir at law, and the said Jesse Parker and Mary Ann Parker all being before the court for hearing at this time, the court after hearing the evidence and being fully advised in the premises, finds: * * * That Mary E. Larkin * * * has the right to relinquish children for adoption admitted to such home. That Hazel Higgins was relinquished to the care and custody of said home on or about the 14th day of October, 1901, and such child was admitted to such home at that time. That said home has had the care, custody and control of said child since that time, and now has the legal control of the same. The court further finds that said relinquishment and acceptance are each free and voluntary and made in good faith * * * that the said Jesse Parker and Mary Ann Parker desire to adopt said child by the name of Hazel Parker as their child and heir at law of them. * * *"

A decree of adoption was then entered according to these findings. This decree and the record of the abandonment proceedings above mentioned were the duly authenticated copies offered in evidence but refused by the trial court for the following stated reason: "Perhaps I would have to give full faith and credit to it (Kansas abandonment and adoption proceedings) if the showing was made that the parents were served or that their whereabouts were unknown, or that publication of the so-called writ was made, but certainly no court can take jurisdiction over a mother which divests a person of something more sacred than property upon a mere statement of the sheriff that the party is not in his county. The court had no jurisdiction over Katherine Higgins, the natural mother of the child. The court had no jurisdiction of the case."

The Kansas statutes cited by appellants as applicable at the time are General Statutes of Kansas (1901 edition), pages 882 to 888, chapter 67, articles 1 and 2, sections 4182 to 4209 inclusive; and cited by respondent as applicable in reference to service of notice to the parent, are General Statutes of Kansas, 1897 (vol. 2, chap. 95, p. 106, § 63; vol. 2, p. 242, § 558; vol. 2, p. 105, § 59, and § 72, p. 109).

[4-6] Legislative control over adoption and succession is absolute and our statutes of adoption must be read into our succession laws. In re Estate of Jobson, 164 Cal. 312, 128 P. 938, 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 1062; In re Darling's Estate, supra; In re Estate of Mercer, 205 Cal. 506, 512, 271 P. 1067; In re Estate of Jones, 3 Cal.App.2d 395, 400, 39 P.2d 847; In re Estate of Stewart, 30 Cal.App.2d 594, 595, 86 P.2d 1071; In re Estate of Grazzini, infra. The laws of Kansas and California are not at variance in regard to the sanctity of adoption decrees against collateral attack and as to the presumptions which must be indulged in to support them. Dowdell v. Sunflower Grand Lodge, K. P. of Kansas, 91 Kan. 128, 136 P. 920; Denton v. Miller, 110 Kan. 292, 203 P. 693; Chamberlin v. Garner, 53 Cal.App. 305, 308, 200 P. 76. However, with equal force, it has been held in this state that a judgment of a sister state is binding upon the courts of this state, if valid, by virtue of the full faith and credit clause of the United States Constitution (Art. IV, § 1) but the jurisdiction of the court of a sister state in which a judgment is rendered, may be questioned collaterally in another state notwithstanding the full faith and credit clause and notwithstanding the jurisdictional recitals in the judgment, if extrinsic fraud exists with respect to the jurisdiction, and the judgment may be ignored if want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record or is shown as to the subject matter or the person. Hammell v. Britton, 19 Cal. 2d 72, 119 P.2d 333; Ryder v. Ryder, 2 Cal.App.2d 426, 431, 37 P.2d 1069; DuQuesnay v. Henderson, 24 Cal.App.2d 11, 74 P.2d 294.

In Re Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 170 P. 846, where the copies of an affidavit and order for publication were introduced as evidence to impeach the judgment, it was held that they may be considered in contesting the invalidity of a foreign judgment and that this may be shown collaterally by evidence which is not incorporated into the part of the record constituting the technical judgment roll. In People v. Harlow, 9 Cal. App.2d 643, 646, 50 P.2d 1052, 1053, which involved a Mexican decree of divorce, it was held that by section 1917 of the Code of Civil Procedure the jurisdiction of Mexican courts must be "over the cause, over the parties, and over the thing, when a specific thing is the subject of the judgment." See, also, In re Estate of Estrem, 16 Cal. 2d 563, 570, 107 P.2d 36.

[7, 8] The presumptions in favor of the recitals of due service in a judgment of a sister state are subject to certain exceptions. If a judgment recital is such as to affirmatively show that it is based upon an attempted service which is in fact a nullity, or if such recital is consistent with the idea that the other portions of the record show all that was done a different situation is presented. In re Eichhoff's Estate, 101 Cal. 600, 603, 36 P. 11. Where it affirmatively appears in the record that the proceedings were not regular, the presumption will not be indulged in. In re Application of Tassey, 81 Cal.App. 287, 290, 253 P. 948; Crouch v. H. L. Miller & Co., 169 Cal. 341, 146 P. 880. A similar rule prevails in Kansas. In Chamberlin v. Thorne, Kan., supra, it was held that the presumption is that the necessary jurisdictional facts existed. Such presumption cannot be indulged in where the record shows what was done in the attempt to make service and those facts are insufficient to constitute legal service.

[9] Counsel for appellants contend that the recitals appearing in the order of October 14, 1901, that "said notice was issued to the mother of said child, Kitty Higgins" and that "said notice was returned by the sheriff of Sedgwick County, Kansas, with the report that said sheriff was unable to find said Kitty Higgins within the county," together with the other recitals, are conclusive that the probate court had jurisdiction over Kitty Higgins, the child's mother, and over the subject matter, the custody of her child, and that the decree of adoption is not subject to collateral attack since it contains recitals of due service. We are satisfied that these recitals are not conclusive.

We must therefore determine whether, from the proffered record before us, under the law and under the due process provision of our Constitution (Fourteenth Amendment to Constitution of United States, section 1), sufficient notice was given whereby that court acquired jurisdiction of the cause and parties.

The sections of the statutes of Kansas in reference to the notice described may be thus summarized: In reference to adoption proceedings generally, section 4187, section 6 of the Statutes of 1901 above mentioned then provided that any person may offer to adopt any minor child provided "such minor and his or her parents, if living and in the state, or guardian, if any, appear before such court and consent to such adoption." Section 4200, section 19 of the 1901 Statutes of Kansas then provided that any child apprehended under section 4199, section 18, Statutes 1901, shall be brought before the proper court for examination within three days after such apprehension and "it shall thereupon be the duty of the court to investigate and ascertain whether such child is dependent and neglected * * * its age, and the name and residence of its parents." The section further provided: "The parents (if their whereabouts is known) or persons having the actual custody of such child shall be duly notified of such examination not less than three days before the day set for such examination * * * and if on such examination the court finds that any child is dependent or neglected * * * he shall enter such findings by proper order to that effect, and shall order delivery of such child to such children's aid society or institution as in his judgment is best suited to deal with said child." Section 4195, section 14, of the 1901 Statutes of Kansas, in reference to children's homes, provided that in such incorporated children's homes, they shall have legal custody of all children committed to them by the legal or natural guardians or by any "magistrate of any county * * * with * * * all the rights appertaining to the natural or legal guardians"; and "the president of the board of directors of any such corporation may appear in the probate court of any county where such home * * * is located, without the consent of either parent or guardian, and consent to the adoption of such children * * *." Section 4202, section 21, 1901 Statutes of Kansas (in reference to the "Title to Child") then provided that the institution shall be the legal guardian of any child so committed "and all the powers and rights of the parents in respect of that child shall vest in the said society or institution; and it shall be the duty of said children's aid society or institution to use special diligence in providing suitable homes for such children as may in this way be committed to their care; and such society or institution is hereby authorized to secure for such children legal adoption * * *." Section 4206, section 25, Statutes of Kansas (1901), then provided: "If it appears to any * * * probate court, on motion made before him, under oath, by any person who in the opinion of the court is bona fide acting in the interest of any child, that there is reasonable cause to suspect that such child * * * has been or is being ill-treated or neglected in any place within the jurisdiction of such court, * * * such * * * probate judge may issue a warrant authorizing any proper person named therein to search for the child, and if it is found to have been * * * neglected * * * to * * * detain it in a place of safety until it can be brought before the proper court; and the court before whom the child is brought may cause it to be dealt with in a manner provided for by sections 4 and 5 of this act."

Respondent now argues that under the statutes there are only two means whereby proceedings might be had, wherever a child is neglected or abused by its parents, when the court may deliver the child to an institution for the care of children, by means of which the institution is vested with the power and authority to consent to its adoption: (1) the apprehension of the child by a peace officer without warrant, and the bringing of such child before any court of summary jurisdiction under section 4199, section 18, Statutes of Kansas, 1901; and (2) upon motion made before any court of summary jurisdiction, under oath, by any person who in the opinion of the court is bona fide acting in the interest of any child where there is probable cause to suspect that such child has been ill-treated or neglected under section 4206, section 25, Statutes of Kansas, 1901; that the authenticated copy of the record of the proceedings had in the Kansas Court discloses that neither of the foregoing methods of acquiring jurisdiction over the alleged neglected child was followed in that F. B. Stanley, the informant, was neither a constable nor peace officer; that he had no warrant issued by the probate court; that he was not only unauthorized to apprehend Hazel Higgins but he never did, in fact, apprehend her nor bring her before any court of summary jurisdiction as required by the statute; that the authenticated copy of the record contains neither finding nor recital that she was before the probate court of that county on October 9, 1901, before or after the information and complaint were filed or when the probate judge granted the order to show cause on that date; that she not having been brought before the probate court that day, no proceeding against her was then pending and the order to show cause granted by the probate court under such circumstances is void for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter; that the judge, upon the filing of the information and complaint did not issue any warrant authorizing Stanley, or any proper person, "to take such child and detain it in a place of safety until it can be brought before the proper court"; that the authenticated copy contains neither finding nor recital that the examination of Hazel Higgins was had within the time provided by the statute nor the facts required to be ascertained by the court during such examination; that the order to show cause is directed to Mr. and Mrs. Parker and Kitty Higgins, parents and custodians of Hazel Higgins; that the record, on its face, shows that a copy of said notice and order to show cause was not served upon Kitty Higgins personally or by publication; that the facts under which the court found the minor child to have been a neglected child are not sufficiently set out in the proceedings; that there is no finding as to the name and residence of the mother of the child and that according to the record the information and complaint does not set forth facts sufficient to give the court any jurisdiction to make any valid order as to the care, custody or control of Hazel Higgins; that the decree of adoption does not recite that Hazel Higgins was present at the hearing of that proceeding; that the record is conclusive that the mother did not consent to the adoption and that the children's home was not legally appointed to do so in her place; that the relinquishment filed on behalf of the home was therefore a nullity; and that the home never had the possession nor control of Hazel Higgins.

The force of respondent's argument is mainly directed to the question of the validity of the service of the notice directed to be given "to the minor's parents (if their whereabouts is known) or persons having the actual custody of such child."

The complaint appears to be based mainly upon the contention that no jurisdiction was acquired by the court because, it is argued, under section 558, Stats. 1897, vol. 2, p. 242, and § 63, Gen.Stats. of Kansas, 1897, vol. 2, p. 106, it is specifically provided that the service of the notice shall be made as required by law for the service of a summons and that since the notice above italicized was not so made, the proceedings are void. In support of this contention she cites Chambers v. King, etc., Manufactory, 16 Kan. 270; and Bradley, Wheeler & Co. v. Harwi, 2 Kan.App. 272, 42 P. 411, which are civil actions and in effect hold that jurisdiction over the person of the defendant must and can only be acquired either by the issuance of or service of process in one of the ways pointed out in the statute, i. e., actual service or substituted service or by a voluntary appearance in court. Thisler v. Little, 86 Kan. 787, 121 P. 1123, is also cited, which case involved the question of the service of a notice of appeal. It was there held that when the appellee and his attorney reside in the State of Kansas the service of such notice must be made in the same manner as service of summons unless service be waived or acknowledged. See also Garfield Tp. v. Theis, 9 Kan.App. 770, 59 P. 42.

If respondent's contention is correct and the provisions of these sections of the statutes required notice to the mother either by personal service or by publication, any judgment based thereon would be void for the reason that there was no service upon her of any description. However, we do not believe it necessary to determine the construction of those particular sections of the statutes for the reasons hereinafter expressed.

Under the Kansas statute, as it then existed, where a child was adopted under an ordinary proceeding (§ 4187, § 6, supra), after first having the child declared to be an abandoned child, notice was required to be given to such of the minor's parents as were then living in the state, or the guardian, if any. The section was subsequently amended (Gen.Stats. 1915, § 6362, § 6, p. 1264) to read that notice to appear should be given to such minor's parents as were then living in the state and the guardian (if any). And if the parents resided out of the state, written consent to the adoption was necessary.

Proceedings may be instituted in the State of California to declare a person free from the custody and control of his parents. § 775 et seq., Welfare & Institutions Code, St. 1937, p. 1041. Provision, however, is here especially made for service by publication of notice to parents residing outside of the state or whose residence is not known to the petitioner. We find no similar provision in the section or sections pertaining to abandonment proceedings requiring service of notice by publication under the laws of Kansas as they then existed. Provision was made by our Legislature for notice to the parents by publication if not personally served in adoption proceedings commenced under section 224 of our Civil Code.

Without attempting to adopt Hazel L. Sliff under section 4187, § 6, supra, by giving the notice there required, petitioners attempted to avoid that requirement, in reference to notice, by seeking the aid of the abandonment proceeding which, as appellants contend, does not require notice of the examination or proceedings to be given to the parent if it is shown that the only parent authorized to give consent has neglected and abandoned the child, unless her whereabouts is known.

[10] A proceeding by which the parent, entitled to the custody of his or her minor child, is deprived of such custody is a proceeding adverse to him or her. In re Guardianship of Van Loan, 142 Cal. 423, 426, 76 P. 37.

[11] Jurisdiction to proceed in adoption proceedings has been thus declared:

"To give a decree of the county court adopting a child any validity, such court must have acquired jurisdiction (1) over the parties seeking to adopt such child, (2) over the child to be adopted, and (3) over the parents of such child"; and

"No person shall be personally bound by a decree until he has his day in court, by which is meant, until he has been duly cited to appear, and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. A judgment without such citation and opportunity wants all the attributes of a judicial determination." Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Or. 204, 20 P. 842, 3 L.R.A. 620, 11 Am.St.Rep. 808 (from syllabus).

The question then arises, in this proceeding, did the court acquire jurisdiction of the parties? If not, the judgment awarding the custody of the minor child to the Wichita Children's Home for the ultimate purpose of allowing it to consent to the adoption of the child, rather than the parent, was void, and the adoption proceedings based on such a void judgment is likewise void.

[12] Our attention has been called to many cases which hold that after service of notice (either personal or substituted) of such abandonment proceedings on the parent or parents, no written consent of such parent or parents is necessary if the trial court determines, on the hearing, upon proper and sufficient evidence, that the minor child has been abandoned by them. In re Estate of McKeag, 141 Cal. 403, 74 P. 1039, 99 Am.St.Rep. 80; Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 521, 126 P. 161, Ann.Cas. 1914A, 214; Almquist v. Garner, 53 Cal. App. 305, 200 P. 76. This is, however, not determinative of the issue here presented. The mere fact, if alleged in the petition and found by the court, that the parent neglected or abandoned the minor child, will not and does not dispense with the right of such parent to notice, either actual or constructive, of such proceeding, in order that he or she may appear and contest the question to be there determined, i. e., whether or not, in fact, he or she has actually neglected or intentionally abandoned the child so that the court may then be authorized to so declare it abandoned for the purpose of allowing the children's home to give consent to a subsequent adoption of the child in the place and stead of its natural parent by reason of her or his claimed misconduct. Our search has not revealed a case where this question has been definitely decided in this state. It was presented in the Matter of Guardianship of Michels, 170 Cal. 339, 149 P. 587, 588. There one Verna Shaw, who had possession of petitioners' minor child, upon learning that petitioners, the natural mother and father of the minor child, desired to secure possession of it, proceeded to have the child declared, by the juvenile court, to be an abandoned child. On the day of the hearing the parents appeared. The trial court determined the minor to be an abandoned child. Petitioners appealed and claimed that they were entitled to notice of the proceeding and therefore the proceedings were void as being in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. The Supreme Court said, speaking through Mr. Justice Henshaw:

"Upon the general proposition, suffice it to say this: That it is unquestionably a part of the power as well as a part of the duty of the state to guide and guard its helpless young. In the exercise of that duty, it is quite proper for the state to make provision for the custody, care, and maintenance of abandoned children, and in so doing to provide process of law and a forum for the determination of the question whether or not a child is an abandoned child. Upon a determination of abandonment, it is equally within the power and the duty of the state to provide for the care and nurture of the child in the future, and proceedings in guardianship and proceedings in adoption may be and by our law are based upon decrees of abandonment. And finally it is within the power of the state to declare what sins and acts of omission or commission shall constitute abandonment by the parent or parents. Unquestionably due process of law demands some sufficient notice to the parents of the proceedings about to be taken, with an opportunity to the parents to be heard upon the issue. But, so far as concerns this case, it appears by the petition that the parents not only received this notice, but responded to it * * *." (Italics ours.)

This same question was raised in Matter of Cozza, supra, but not decided for the same reason that the party entitled to notice appeared at the hearing. In Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 P. 874, a question of notice to the father of the contemplated adoption of his child by a third party was discussed. It was there held that he had been deprived of his child without due process of law. Many cases are there cited supporting the right of notice of such a proceeding. In Matter of Hart, 21 Cal. App. 30, 130 P. 704, it was held that the mother, divorced from her husband for her adultery, was entitled to notice, the right to be heard, and to resist any attempt to relinquish parental control of her child to the Children's Home Society for the purpose of giving consent to adoption even though her husband had given his written consent, and, also, where it was claimed by petitioners that the child was an abandoned child and the parents had thereby relinquished all their right to it. Ex parte Becknell, 119 Cal. 496, 51 P. 692, 693, is cited therein, wherein it is said: Parents are the natural guardians and "cannot be deprived of their right to his care, custody, society, and services except by a proceeding to which they are made parties, and in which it is shown that they are unfit or unwilling or unable to perform their parental duties."

1 Cal.Jur. p. 429, sec. 12, after setting forth the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code in reference to notice of abandonment proceedings, reads:

"Such notice is required before there can be an adjudication by the juvenile court of an abandonment such as will afford a basis of adoption without the consent of the parent or parents guilty of the abandonment described in the section referred to. While the code does not in express terms otherwise provide for notice of adoption proceedings, it is clear that the code requirements as to appearance and consent imply that notice be given of such proceedings." See also page 440, sec. 21, where it is said:

"Unquestionably, due process of law demands some sufficient notice to the parents of the proceedings about to be taken, with an opportunity to the parents to be heard upon the issue."

Our attention has not been directed to any case in Kansas construing their statute in this respect. However, this question is discussed and many cases are cited in 1 American Jurisprudence, page 642, sec. 40, and page 644, sec. 44. It cites the rule stated in Furgeson v. Jones, supra, and discusses generally the necessity for notice of hearing on forfeiture of rights of parents. It is there said:

"The existence of the facts rendering consent unnecessary, though alleged in the petition, must be judicially determined, and notice is therefore an essential prerequisite to a valid decree and a cutting off of the parent's rights, for even where the parents, by their wrongful neglect or criminal conduct, have forfeited their right to give or withhold consent, it does not necessarily follow that they are not entitled to notice * * * although no notice may be specified by statute in cases where the rights of the parents have been forfeited by abandonment or other misconduct, notice will ordinarily be required in order to bind the parent on the question of such abandonment or misconduct. The object of notice is not merely to bind those who have not consented and without whose consent the adoption cannot be made. It is more than this—it is to bind those who are entitled to be heard upon the question whether they have forfeited their rights in regard to consent, and to prevent them, if notified, from again raising this question. Although notice is not always specifically required, the judicial proceedings by which adoption is effected are prescribed as a duty of courts of record, wherefore it is presumed that the legislature intended that such proceedings should be in accordance with the usual practice of such courts, requiring notice as an element of due process. * * * Nonresidence of the parent does not excuse failure to give notice to him, although constructive notice may be given where the residence of the parent is unknown. The only exception to the general rule that the rights of the parent, however much he may be at fault, cannot be cut off without notice to him and an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf exists in the presence of statutes providing for the divesting of the parent's natural rights in an adversary proceeding for that purpose, or of which it is an incident. Thus, it will be observed that the exception is apparent rather than real, inasmuch as the parent has, previous to the adoption proceeding, had his day in court and a full determination of his parental rights, so that there is no longer need of their protection at the time of the adoption. Where the custody of a child has been taken from the parents for delinquency, by adversary proceedings [upon due notice], notice of adoption proceedings is unnecessary, since the parents have already been divested of the custody and control of the child."

See, also, State v. District Court, 75 Mont. 147, 242 P. 959, citing 1 Cal.Jur. p. 429, sec. 12, wherein it was held that an order of adoption, entered without any notice to the child's mother, who was alleged to have abandoned the child, and who had not consented to the adoption, was without jurisdiction and void, and that notice of the adoption proceedings to the mother of the child was an indispensable element of due process, and that while their state adoption statute did not provide for notice in express terms, by implication it required that notice be given to parents of the child to be adopted, even though they were nonresidents of the state.

[13, 14] It therefore must follow that since it is an elemental and fundamental principle of law that notice to a party whose rights are to be affected by a judicial proceeding is an essential element of due process, the failure to give adequate notice to the mother of Hazel L. Sliff of the abandonment proceeding as an enabling step to securing the adoption of her child without her consent, was void as being in violation of the due process clause of our Constitution. The order of the trial court refusing the introduction of such record into evidence must be sustained. In view of this determination, it becomes unnecessary to analyze respondent's other claimed reasons why the proceedings were void. These proceedings being thus void upon their face, we think it follows that the respondent, who was the central figure therein and the person whose interests were mainly affected thereby, has the right to attack the decree entered which purports to thus interfere with her right of inheriting from her natural mother.

[15] The next point presented by appellants involves the admission of certain evidence given at the former trial by the witness Scott. That witness was there called and testified for the contestant. At the time of the second trial she could not be located. One of the counsel for contestant testified in this action that two weeks before the second trial he began and made a very diligent search for the witness Scott and this search continued up to the time of trial; that he was unable to locate her to serve a subpoena upon her which he then had in his possession; that the only information he had as to her whereabouts was that one or two of the several persons he contacted who knew her "understood she was going to San Francisco." The other persons said they did not know where she went. The trial court then admitted the testimony of that witness taken at the former trial, over objection. Error is claimed in so doing, citing Butcher v. Vaca Valley Railroad Co., 56 Cal. 598, and Meyer v. Roth, 51 Cal. 582. The question whether a witness has departed "from the jurisdiction of the court" is generally a question of fact. Cameron v. Ah Quong, 175 Cal. 377, 165 P. 961. Assuming, under the cases cited by appellants, that the court committed error in admitting the evidence of the witness under the showing made, those cases were both decided before the adoption of section 4½ of article VI of our Constitution.

[16] In People v. Weston, 169 Cal. 393, 146 P. 871, the effect of failure to comply strictly with section 686 of the Penal Code in reference to due diligence in endeavoring to locate a witness was considered in connection with the constitutional amendment. Irrespective of the question of due diligence it was there held, as we must hold here, that the evidence admitted was only cumulative, and the other evidence properly received was sufficiently convincing of the undue influence on the part of the proponents that we cannot say the error, if any, resulted in a miscarriage of justice or that the verdict rendered probably would have been different had the deposition not been admitted.

[17] The trial court made certain remarks during the trial which appellants claim were prejudicial. Several remarks were made which would have been better unsaid or made in the absence of the jury. These comments included such as a suggestion to counsel for one of the appellants that he was inclined to "impede progress in the path of justice" etc. We have examined the record in this respect and we cannot hold the remarks prejudicially erroneous. Lewis v. Crenshaw, 47 Cal.App. 781, 191 P. 72.

Appellants complain of certain instructions given by the court bearing on the question of the burden of proof being on the proponents to show that no undue influence was practiced upon the deceased, if the jury concluded they were occupying a fiduciary relationship toward her. Several instructions were offered and given on this subject. Some of these instructions lack all of the necessary elements in stating the correct rule. One instruction, after telling the jury that the burden of proof was at all times upon the contestant to prove his or her case by a preponderance of the evidence, but "that burden may shift to the proponent to show by a preponderance of the evidence that he is right." Similar instructions in reference to the shifting of the burden of proof and placing the burden on the proponent to show "by a preponderance of the evidence" that the presumption has been overcome, have been condemned and also held to be erroneous.

[18] In Re Estate of Erickson, 140 Cal.App. 520, 35 P.2d 628, it was held that when the circumstances raise the presumption that a will was procured by undue influence, the proponents have the burden of meeting that prima facie case, but it is sufficient if they produce just enough evidence to counterbalance the prima facie case, and it is not necessary for them to prove the absence of undue influence by a preponderance of the evidence. See, also In re Estate of Eakle, 33 Cal.App.2d 379, 91 P.2d 954. The term "burden of proof" is used in different senses. Sometimes it is used to signify the burden of making or meeting a prima facie case, and sometimes the burden of producing a preponderance of the evidence. Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398, 22 P. 871; Bonneau v. North Shore Railroad Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 P. 106, 125 Am.St.Rep. 68; 10 Cal.Jur. p. 782, sec. 88, et seq.

Proponent and appellant Houghtaling offered and the trial court gave (with some modification), an instruction on this subject which possibly led the trial court into the error complained of. It read in part: "In civil actions the party who asserts the affirmative of an issue must carry the burden of proving it. * * * This means that if no evidence were given on either side of such issue your finding as to it would have to be against that party. When the evidence is contrary, the decision must be made according to the preponderance of evidence * * *."

undue influence, where a confidential relationship existed, "may be overcome" or "may be dispelled"; or that "in the absence of rebuttal the presumption is conclusive"; or that "presumptions must stand if not rebutted" or that "it devolves upon the proponent to explain the disposition expressed to be made of the estate by producing evidence to show that in fact the contestant was not, and that he himself was, an object of the decedent's bounty"; or that "it is up to you to say whether or not the long continued exception sufficiently rebuts the presumption that arises from the failure to recognize the moral claim of her daughter"; or "each of said presumptions is disputable and may be controverted by other evidence."

[20] Appellants offered no other instruction setting forth the correct rule as to the burden of meeting the prima facie case where the presumption of undue influence had been established. If appellants desired a further instruction to be given on the issue they should have requested it. Daniel v. Asbill, 97 Cal.App. 731, 739, 276 P. 149; Richmond v. Moore, 103 Cal.App. 173, 181, 284 P. 681.

In view of the evidence in this case and under the circumstances here presented, we are not possessed to hold the particular instruction complained of, prejudicially erroneous. Lonnergan v. Stansbury, 164 Cal. 488, 129 P. 770; People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344, 5 P. 509; In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 259 P. 935. The trial court also fully considered this question on a motion for new trial and came to the same conclusion.

[21] A judgment may be reversed for the giving of erroneous instructions only when the rights of the complaining party have been prejudiced and it is the general rule that such action will not be taken by an appellate court for error in modifying or in giving instructions if the verdict is manifestly right upon the evidence. Art. VI, § 4½ Constitution.

[22] During the course of the trial the trial court read a portion of the decision of this court rendered on the last appeal bearing on the law of the case. The trial court fully instructed the jury, at appellants' request, on its limited purpose. No error resulted. In re Estate of Spencer, 96 Cal. 448, 31 P. 453.

We have examined the record in respect to the other claimed errors. They do not merit further consideration.

The judgment and orders are affirmed. Respondent to recover costs on appeal.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

BROWN MATERIALS CO., Ltd., v. PACIFIC AUTOMOBILE INS. CO.

Civ. 13478.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

June 19, 1942.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑927(7)

On review of question whether there was sufficient evidence in favor of plaintiff to justify submission of case to the jury instead of directing a verdict for defendant, all conflicts in evidence must be resolved and every legitimate inference indulged in favor of plaintiff, and if any evidence is found of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict for plaintiff, judgment entered on directed verdict must be reversed.

2. Insurance 🔑665(7)

In insured's action on automobile liability policy requiring insured to give written notice of accident to insurer as soon as practicable, evidence, including showing that insured did not notify insurer of accident until five months after it occurred, showed as a matter of law that insured failed to give notice required by policy because of failure of insured's responsible officers to exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining the facts.

3. Insurance 🔑561

Under automobile liability policy requiring insured to give notice of accident to insurer as soon as practicable, provision for deduction of $25 from property damage claims after completion of investigation by insurer was not intended to alter conditions regarding the giving of notice of accident.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by Brown Materials Company, Ltd., against the Pacific Automobile Insurance Company on an automobile liability policy. From a judgment entered on a directed verdict for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissents.

Joseph E. Madden, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Parker & Stanbury, Harry D. Parker, Raymond G. Stanbury, and Vernon W. Hunt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

[1] This is an appeal from a judgment upon a directed verdict in favor of defendant, in an action upon an automobile insurance policy. The policy in question was issued by respondent to cover the fleet of cars and trucks used by appellant in its business. Appellant, in an action for damages against it, had suffered a judgment for $5,325.56 for personal injuries which were the result of an accident involving a truck operated by appellant and covered by the insurance policy above mentioned; and upon respondent's refusal to pay said judgment on behalf of appellant, appellant brought the instant action to recover indemnity under the terms of the policy. Respondent defended upon the ground that appellant had not performed all the conditions of said policy in that appellant did not notify respondent of the accident out of which the claim arose until after appellant had been served with the summons and complaint in the action for personal injuries, which was several months after the accident occurred. Upon conclusion of the evidence and after both parties had rested, the trial court granted respondent's motion for a directed verdict. The sole question here presented is whether there was sufficient evidence in favor of appellant to justify submission of the case to the jury. Under the well settled rule, upon review of such a question all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved, and every legitimate inference indulged in favor of appellant; and if under such circumstances any evidence is found of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of appellant, the judgment entered upon the directed verdict must be reversed.

[2] The insurance policy upon which appellant's claim is based covered all of the vehicles of which appellant was the registered owner. Attached to the policy was an agreement or rider, providing that: "In case of accident involving damage to the property of others the assured named in said policy agrees that if the Insurance Company, after completing its investigation, determines that the assured named in said policy is legally liable therefor, to pay at its own cost each and every such claim not exceeding Twenty-five dollars * * *"; and that the assured would pay the first $25 of any claim for property damage in excess of such sum.

The material portions of the provisions of the policy relating to the duty of the assured to notify the respondent of the occurrence of accidents read as follows:

"(F) Accident and Suit Notice and Cooperation:

"The assured upon the occurrence of an accident involving bodily injuries or death, or damage to property of others, coming within the provisions of Clauses A and/or B of the Insuring and Indemnifying Agreements, shall give written notice thereof, as soon as practicable, with the fullest information obtainable, including names and addresses of witnesses, to the Company at its Home Office, Los Angeles, California, or its duly authorized Agent. He shall give immediate notice, with full particulars, of any claim made on account of such accident. If, thereafter, any suit is brought against the Assured he shall immediately forward to the Company every summons or other process served upon him."

"(G) Notice and Proof of Loss:

* * * * *

"Each and every duty imposed upon the assured by Clauses F and/or G of the Insuring and Indemnifying Conditions of this Policy is a condition subsequent, it being understood that failure to give any notice required to be given by this Policy, within the time specified therein, shall not invalidate any claim made by the Assured if it shall be shown not to have been reasonably possible to give such notice within the prescribed time and that notice was given as soon as was reasonably possible."

Clauses A and B of the policy embodied the provisions relating to indemnification for bodily injuries or death, and property damage.

The accident out of which the suit for injuries arose occurred while appellant's equipment and driver were hauling a large dragline power shovel for the Belyea Company, a contractor. The equipment consisted of a large truck and semi-trailer which was especially constructed for moving shovels of that kind. As it was proceeding along the highway a portion of the shovel extending over the top of the truck struck a wire that was suspended across the road and on which was attached a street lamp. At the same time the operator of the shovel, who was working for the Belyea Company, either jumped or was brushed from the top of the cab to the ground, as a result of which he suffered injuries, for which he brought the suit above mentioned and recovered the judgment aforesaid.

The driver of appellant's truck did not report the incident to the employee whose duty it was to report accidents to the insurance company, but, instead, the driver reported the accident to appellant's sales manager, stating to the sales manager that the shovel operator had either jumped or was brushed off of the equipment and had turned or sprained his ankle, but that the operator did not appear to be hurt. About a month after the occurrence of the accident, in what appears to have been a casual conversation, the truck driver reported the incident to appellant's president and general manager but failed to mention that the shovel operator was in any way involved. Subsequently, the power company owning the street lamp presented its claim for $55.46 damages and was referred by appellant's president to respondent, the insurance carrier; but appellant did not report the occurrence of the accident to respondent. Respondent later wrote to appellant, acknowledging presentation of claims by the power company and requesting information concerning them. Approximately five months after the occurrence of the accident appellant was served with a summons and complaint in the personal injury action instituted by the shovel operator; and these papers were then transmitted to respondent, together with information concerning the operator's claim. Respondent then wrote to appellant advising that respondent would refuse to perform its obligations under the policy except under an agreement reserving respondent's rights in the matter. Under such an agreement respondent furnished appellant counsel for the defense of the personal injury suit.

Appellant takes the position that its evidence in the instant action established that, according to appellant's information, only trivial and inconsequential damages had been done, which appellant justifiably believed would not result in a claim for damages; and that an assured is not required to give notice of accidents in which the injuries are so trivial as not to suggest a possible claim for damages. Respondent contends that appellant's delay of five months in the reporting of the accident constituted such a material prejudicial breach of the contract as to absolve the respondent from liability.

The cases cited by appellant in support of its position are all those in which the assured's knowledge of the accident was not such as to indicate the possibility of a subsequent action for damages. The distinction between such cases and the case at bar is that here it was not so much the knowledge which appellant possessed as it was its lack of knowledge. Appellant states that "the test of whether notice is required is not per se the nature of the accident, but it is the knowledge of the assured, acquired in the exercise of reasonable diligence, of the nature and extent of the damages caused by the occurrence." It is at once apparent from the evidence presented that appellant did not exercise reasonable diligence in seeking to ascertain the true facts regarding the accident. In fact, appellant does not appear to have made any effort at all to ascertain the true circumstances. The facts in connection with the accident as observed by the driver were such as would put a reasonably prudent man on notice that an action for injuries would be likely to ensue; and the statement of the facts as made by the driver to appellant's sales manager was also such as should give a reasonably prudent man notice of the likelihood of a suit for damages, despite the stated opinion of the driver that he didn't think the shovel operator was hurt. Moreover, appellant's president could easily have ascertained the facts by questioning the truck driver in appellant's employ. From all that appears in the record, during the entire five months' period from the time of the accident to the time when notice thereof was finally given, appellant was possessed of the means of obtaining sufficient knowledge of the accident to give it notice of the possibility of a claim for damages, even if it be assumed that such knowledge had not actually been received. The only conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that the failure of appellant to give the notice of the accident required by the terms of the policy was due not to its knowledge of the facts but to the failure of appellant's responsible officers to exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining the facts. The evidence affirmatively reveals that it was reasonably possible for appellant to have given respondent notice of the accident prior to the time the action for damages was instituted, and that notice was not given as soon as was reasonably possible. There was no need for respondent to have carried the burden of proof further in this regard.

[3] The supplemental agreement providing for the deduction of $25 from property damage claims does not aid appellant. This provision clearly was not intended to alter the conditions regarding the giving of notice of accidents. It should be noted that the deductible provision was only effective after completion of the investigation by the insurer. Thus it was not up to the assured to determine whether the extent of damages was greater or less than $25. That was a matter for determination by the insurer upon investigation; and the matter of notice was not by the terms of the policy made dependent upon the apparent extent of the damage.

In the circumstances here presented, it is obvious that the delay in giving notice of the accident for several months and not until a suit thereon was actually commenced, was necessarily prejudicial to the insurance carrier, since the insurer was thereby placed in the position of making its preliminary investigation and defending the action in the face of evident disadvantages that the notice provided for in the policy manifestly was intended to prevent.

There being no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict for appellant the trial court properly granted respondent's motion for a directed verdict at the close of the case. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

1. Divorce 🔑236, 297

Where court found wife entitled to divorce, it had jurisdiction to provide in its judgment for the proper support of the wife and minor child of the parties regardless of the terms of property settlement agreement.

2. Divorce 🔑309, 311

Trial court had jurisdiction to enforce and to modify the provisions contained in divorce decree relative to the support of minor child of the parties, notwithstanding parties had stipulated to such provisions of decree in accordance with property settlement agreement.

3. Divorce 🔑269(2), 311

Where divorce decree approved property settlement agreement and in addition specifically provided that pursuant to such agreement husband was ordered to pay wife $250 monthly for her support and that of minor child, order became an operative part of a "mandatory judgment" enforceable by contempt proceedings, and thereafter provision for support was not merely a contractual obligation enforceable only by contract remedies.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory Judgment".

4. Divorce 🔑245(1), 309

Where divorce decree in addition to approving property settlement agreement specifically directed the performance of the provisions of such agreement relative to support of wife and minor child, court had jurisdiction to modify such provisions of decree, notwithstanding the contract between the parties upon which they were based.

5. Divorce 🔑222

Court has no jurisdiction to award counsel fees for services already performed for the wife in connection with divorce action, since such allowance for past services is clearly not necessary to enable the wife to prosecute the action.

6. Divorce 🔑222

Upon application filed pending divorced husband's motion for modification of divorce decree, trial court had jurisdiction to award to former wife reasonable attorney's fees for services being performed subsequent to the filing of motion for modification of the decree in resisting such motion.

7. Divorce 🔑222

Trial court had no jurisdiction to award to former wife attorney's fees for services performed in connection with wife's motion for modification of divorce decree, where application for allowance of such fees was not filed until after ruling on the motion and after the services in connection therewith had already been performed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Beardsley, Judge.

Divorce action by Ynex H. Puckett against T. Lyell Puckett, wherein a divorce was granted plaintiff and provisions made with respect to custody of the minor child of the parties and for monthly payments to be made by defendant for the support and maintenance of plaintiff and minor child in accordance with property settlement agreement between the parties. From an order denying defendant's motion for modification of provisions of interlocutory and final judgments relating to stipulated monthly payments for maintenance and support and granting plaintiff's motion for allowance to her of attorney's fees and costs in connection with resisting such motion and in connection with her motion for modification of the judgments so as to permit removal of child to Arizona, defendant appeals.

Order reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Parker & Irwin and Don S. Irwin, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leonard Comegys, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Based upon the ground of extreme cruelty, respondent obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from appellant in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on March 23, 1933, and a final decree of divorce was entered in the action on March 26, 1934. On March 16, 1933, which was prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree, appellant and respondent entered into an agreement by which they settled and determined their respective property interests and rights in a manner which is not here in controversy or under attack. However, there were included in said agreement certain covenants which required of appellant the payment of specific sums of money for the support and maintenance of respondent and the minor child of the parties. In connection with this last-mentioned provision, the agreement provided as follows:

"For the support and maintenance of the wife, and for the support and maintenance of the minor child of the parties, the husband agrees to pay to the wife the sum of $250 per month, the first payment thereunder to be made April 1st, 1933, and a like payment to be made on the 1st day of each succeeding month thereafter.

"From and out of the said $250 per month reserved to be paid as aforesaid, the wife promises and agrees that she will, without further demand upon the husband, support, educate, and maintain the said minor child during her minority.

"It is understood and agreed that the said sum of $250 hereinbefore reserved to be paid shall continue to be paid for such time as the wife shall be married to the husband, and/or for such time as the wife shall not be married to any other person save and except the husband herein. In the event, however, that at some future time the wife shall procure a decree of divorce from the husband, and thereafter shall marry some person other than T. Lyell Puckett, then and in that event all obligation or liability of the husband for the support and maintenance of the wife shall cease and determine and all payments herein reserved to be made for the support and maintenance of the wife shall abate, provided, however, that should the wife at some future time marry a person other than the husband herein, then and in that event the husband shall pay to the wife such sum for the support and maintenance of the minor child as shall be mutually agreed upon between the parties hereto or if the said parties cannot agree upon the sum for such support and maintenance of said minor child, then the husband shall pay to the wife for the support and maintenance of such minor child such sum of money per month as shall be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction after notice to the husband."

After arranging for the custody of the minor child, it was provided in the agreement that "It is further agreed that the husband shall have the right to approve of any school or schools attended by the said minor child and shall have the right to supervise the education of the said minor child"; and further, that "* * * neither party shall remove the said minor child from the State of California nor permanently from Los Angeles County without the written consent of the other party first had and obtained or upon an order made by a court of competent jurisdiction upon notice to the other party."

The interlocutory decree of divorce also contained the following:

"It further appearing to the Court that the plaintiff and the defendant, T. Lyell Puckett, entered into an agreement in writing which has been offered and received in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit 'A,' and which agreement bears date March 16, 1933, and which agreement is for the purpose of settling the property rights between the parties;

"Now, therefore, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that said agreement of March 16th, 1933, be and the same is hereby approved as to form and contents.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that in view of said agreement of March 16th, 1933, that the defendant, T. Lyell Puckett, shall pay to the plaintiff as and for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff and the minor child of said parties, Barbara Lyell Puckett, the sum of two hundred and fifty ($250) dollars per month. * * *"

On August 1, 1940, respondent served and filed in the superior court a "notice of motion to modify interlocutory and final judgments of divorce and related matters," by which she sought permission to remove the minor child of the parties from the State of California so that such child might receive collegiate education at the University of Arizona. This motion was supported by respondent's affidavit, and in opposition thereto appellant filed his affidavit. After hearing upon said motion, the court made its order granting the same and modifying the interlocutory and final decrees as prayed.

On August 21, 1940, appellant served upon respondent and filed in the superior court a written notice of motion to modify the provisions of the decree awarding the sum of $250 per month to respondent for the support and maintenance of herself and the minor child. When this motion came on for hearing and appellant had called his first witness, respondent objected to the introduction of any evidence whatsoever in support of appellant's motion upon the ground that the court was without power or justification to modify the decrees in the manner requested for the reason that the award of $250 per month to respondent, having been made pursuant to a property settlement agreement, was not subject to modification except as provided by the terms and conditions of the property settlement agreement itself.

Concurrently with the hearing of the last-mentioned motion there was presented to the court a motion of respondent, filed September 12, 1940, petitioning "for costs and attorney's fees in reference to the application of the plaintiff" (respondent) "for modification of the interlocutory and final judgments of divorce relative to the place of schooling of the minor child of the parties, and relative to the pending application on the part of the defendant for a modification of said judgments to reduce the monthly payments required of the defendant to be made to the plaintiff." Upon submission of the matters last above mentioned, the court, on September 26, 1940, entered its order sustaining the objection to the introduction of any evidence in support of appellant's motion to modify the decrees relative to the payment of $250 per month to respondent and denying said motion. In the same order the court granted respondent's motion for the allowance to her of attorney's fees and costs and directed appellant to pay to plaintiff the sum of $100 therefor. It is from such order that this appeal is prosecuted.

Two questions are presented to us by this appeal: (1) Was the court without jurisdiction to modify the award for the maintenance and support of respondent and the minor child of the parties? (2) Was the court without jurisdiction to make the order for payment of attorney's fees and costs?

[1-3] In connection with the first query, respondent urges that the payment of $250 monthly from appellant to respondent was being made solely by and through the provisions of a property settlement agreement, and is therefore subject to modification only as provided for by the terms of the contract. With this claim we are not in accord. The contract in question was entered into either prior to or during the pendency of the divorce action, but at all events prior to the entry of the decree. That such contract was executed by both parties thereto in contemplation of a divorce proceeding is evidenced by the fact that it was therein provided that should respondent thereafter marry a person other than the appellant, so much of such monthly payment as was utilized for the support of the wife should abate, and only such monthly sum should be paid thereunder as would be adequate for the support of the minor child, which amount would be agreed upon between the parties, or in the event of their inability to agree, the sum to be paid should be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction following notice to the husband of such judicial proceeding. Without question, the trial court in the divorce proceeding was authorized to deal with the matters covered by the agreement and render judgment thereon, to the extent, at least, of properly providing for the support and maintenance of the wife and minor child, should the court find, as it did, that the husband was guilty of the charges preferred against him in the divorce action. The mere fact that the parties chose to stipulate to a decree as to property matters and support of the wife and child did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to deal with such matters in its decrees. Furthermore, it cannot be and is not questioned upon this appeal but that the court was clothed with jurisdiction not only to enforce but to modify the provisions contained in the decrees relative to the support of the minor child during her minority. True, in the instant case the court approved the agreement between the parties, but it did more than that. It specifically provided in the decrees that pursuant to the intention of the parties appellant husband was ordered and directed to pay to the wife the sum of $250 monthly for her support and that of the minor child. Thus this order became a mandatory judgment, for a violation of which the husband could have been punished as a contemnor. The order for the payment of such sum monthly, in other words, became an operative part of the divorce decree and did not thereafter remain merely a part of a contractual obligation between the parties enforceable only by ordinary contract remedies.

In an exhaustive and exceptionally well considered and reasoned opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Carter, the Supreme Court in the case of Plummer v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d ——, 124 P.2d 5, at page 9, said:

> "In those cases where it is the intention of the parties and the court to have certain provisions of such an agreement constitute a part of the decree or judgment and made enforceable as such, the court may set forth such provisions in the decree and provide therein that the same be performed. This is the usual practice and when it is followed all doubt as to the effect of such provisions is removed."

[4] In the case at bar we therefore hold that the court, having in its decrees specifically and definitely ordered the performance of the provisions of the property settlement agreement relative to support and maintenance of the wife and minor child, it was clothed with jurisdiction to enforce such provisions, and consequently to modify the same. Petry v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.App.2d 756, 116 P.2d 954.

[5-7] We come now to a consideration of the second and final question raised on this appeal, as to the jurisdiction of the court to order payment of counsel fees. The law is well settled that the court is without power to award counsel fees for professional services already performed, his holding being based upon the reason that such an allowance for past services is "clearly not necessary to enable the wife * * * to prosecute * * * the action." Smith v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App. 177, 186, 264 P. 573, 577. But we are not here concerned with the prosecution of a divorce action instituted by the wife. On the contrary, a final decree of divorce had been entered for some six years when on August 1, 1940, respondent wife filed a notice of motion to modify the interlocutory and final decrees in regard to the removal of the minor child from the State of California to Arizona for completion of her college education. This motion was opposed by appellant, and came on for hearing on August 15, 1940, at which time the court granted the same. On the last-named date appellant filed his motion to modify the decrees by reducing the monthly payments thereunder. On September 4, 1940, respondent wife filed her motion for allowance of attorney's fees "in reference to the application of the plaintiff for modification of the interlocutory and final judgments of divorce relative to the place of schooling of the minor child of the parties and relative to the pending application on the part of the defendant for a modification of said judgments to reduce the monthly payments required of the defendant to be made to the plaintiff." This motion was noticed for hearing on September 5, 1940, but the ruling thereon was withheld by the court until September 26, when the order was made denying appellant's motion to modify the decrees so far as the monthly payments were concerned, and at this time the court made its award of attorney's fees to respondent wife. Admittedly, therefore, at the time respondent moved the court for an allowance of fees, the professional services rendered in connection with her motion for modification of the decrees in connection with the education of the child had been fully performed; but such motion for an award of attorney's fees to defend against the husband's attempt to modify the decrees in regard to the monthly payments for support was timely because it was not made to assist her in the "prosecution" of any phase of the case, but on the contrary, was to enable her to defend against the motion for modification initiated by the husband. The court was therefore empowered to make such an award in an amount deemed reasonable for the services being performed subsequent to the filing of the husband's motion to modify the decrees; but not for services already performed in prosecuting the wife's motion for modification.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to proceed with a hearing and determination upon the merits of defendant's motion of August 15, 1940, to modify the decrees with reference to the monthly payments ordered by such decrees, and also to make such award of attorney's fees, if any, which the court may determine to be reasonable to enable the plaintiff to defend against such last-named motion.

Appeals from Superior Court, Imperial County; Vaughn N. Thompson, Judge.

Actions by Woodruff Irvine Williams and by the Richfield Oil Company against G. K. Kawanami, to recover for injuries sustained by Woodruff Irvine Williams and for damage to an automobile owned by the Richfield Oil Company when the automobile collided with a truck owned and operated by the defendant. The actions were consolidated for trial. From judgments in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgments affirmed.

Harry W. Horton and Reginald L. Knox, Jr., both of El Centro, for appellant.

Clarence B. Smith, of El Centro, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

These two cases arose out of a collision between an automobile owned by Richfield Oil Company and driven by its employee, Williams, and a small truck owned and operated by the defendant. One action involved personal injuries suffered by Williams and the other damages to the car owned by the oil company. The two cases were consolidated for trial. The court, sitting without a jury, found in all respects in favor of the respective plaintiffs and separate judgments were entered from each of which the defendant has appealed. The two appeals have been presented upon one set of briefs and, for convenience, we will refer to Williams, the driver of the car, as the respondent.

The accident happened on December 14, 1939, on U. S. Highway No. 99, about three miles north of Calexico and a short distance south of the intersection of that highway with Jasper Road. At the place in question Highway 99 runs north and south and consists of a pavement 22 feet wide with a white line down the middle and with 5-foot oiled shoulders on each side. Jasper Road is a graveled county road which intersects this highway at right angles.

Shortly after noon on this occasion a number of employees of the oil company left Calexico on their way to El Centro in two cars, one driven by the respondent and the other by one Cairns. The respondent was following the car driven by Cairns and they proceeded north on Highway 99 at a speed of between 35 and 40 miles per hour. As they neared the intersection with Jasper Road Cairns was following appellant's truck, which was also proceeding north. Cairns started to pass the truck on the left but observing that appellant was moving over into the center of the road Cairns swerved and passed the truck on the right. When Cairns started to pass the appellant the respondent was about 75 feet behind Cairns. The respondent did not see the truck until Cairns was passing it, and when Cairns had succeeded in passing the truck the respondent was within 50 feet of it. The appellant, who had been moving slowly, stopped his truck at an angle across the highway with his left front wheel at the white line or just past the white line. Seeing him stopped there, the respondent started to pass the truck on the left but just then the appellant drove ahead about three feet and again stopped with his truck at an angle of 45 degrees across the highway. When the respondent saw the appellant start up after having first stopped he swerved and attempted to pass on the right of the truck, and also tried to stop, but the left front of his car came into contact with the right rear corner of the truck, causing the damages in question. The respondent, who had been travelling at from 35 to 40 miles an hour, slowed to from 25 to 28 miles an hour when he saw the truck. When he saw the appellant again move forward, and about the time he swerved to the right, he put on his brakes but was unable to stop.

The evidence is, of course, sharply conflicting. The appellant testified that he was moving over to the center of the highway in order to turn west at this intersection, that he started to pull over about 10 feet south of the south edge of the intersection, and that his truck was well within the intersection when the collision occurred. According to other evidence in the record the collision occurred somewhere from 75 to 100 feet south of the south line of the intersection. There is ample evidence that the appellant gave no arm signal indicating his intention to turn left at this intersection.

[1] Appellant's first contention, that there is no evidence of negligence on his part, requires little consideration in view of the evidence that he failed to give a warning of his intention to turn, that he started to make the turn a considerable distance before he reached the intersection, and that he stopped on two occasions in the center of this highway with his truck angling across the road. Upon sufficient evidence the court found he was guilty of negligence in these and other respects.

Appellant's main contention is that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It is asserted that the respondent was guilty of negligence in that he had been driving too close to Cairn's car, which preceded him; that he was going too fast; that he violated section 530(b) of the Vehicle Code, St.1939, p. 2198, in attempting to pass the truck within 100 feet of the intersection; that he violated section 529(b) of the Vehicle Code, St.1939, p. 2198, in attempting to pass the truck upon the right when to do so would make it necessary for him to drive upon the shoulder of the highway; that he did not sound his horn; and that being himself negligent in these various respects he could not rely upon or invoke the sudden peril rule.

[2-5] It may first be observed that the evidence is conflicting with respect to whether the respondent sounded his horn. Whether or not the respondent had been traveling too close to Cairn's car was a question of fact, as was also the question as to the causal connection of such negligence, if any, with the happening of the accident. The argument that the respondent was going too fast is based upon the contention that the collision occurred within 100 feet of the intersection and that this was an obstructed corner wherein a speed limit of 15 miles an hour would apply. A great deal of argument is presented as to whether or not this was an obstructed corner and whether the court properly found that it was not. We do not regard those matters as material here. The evidence was conflicting as to whether or not it was an obstructed corner and, assuming that it was, the collision occurred before the respondent reached the intersection, there is nothing to conclusively show that he could not have slowed to 15 miles an hour by the time he reached the intersection, and nothing in this connection can support a finding of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Whether the respondent was guilty of negligence in attempting to pass on the left within 100 feet of an intersection and in attempting to pass on the right where it might have been necessary to swing out on the shoulder, are also questions of fact. The matter of proximate cause presented a further question of fact. If the evidence on behalf of the respondent, which the trial court accepted, is taken as true, the respondent was suddenly confronted with a perilous situation caused by the acts of the appellant in starting to make this turn too soon and without warning, in stopping and starting up and again stopping with his truck across the highway at a time when the other cars were approaching. Conceding that a close question of fact was presented with respect to contributory negligence on the part of the respondent, and further assuming that the finding thereon could well have been the other way, it can not be held, as a matter of law, that there was such contributory negligence. The question was one of fact for the trial court and the evidence sustains the material findings as made.

The judgments are affirmed.

The fact that a trustee of a fund to be applied to a minor's support is expressly preferred by statute for appointment as guardian of a minor is persuasive as indicating that the Legislature did not intend that, because the guardian of an incompetent was a trustee for the incompetent, the guardian should be removed under the statute specifying the grounds for removal of a guardian of an incompetent or a minor. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. L. Harris, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Lillian F. Russell, an incompetent person, wherein George M. Clark was appointed guardian of the person and estate of Lillian F. Russell. Katherine Russell Bosworth filed a petition for removal of the guardian. From a judgment removing the guardian, the guardian appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Linforth, Cannon & Miller, of San Francisco, William C. Stein, of Los Angeles, and Long & Levit, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Judge.

The business affairs of Mrs. Lillian F. Russell, an elderly woman who owned property worth approximately $350,000, were for many years managed by an agent named Williams. On April 8, 1937, Mr. Williams advised Mrs. George M. Clark, a first cousin and one of Mrs. Russell's two surviving next of kin, that it was difficult for him to continue with this responsibility because Miss Montgomery, the nurse and companion of Mrs. Russell, would not permit him to discuss business matters with her. Subsequently Mrs. Clark's husband, George M. Clark, visited Mrs. Russell and Miss Montgomery at the former's Carmel home, and they agreed that he should replace Mr. Williams as the business representative. His then attorney prepared and Mrs. Russell executed a deed of trust dated May 5, 1937, in which she conveyed all her property to him as trustee. This deed gave him power of management and control, together with the right to sell the property and invest the proceeds. The entire net income was to be paid to Mrs. Russell during her lifetime, and, of course, the entire reversion would go to her estate. Williams was notified of the execution and recordation of this deed, but he refused to comply with Clark's request for all documents relating to Mrs. Russell's business affairs and possession of her property unless Clark would supply him with a physician's certificate to the effect that Mrs. Russell was competent at the time of the execution of the deed. On August 19, 1937, Miss Montgomery filed a petition to have Mrs. Russell declared incompetent, asking that Mr. Clark be appointed guardian of her estate as well as of her person. This petition was granted. At the hearing the court was not advised of the trust deed. On April 14, 1938 the present petition for the removal of the guardian was filed. Subsequently Clark filed a purported revocation of the trust deed, signed in his capacity as guardian and again as trustee. During the court's vacation, which interrupted the hearing on this petition, Mrs. Clark's sister, Mrs. Juliet B. Lane, filed a petition for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. The guardian so appointed brought suit against Clark to have the trust terminated, and a judgment was entered vacating and setting aside the deed of trust. Counsel for Mrs. Lane testified that the petition for the appointment of a guardian ad litem was prepared by Clark's counsel.

In granting the petition for removal of the guardian the trial court found that Mrs. Russell was incompetent at the time the trust deed was executed, and that Mr. Clark was aware of that fact; that Clark accepted his appointment as guardian knowing that the court was not advised of the trust; that Clark took no steps to terminate the trust or withdraw from it after his appointment as guardian until the petition for removal was filed; that the purpose of the suit by the guardian ad litem was to remove the adverse position which petitioner claimed Clark was occupying; that Clark verified his first inventory, though he knew it did not include certain personal property in his possession belonging to the estate; that Clark failed to use reasonable diligence to lease certain real property in Stockton belonging to the estate; that in his first account Clark obtained credit for certain disbursements made prior to his appointment as guardian, and failed to inform the court of such inclusions; that Clark was not a proper person to be guardian of the person of Mrs. Russell because her mental and physical condition required personal attention of a delicate and disinterested nature. As conclusions of law, the court found that Clark occupied a position adverse to the interests of Mrs. Russell and had violated Probate Code, section 1580, subdivisions (1), (3), (5) and the last portion of subdivision (2).

The litigation was begun in April, 1938, by a sister-in-law of Mrs. Russell who had been paid a monthly stipend by the incompetent which was discontinued by the guardian soon after his appointment. The petition was based upon section 1580 of the Probate Code. An answer having been filed the cause went to trial on May 10, 1938 and testimony was offered by petitioner on these three issues—the competency of Mrs. Russell when the deed of trust was executed, the adverse interest of the guardian, and whether he had used due diligence in leasing certain real property of the estate. The appellant stipulated that Mrs. Russell was incompetent when the deed of trust was executed, but objected to all evidence relating to that issue and to his knowledge of her mental condition upon the ground that it was not relevant to the causes for removal specified in the code section. The cause was continued for hearing to June 23, 1938, and at the opening of the session counsel for appellant renewed his motion to strike out this testimony on the grounds stated. During the course of the argument counsel for the respondent stated "Counsel objected to all the testimony," and the trial court agreed that such was the case. After argument the court again failed to rule on the motion and stated that a ruling would be deferred until the testimony was in. But testimony was then taken tending to show that both before and at the time of the execution of the deed of trust Mrs. Russell was incompetent, and this testimony was received for the purpose, as stated by the trial court, of showing that the petitioner knew, or should have known, the condition of Mrs. Russell when he assumed to act under the deed. At the close of the testimony of the third witness called for this purpose the motion to strike was renewed, the counsel for petitioner thereupon stipulated that all the testimony of the three witnesses called to prove the state of mind of Mrs. Russell and appellant's knowledge of her condition should be stricken from the record and the issue eliminated. Other testimony was taken at this hearing upon other issues and, upon June 30, 1938, the cause was submitted for argument. New counsel were then substituted for the petitioner and, upon their motion and over the objection of appellant, petitioner was relieved of the stipulations theretofore made and the whole cause was reopened for trial. A great part of the testimony taken at the second trial related to the issue upon which respondent puts her main reliance—the "fraud" of appellant in concealing from the probate court the existence of the deed of trust at the time of his appointment as guardian.

It is appellant's contention on this appeal that this evidence relating to his conduct in procuring the letters of guardianship and his failure to disclose the trust relation at the time of his appointment is a false issue in a proceeding for removal under section 1580 of the Probate Code and that its injection into the trial was prejudicial. The respondent contends that it was both proper and non-prejudicial. Respondent states her position in this way: "The grounds or causes of removal relied upon, and found by the court to exist, divide themselves into two classes, (1) whether the court was deceived and imposed upon in appointing Clark guardian; (2) whether, after his appointment, the 'causes' specified in Subdivisions 1, part of 2, 3 and 5 of section

1580 of the Probate Code, or any of them existed."

[1, 2] We should first direct attention to the propriety of the attack upon the appointment of the guardian as an issue in the proceeding for his removal. But at this time it should be said that, though respondent's briefs teem with charges of "fraud," "deceit" and "misrepresentation" there is no evidence to support the charges, and no findings were made supporting the assertions. The trial should have been conducted upon the issues framed in the pleadings—that appellant should be removed for grounds stated in section 1580 of the Probate Code—not that the order of appointment should be vacated because of fraud or other irregularities in the order.

The code section specifies as grounds for removal of a guardian:

"(1) For waste or mismanagement of the estate, or abuse of his trust;

"(2) * * * for continued failure to perform his duties;

"(3) For incapacity to perform his duties suitably; * * *

"(5) For having an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties."

It is apparent from a reading of the section that irregularities in the proceedings leading to the appointment of a guardian are not included as a ground for removal. It is appellant's contention that such form of attack must be made in a motion or suit to set aside and vacate the order of appointment. In this contention appellant is sustained by the great weight of authority. In Re Wall's Estate, 48 Cal. App.2d 8, 119 P.2d 165, this court held that a motion to vacate an order appointing a guardian made long after the expiration of the period prescribed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure was governed by all the rules applicable to collateral attack. To the same effect is In re Marmaduke's Estate, 130 Cal.App. 449, 453, 20 P. 2d 69, 965. In the early case of Guardianship of Raynor, 74 Cal. 421, 16 P. 229, an order removing a guardian was reversed because based upon a ground not specified in the code section; and in Re Estate of Atkins, 121 Cal.App. 251, 255, 8 P.2d 1052, it was held that when a guardian has once been appointed the letters cannot be revoked for other than the reasons specified in the code. However, the Supreme Court, in Re Guardianship of Howard, 218 Cal. 607, 610, 24 P.2d 486, expressly declined to hold that the code section furnishes the exclusive grounds for removal, and has thus left the question in some doubt. But since that decision In re Guardianship of Sturges, 30 Cal.App.2d 477, 501, 86 P.2d 905 and In re Guardianship of Sherman, 42 Cal. App.2d 251, 108 P.2d 717 adhered to the rule that the code section was controlling.

The respondent seeks to escape this uncertainty by the contention that the matters occurring prior to the appointment are admissible here to show appellant's "incapacity to perform his duties suitably" and for "having an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties." The discussion of these points is weakened by the unwarranted repetitions of counsel's charges of fraud. There is no fraud in the case except in respondent's briefs. If respondent's case rested upon fraud we should expect to find some evidence and a finding concerning it. The evidence plainly shows that the appellant accepted the deed of trust for the purpose of managing the estate for the benefit of the incompetent and that it was in the nature of a general power of attorney substituting appellant for Williams, who theretofore had acted as agent for the incompetent having charge and control of her property. This deed purported to convey to the trustee all property owned by the trustor for the sole purpose "to manage and control said trust estate and invest and reinvest the same and to pay the whole of the net income from said property to Lillian F. Russell, party of the first part herein, during her lifetime," and provided that the trustee should "hold, manage and control the said property during the existence of the trust estate." Thus the trust terminated upon the death of the trustor and the entire reversion would become a part of her estate, without any beneficial interest going to the trustee. It is also disclosed that the appellant did not at any time act under the deed, did not take possession of any of the property of the incompetent, and received no benefits from the transaction. It appears that the deed of trust was executed on May 5, 1937; that appellant was appointed guardian August 26, 1937; that on March 4, 1938 respondent commenced this proceeding for his removal as guardian; that on October 5, 1938 a final judgment was entered terminating the trust. The trial of the proceedings for removal of the guardian was commenced May 10, 1938; after several partial hearings and continuances, and amendments to the petition, including allegations relating to the judgment terminating the trust, it was finally submitted and findings and judgment were entered January 4, 1940. It is thus apparent that when the cause was heard and determined the deed of trust was dead and did not at that time create an adverse interest in the guardian.

[3] This presents the first question argued by appellant—whether the findings upon this issue support the conclusion of law that the guardian had "an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties," or that because of it he was incapable "to perform his duties suitably." Preliminarily it must be noted that this "interest" or unsuitability, must be determined as of the time of the judgment. It is not sufficient that the guardian might have had an adverse interest ten years before his appointment, or ten days before, or ten days after. The question is whether, when the cause is heard and determined, he has "an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties." The rule is well stated in Drake v. Green, 10 Allen, 124, 92 Mass. 124, where the court upheld an order refusing to remove an administrator because he had endeavored to take an advantage of the estate prior to his appointment. The court said: "In so deciding, we do not mean to adopt to its full extent the ground taken by the respondent, that the cause of removal must be in every case an evident unsuitableness arising since the appointment. It must be an existing unsuitableness at the time when the petition for removal is heard. For it is not enough to show that the administrator was unsuitable at the time he was appointed, without showing further that the disqualification has continued, or has been revived. The appointment has been regularly made, and, if not appealed from, is valid and conclusive. All parties in interest were notified according to law, and their remedy, if they were dissatisfied with the appointment, was by appeal. The person appointed, whether suitable to discharge the trust or not, has become the administrator, perhaps because no one took the trouble to prove his unsuitableness. On a petition to remove him, the court does not reconsider the question whether his original appointment was proper. That has been adjudicated. His qualifications when he was appointed may incidentally be introduced in evidence, in order to show what his present qualifications are. But if since his appointment he has not become a suitable administrator, he has become an unsuitable one, and may be removed for that cause upon petition, although the present unfitness may have existed before his appointment to an equal degree, and would have been a good cause for refusing to appoint him in the first instance." (Emphasis ours.) To the same effect is Odlin, Guardian, v. Nichols, 81 Vt. 219, 222, 69 A. 644, 645, where the court, in refusing removal of an executor, said: "When his competency is challenged on the score of interest, the question is to be considered with reference to the situation of the estate at the time. If his interest will not conflict with the duties still to be performed, there is no occasion for removal. The matter in which it was claimed that the rights of the petitioner would be jeopardized has been disposed of." And, in Murray v. Angell, 16 R.I. 692, 693, 19 A. 246, it was said: "* * * the purpose of a removal is not punishment for omitting to exercise a discretionary right, which he might properly, and as a general rule ought to, exercise, but the security and benefit of the estate. For this reason, the alleged cause of unsuitableness must exist at the time of the removal. The court does not reconsider the question whether his original appointment was proper." (Italics ours.) For these reasons we must hold that all evidence relating to the execution of the deed of trust must be confined to the single issue whether, at the time of the hearing, appellant was unsuitable to perform his duties as guardian.

[4] But it should be said here that it is a matter of doubt whether the existence of the trust relation would have been a ground of attack upon the order of appointment. Certainly there was no evidence, and no finding, that if this relation had been disclosed to the probate court it would have caused that court to refuse to appoint the appellant as guardian. And it is not clear that, because of the peculiar nature of the trust, the relation would have been a good ground alone for denying the application, if that relation had been disclosed at that time. Where there is no other beneficiary of a trust, but where the trustor and the sole beneficiary are one, the position of the trustee is precisely the same as that of a "trustee of a fund to be applied to the child's support," who, in section 1407 of the Probate Code, is expressly preferred for appointment as guardian of a minor. This statutory preference given such a trustee for appointment in the case of a minor is persuasive as indicating that the Legislature did not intend the relation to be a cause for removal under section 1580, because the latter section applies to guardians of both incompetents and minors.

[5] But, aside from this, we are unable to hold that the interest of the appellant under the deed of trust was an "adverse" interest in contemplation of the code section. As trustee under the deed he was protecting her rights alone. As guardian of the estate he was doing the same thing. Persuasive evidence that there was no adverse interest is the conceded fact that for more than two years nothing was done or attempted under the deed of trust, and no claim of right was asserted under its terms.

For these reasons the conclusion of law upon which the judgment is based—that from the time of his appointment up to September 29, 1938, appellant occupied a position adverse to the interest of the ward—is not supported by the findings and is contrary to the only relevant evidence.

The trial court also drew the conclusions of law, based upon these same findings of fact, that the appellant was incapable of performing his trust suitably, and was guilty of an abuse of his trust as guardian. These conclusions, all based upon the evidence of the deed of trust, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the failure to disclose it when the letters of guardianship were granted, must fail for the reasons heretofore stated.

[6] Findings were made disclosing the proceedings leading to the appointment of a guardian ad litem and the proceedings instituted by him to cancel the deed of trust. And it was found that the attorneys who represented the guardian ad litem expected to be paid for their services from the estate. From these findings the conclusion of law was drawn that appellant was guilty of waste or mismanagement of the estate, or of incapacity to perform his duties as guardian. The simple answer is that there could be no waste unless the probate court improperly approved the expenditure, and that the mere conjecture of error in this respect cannot support the conclusion of law.

[7] The only finding of fact which is attacked by the appellant as not sustained by the evidence is that relating to his failure to rent the real property situated in Stockton to the advantage of the estate. This finding is relied on to support the conclusion that the guardian was guilty of a "continued failure to perform his duties." The evidence on this issue proved nothing more than that various real estate agents, unsuccessful in procuring from appellant an exclusive contract to handle the property, ventured the opinion that he had been negligent in its management. The property referred to had been rented for $750 a month. When it became vacant the appellant offered to rent it for $500, but none of the witnesses was able to procure a tenant. Some testified that the estate should expend $25,000 in renovation of the building. All testified that they had no tenant ready to take the property. The trial court asked counsel for respondent what he thought the appellant should have done other than what the evidence showed he did do, but counsel made no answer. The evidence is wholly insufficient to show "waste or mismanagement," "failure," or "incapacity to perform his duties suitably."

[8] The trial court found that the appellant had failed to include in his inventory certain jewelry, silverware, books and similar articles, but that he thought he had told his attorneys about these articles when they prepared the inventory, and that they were of such inconsiderable value that it was not necessary to include them. The jewelry and silverware were safely deposited with a bank in Pacific Grove, had been carefully inventoried by the manager of the bank in appellant's presence, and both retained duplicate copies of the list of articles. The contents of the safe deposit box as shown by this list were intact at the time of the hearing. The books were moved to appellant's home and were of little if any value. The trial court accepted the explanations of appellant and did not find that the failure to include these articles in the inventory was wilful, intentional, or a fraudulent concealment. Respondent's argument that a fraud was committed by appellant is not supported by the findings made and is not supported by any competent evidence.

Other grounds urged are either so unsubstantial or are covered by what is said herein that it is unnecessary to prolong the opinion by giving them special consideration. The views herein expressed as to the application of section 1580 of the Probate Code require a reversal of the order removing appellant as guardian of the person of the incompetent as well as the portion removing him as guardian of the estate. In re Guardianship of Sherman, 42 Cal.App.2d 251, 253, 108 P.2d 717.

The judgment is reversed with costs to appellant chargeable to the estate.

BESSINGER v. GROTZ.

Civ. 13282.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

June 26, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

Where court rendering judgment granting plaintiff leave to redeem property sold to defendant under judgment foreclosing mortgage found that defendant, during redemption period, contracted to sell property to others and decreed that payments made under contract were for use and occupation of property but where findings did not state amount of money received by defendant under the contract and did not find that defendant had not received other moneys for use and occupation of land, there were judicial matters to be determined by referee as against contention that judgment was appealable because no judicial action remained to be taken.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

On petition for rehearing.

Petition denied.

Prior opinion, 126 P.2d 355.

James R. Jaffray, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert N. Baker, of Santa Monica, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

By petition for rehearing appellant points out that the findings state the exact price, the amounts and times of monthly payments and the rate of interest specified in the contract of sale made by defendant, and the judgment decrees that payments under that contract are for the use and occupation of the property in question, from which appellant seeks to draw the conclusion that no judicial action remains to be done by the referee or the court. But the findings do not state the amount of money received by the defendant under this contract, nor do they find that the defendant has received no other sums for use and occupation of the land. Hence there are matters yet to be determined by the referee, and since the judgment provides for a settlement of the accounting taken by the referee, it obviously contemplates further judicial action by the court in making such settlement.

The petition of appellant for rehearing is denied.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellants.

SHINN, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from an adverse judgment in an action brought against the city of Los Angeles and others to enjoin them from enforcing the provisions of a general zoning ordinance of the city insofar as it restrains plaintiff Louis G. Kort (hereinafter referred to as plaintiff) from maintaining a sign three feet by three feet having the notation "Public Accountant, Income Tax Service, Notary Public" in front of his dwelling house on a fifty-foot lot at 2437 Crenshaw Boulevard in said city, and from carrying on at said location the business so advertised. Plaintiff maintains an office as an accountant at another location in the city; he lives at the above described address, brings home work in the evening, which he attends to in a room containing ordinary household furniture, a desk, typewriter, and adding machine. He alleges that during the busiest time of the year, between January 1st and March 15th, no more than sixty of his clients come to his residence and that then they come singly and not in groups; he has no assistants or other personnel in his employ at the house. We do not understand from the pleadings or the briefs that the city questions plaintiff's right to do his accounting work at his home, but it is insisted by the city that the ordinance is violated in terms by plaintiff's carrying on the business of accountant upon the premises and by maintaining the sign advertising his business, as an incident thereto, contrary to a provision of section 12.07 of the Zoning Ordinance, which reads: "* * * and no lot or premises shall be used for any purpose, except as hereinafter specifically provided and allowed in this section," there being nothing in the action specifically allowing the business of accounting to be carried on at the location in question.

Crenshaw Boulevard is a main north and south traffic artery in the westerly part of Los Angeles. Plaintiff's property is located in a long block between Washington Boulevard and Adams Street, some 772 feet northerly from Adams and considerably more than twice that distance southerly from Washington; at those intersections there are business centers upon the corner lots and upon the intersecting streets, the one at Adams being the more extensive. The original ordinances zoning the city were adopted in 1921 and 1922 and were revised and placed in the Municipal Code in 1936, at a time subsequent to the expiration of building restrictions which had limited the use of property in the block, excepting the corner lots, to residential purposes.

Plaintiff's property is in zone R-4, in which, under the ordinance, property may be improved and used for single-family dwellings, private garages, hotels, apartments, rooming and boarding houses, private clubs, public dining rooms and restaurants in hotel buildings, with certain limitations, together with the usual "accessories" in connection with hotels and private clubs, including necessary garage accommodations for both private and other residential properties; also permitted are fraternity and sorority houses, churches, public and quasi public education institutions, with their usual "accessories" and garage accommodations. It is lawful to have in zone R-4 the office of a minister of religion, physician, dentist or healer, provided the room used as an office constitutes an integral part of the dwelling or apartment used as such person's home and contains complete housekeeping facilities; provided also that such office is not used for the conduct of the general practice of medicine, surgery, dentistry or healing other than as a religious vocation, although it may be used for emergency treatment with no assistants employed. The offices which are permitted may lawfully be advertised by a sign or placard having a surface area of not more than one and one-half square feet. It is lawful to use premises in said zone for farming, the keeping of domestic livestock, and the raising of poultry, rabbits, bees, pigeons, "or other similar enterprises which in the opinion of the Board [of Planning Commissioners] as evidenced by a resolution of record are no more objectionable to the particular community than the enterprises above enumerated, provided the same is not in violation of any ordinance, law or any section of this Code." (Mun.Code 12.04.) Dairies, stockyards, cattle feeding yards, horse corrals or stables except for private use, hog or goat ranches, hog or goat raising establishments or dog or cat breeding establishments are forbidden.

It is contended that the ordinance deprives plaintiff of property without due process of law and is therefore void. The several zones into which the city has been divided may be roughly described as providing for the following uses: (1) Single-family dwellings; (2) the uses permitted in zone 1 and also multiple dwellings, including duplexes and apartment houses; (3) the uses permitted in zone 2 and also fraternity houses, sorority houses, rooming and boarding houses; (4) the uses permitted in zone 3 and also hotels and private clubs with private dining rooms and restaurants in hotels having more than twenty guest rooms and with certain other restrictions; (5) in addition to the uses provided in zone 4, stores, shops and businesses, professional and business offices; (6) in addition to the uses allowed in zone 5, motion picture theaters, hospitals, sanitariums and similar uses; (7) in addition to the uses allowed in zone 6, automobile repair shops, dancing academies, night clubs, laundries, plumbing, etc.; (8) all other uses, with certain specified exceptions, usually classified as nuisances or quasi nuisances; and (9) all uses not prohibited by law or ordinance.

[1] It is not questioned that the zoning of the entire city followed a comprehensive, fairly conceived and carefully studied plan or that it is generally a valid enactment. The power of municipalities to enact such ordinances is too well understood to require repetition of general principles.

The argument against the validity of the ordinance proceeds upon several grounds, (1) that the uses which plaintiff is making of his property for the conduct of his business of accountancy and the advertising thereof by means of a sign in no way interferes with, and that their prohibition by the ordinance does not tend in any way to promote, the public health, morals, safety or general welfare; (2) that the ordinance unfairly discriminates against the business of public accountancy, which is prohibited while other businesses are permitted in the district; (3) that if the restrictions upon the use of plaintiff's property for business purposes were valid in the beginning they have become invalid because of changed conditions which have transformed the property in the district from residential to business property.

[2-4] It may be conceded that plaintiff's business is not one the conduct of which is subject to regulation by the city in the exercise of the police power, and that the ordinance would be invalid if its only purpose was to prohibit the practice of public accountancy in certain districts of the city, while permitting it in others. But the ordinance cannot be dissected and considered as a multitude of ordinances having no relation to the general scheme of zoning. The authority which the city exercises in adopting a general zoning ordinance is not the same one that it exercises in placing restrictions upon certain types of business because they are actual or potential nuisances, the latter power being one which was commonly used, before city planning became an established practice, in confining to certain districts businesses which were in themselves detrimental to the public safety, morals, health or general welfare. It is not a ground of invalidity of the ordinance that plaintiff's business is, as the court found, "lawful, innocent, inoffensive and dignified," for if restrictions on business uses of property could be invalidated upon that ground there could be no such thing as comprehensive city planning. Rehfeld v. City and County of San Francisco, 1933, 218 Cal. 83, 85, 21 P.2d 419; Jones

v. City of Los Angeles, 1930, 211 Cal. 304, 309, 295 P. 14; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 1925, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 388; Id., 274 U.S. 325, 47 S.Ct. 594, 71 L.Ed. 1074; see also 37 Harv.L.Rev. 834, 850.

[5, 6] Plaintiff points out that the businesses of operating hotels and private clubs with restaurants and dining rooms therein under certain conditions, apartment houses, rooming and boarding houses, with signs advertising the same, are permitted, and contends that this constitutes an unlawful discrimination against his business. There is a discrimination, of course, but it is one that is not unreasonable and it does not invalidate the ordinance. The district is zoned for residential income uses and all of the businesses enumerated are identified with residential uses of the property. We can conceive of no valid reason why it is not just as reasonable to exclude nonresidential business uses of property from a residential income district as it would be to exclude hotels, apartment houses, rooming and boarding houses from a single-family residential district. Residential income use is commonly recognized as a proper classification, as distinguished from private residential, business and manufacturing uses. It is therefore permissible to exclude from a residential income district businesses unidentified with residential uses, while permitting therein hotel, apartment house, rooming and boarding house businesses. Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra; Feraut v. City of Sacramento, 1928, 204 Cal. 687, 269 P. 537; Acker v. Baldwin, 1941, 18 Cal.2d 341, 115 P.2d 455; Reynolds v. Barrett, 1938, 12 Cal.2d 244, 83 P.2d 29.

The ordinance in its present form might be construed as allowing poultry, rabbits, pigeons, etc., to be kept and raised as a business but it does not appear that there are any such businesses in the district or that they have not been prohibited by other ordinances of the city. Under the circumstances there is no need to discuss these provisions of the ordinance as might have been necessary if it had been shown that those businesses had grown up in the neighborhood.

[7, 8] Plaintiff's next contention is that by means of changed conditions the property in the block between Washington and Adams has become unfit for residential uses and is suitable only for business uses. The court found against this contention, the finding being "that the character of plaintiff's said real property is now and for many years last past has been residential." There was an abundance of evidence that the property in the block is valuable as residential income property, that there are some thirteen apartment houses in the block, many rooming and boarding houses, and that the same are well tenanted. As already stated, there is a somewhat extensive business district at Crenshaw and Adams and a less extensive one at Washington and Crenshaw. These alone do not destroy the residential character of the remainder of the property in this long block. There is nothing unreasonable or unsound in the mere zoning of one side of a street for business and the other side for residential uses or in the allowance of small business communities where the surrounding property remains zoned for residential uses, provided such zoning is a part of a comprehensive and reasonable scheme. (See cases cited above.) We think plaintiff's evidence wholly failed to sustain the allegations of the complaint that plaintiff's property, while originally residential in character, has become essentially business in character.

[9-11] Certain evidence offered by plaintiff to prove that changed conditions have transformed his and surrounding property into business property was excluded, and the rulings are assigned as error. Plaintiff offered to prove that on Crenshaw between Wilshire Boulevard on the north and Jefferson Boulevard on the south, outside of the block between Washington and Adams, for a distance of several miles there are located some 120 separate businesses. Photographs of a great many business buildings and centers in the same area were offered in evidence. The offered evidence was excluded, and the rulings are assigned as error. In the original zoning there were only four intersections zoned for business. At each of three intersections, Pico Boulevard, Washington Boulevard, and Adams Street, the four corner lots were zoned for commercial uses. Later a key lot south of Washington on Crenshaw was rezoned for business. All of the other business uses to the north of Washington and south of Adams came into being through amendments of the ordinance or through special zone variances. There would have been no impropriety in the court's considering the offered evidence. Where it is claimed that the character of a given locality has been changed through the gradual growth or development of a street or district it would seem proper to allow a wide latitude of proof in order that the court be as fully informed as possible as to the extent and significance of such changed conditions. But we think the offered evidence was without evidentiary value in the present case, that the rulings were justifiable upon that ground and were not harmful to plaintiff's case. Conditions as they exist in the block between Washington and Adams were fully proved and, as we have seen, the court found that the property in that block still remains suitable and valuable for residential uses. If this is true despite the business centers at the intersections of Washington and Adams, it it difficult to see how the existence of other businesses and business centers more remotely located have had or could have had any different or greater effect upon plaintiff's property. The most that can be said in favor of plaintiff's argument in connection with the offered evidence is that there is a prospective or threatened conversion of his property and that which surrounds it, from residential to business property. This of course may take place or upon the other hand, the expansion of business uses may reach the saturation point and lie dormant for a long period of time. As a matter of fact, property north of Washington and south of Adams may be more suitable for business than for residential income uses, and plaintiff's property yet maintain the latter character, and we think the court's finding as to the suitability of plaintiff's property for residential uses, based upon sufficient evidence, is conclusive as to that fact. As we have pointed out, there would be no unlawful discrimination under those circumstances in the refusal to rezone plaintiff's property for business uses. Had the excluded evidence been received plaintiff's case would not have been changed in any material respect.

[12, 13] There is another feature of the case which may well have influenced the decision of the trial court and which should be mentioned, although it has no bearing upon the conclusions which we have stated. In 1938, while plaintiff was a tenant of the premises in question, he caused the owner thereof to apply to the city authorities for a zone variance which would have made possible the practice of his profession upon the premises. After a hearing in due course before the Board of City Planning Commissioners the application was denied and an appeal was taken to the City Council, where the action of the board was affirmed. Thereafter plaintiff purchased the property and subsequent to his purchase filed another application for zone variance, which met the same fate as the first one. All of this was established at the trial, with the result that the trial court was called upon to decide questions of the alleged unfair and discriminatory operation of the ordinance insofar as it affects plaintiff's property under present conditions, which had but recently been fully considered by the city authorities. It is a settled rule, as stated in the Zahn case, 274 U.S. 325, 47 S.Ct. 594, 71 L.Ed. at page 1076, that under such circumstances, where it is fairly debatable whether the determination by city authorities was an unreasonable, arbitrary or unequal exercise of power, the court will not substitute its judgment for that of the legislative body. See also Vincent Pet. Corp. v. Culver City, 1941, 43 Cal.App.2d 511, 516, 517, 111 P.2d 433; Sunny Slope Water Co. v. City of Pasadena, 1934, 1 Cal.2d 87, 93, 94, 33 P.2d 672, and cases cited therein. Upon the facts, as found by the trial court, which are controlling as to the present character of plaintiff's property, the limitations upon the use of the property are not unreasonable or oppressive.

[14] Plaintiff sought to prove that one of the "accessories" of a hotel, apartment house or private club is the services of a public accountant, together with the maintenance of a sign advertising the availability of such services, and that his business is therfore countenanced by the ordinance. This evidence was excluded upon objection and the ruling is assigned as error. We think the evidence was properly excluded. While the usual accessories in connection with hotels, apartments and other buildings are specifically permitted, the ordinance defines "accessories" as "any one story building or structure, or a portion of any main building, the use and maintenance of which is incidental to the use and maintenance of the main building and which is located on the same lot" and in other sections of the ordinance "accessory buildings" are limited to one story in height and to certain areas. The accessories which are allowed are clearly those structures which are defined as such in the ordinance, and plaintiff's business of accountancy would not fall within that classification. Furthermore, we do not understand the ordinance to mean that even if the conduct of plaintiff's business in connection with the hotel business is not prohibited it would nevertheless be allowed as a business activity apart from the conduct of the hotel business; and there is no contention that plaintiff's business is in any respect allied with the business of any hotel, apartment or club building or business.

[15] The court failed to make findings with respect to any of the facts sought to be proved by the evidence which was excluded and which we have already discussed. For the reasons which we have stated as lending support to the rulings complained of it follows that the facts as to which the court failed to find were not addressed to material issues and that there was no necessity for findings thereon.

[16] The finding that the character of plaintiff's property is now and for many years last past has been residential was a sufficient determination of the claim of plaintiff that the property, while originally residential in character, has become essentially business in character; no more specific finding was necessary.

PEOPLE v. GRAY.

Cr. 3468.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

June 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied July 10, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑742(3)

In prosecution for subornation of perjury, for soliciting perjury and bribing a witness, the jury had right to give credence to testimony of admitted perjurors. Pen.Code §§ 127, 137, 653f.

2. Criminal law 🔑1158(1)

Testimony on which convictions for subornation of perjury, attempted subornation and soliciting perjury was based was not so inherently improbable as to be impossible of belief and therefor District Court of Appeal would not be warranted in disturbing conclusion of trial judge in passing on sufficiency of evidence to support verdicts when considering motion for new trial. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

3. Criminal law 🔑1158(1)

District Court of Appeal is warranted in disturbing conclusion of trial judge in passing on sufficiency of evidence to support verdicts when considering motion for new trial only when testimony of witnesses on which verdicts are based is so inherently improbable as to be impossible of belief.

4. Criminal law 🔑935(1)

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, however much the evidence may preponderate against the verdict, the sole remedy of the aggrieved party is his application to trial judge for a new trial.

5. Criminal law 🔑935(1), 1159(3)

It is the duty of trial judge, who has heard evidence and had opportunity to judge as to amount of credit to be given to the various witnesses, to grant a new trial when he is of the opinion that verdict is clearly against weight of evidence notwithstanding there is a substantial conflict therein, but no such power exists in appellate court.

6. Perjury 🔑11(2)

Where answer to personal injury action brought by attorney in behalf of his client set up in general terms contributory negligence and according to testimony of witness attorney solicited witness to testify falsely concerning witness' observation regarding whether plaintiff had given hand signal prior to automobile collision, conviction for soliciting perjury was not objectionable on ground that the subject-matter concerning which perjury was solicited was immaterial. Pen.Code, § 653f.

7. Perjury 🔑34(1)

Corroborative evidence necessary to sustain conviction for soliciting perjury need not be strong. Pen.Code, § 653f.

8. Perjury 🔑34(4)

Corroborative evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for soliciting perjury. Pen.Code, § 653f.

9. Perjury 🔑33(1)

Where answer in personal injury action brought by attorney in behalf of his client set up in general terms contributory negligence and according to witness' testimony attorney solicited witness to testify falsely concerning his observation as to whether the client had given hand signal when automobile made turn at time of collision, witness' testimony was not so inherently improbable as to be impossible of belief. Pen.Code, § 653f.

10. Criminal law 🔑1169(2)

In prosecution of attorney for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury, where transcript of testimony which had been given by witnesses during second part of state bar committee's hearing, in absence of attorney, regarding attorney's conduct was introduced to satisfy jury that the witnesses in second part of hearing admitted falsity of their statements during first part, witnesses' testimony to same effect directly to jury and in presence of attorney cured error, if any. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

11. Criminal law 🔑673(5)

In prosecution of attorney for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury, admission of testimony of witnesses regarding acts not named in the indictment was not error in view of court's instruction whereby the testimony was limited to purpose of proving a general plan or scheme and to prove consciousness of guilt. Pen. Code, §§ 127, 653f.

12. Criminal law 🔑370, 371(1), 372(1)

Evidence of offenses similar to that on which prosecution is based is admissible to show guilty knowledge and intent of defendant and to establish a definite prior design or system and it is not essential that such similar transactions shall have resulted in commission of a crime but it is sufficient if they tend to prove a scheme of defendant which included the acts charged.

13. Witnesses 🔑387

Where witness had been called before grand jury and there made statement under oath directly contrary to those made under oath to jury which tried prosecution for subornation of perjury, the court committed no error in allowing searching cross-examination of such witness of defendant. Pen. Code, § 127.

14. Criminal law 🔑810

In prosecution for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury, instruction given at defendant's request regarding evidence introduced by the prosecution that defendant's reputation was bad did not conflict with instruction given by prosecution regarding evidence introduced by defendant that his reputation was good. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

15. Criminal law 🔑858(4)

In prosecution for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury where jurors retiring to jury room were given all written instructions which court had previously read to them including instruction from which part of language had been struck out, the fact that jury thus beheld that the court struck out language which would have been merely repetitious was not error. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

16. Criminal law 🔑783(1), 858(4)

In prosecution for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury, action of court in failing to give in full requested instructions regarding evidence of alleged offenses committed by defendant other than those pleaded in indictment and in permitting instruction with line drawn through part of the instruction to be taken by jurors to jury room on their retirement was not error. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

17. Criminal law 🔑805(3)

In prosecution for subornation of perjury and for soliciting perjury where formula instructions were given on each of the counts upon which defendant was convicted and each instruction began with the phrase, if you believe from the evidence beyond reasonable doubt that the following facts are true, the fact that the word facts was used by mistake for statements was not misleading. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 653f.

18. Perjury 🔑37(1)

In prosecution for soliciting perjury, instruction containing statement that the solicited testimony was material to the issues involved in certain civil action was not objectionable on theory that to constitute perjury it is essential that the testimony be material at the time it is given. Pen.Code, § 653f.

19. Perjury 🔑13

To constitute offense of soliciting perjury it is not necessary that the person solicited shall actually commit perjury. Pen. Code, § 653f.

20. Perjury 🔑11(9)

Perjury can be assigned upon testimony that goes to the credit of a material witness in a case. Pen.Code, § 127.

21. Perjury 🔑11(2)

The test of "perjury" is not whether the false testimony actually does influence the tribunal or jury but whether it can influence it. Pen.Code, § 127.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition for all other definitions of "Perjury".

22. Attorney and client 🔑31

Where state bar committee was authorized to investigate, among other things, evils incident to the prosecution and settlement of personal injury claims and litigation, the investigation of the solicitation of one to commit perjury in connection with settlement of personal injury action was authorized as against contention in prosecution for soliciting perjury that the committee had no power to inquire into incident regarding whether defendant had solicited witness to testify falsely upon taking of her deposition for use in personal injury action. Pen.Code, § 653f.

23. Perjury 🔑29(2)

An indictment for subornation of perjury may embrace two or more assignments of perjury and if the evidence sustains one or more of the assignments it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove all of the charges. Pen.Code, § 127.

24. Criminal law 🔑829(1)

In prosecution for subornation of perjury, for soliciting perjury and for bribing a witness, refusing instruction that the fact that the court had advised jury to return verdict of acquittal on two of the counts in indictment was not to be taken by jury as an indication that jury should convict defendant on any of the counts was not error where court adequately instructed jury on reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence. Pen.Code, §§ 127, 137, 653f.

25. Perjury 🔑37(1)

Where first count of indictment charged soliciting perjury and second count charged subornation of perjury but court instructed that as to count two evidence failed to prove subornation and that jury had right to find defendant guilty of attempted subornation of perjury, the attempt became complete when witness gave her false testimony and not until then so that the counts were not based on identical acts and defendant was not aggrieved by court's refusal to instruct that jury could not convict defendant of the offenses charged in both counts. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Bingham Gray was convicted of subornation of perjury and attempted subornation, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; Carter, J., dissenting.

Joseph Scott and Byron C. Hanna, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John F. Dockweiler, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan and Fred Henderson, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DESMOND, Justice pro tem.

The appellant was accused, in a grand jury indictment, of soliciting a Mrs. Trew to commit perjury on three different occasions, February 2, 1939, March 1, 1940, and March 20, 1940. He was tried by a jury and found guilty of the first two of these charges under counts I and V of the indictment and not guilty of the third charge, set up in count VII. He was accused in the same indictment of soliciting George Trew to commit perjury on two occasions, March 1, 1940, and March 20, 1940 (counts VI and IX). As to these charges he was found guilty of the first; not guilty of the second. The jury found appellant guilty of additional offenses as follows: Under count II, attempted subornation of perjury committed on February 16, 1939, in his dealings with Mrs. Trew; under count VIII, subornation of perjury committed on March 20, 1940, in relation to Mrs. Trew; under count X, the same character of offense committed on March 20, 1940, in connection with Mr. Trew; under count XII, soliciting George Gallina on May 22, 1940, to commit perjury. He was acquitted under count XI and count XIII of bribing Gallina as that offense is defined in section 137, Penal Code.

He appeals from all judgments of conviction and from the order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial upon each and all of the counts upon which the jury found him guilty. As grounds for his appeal he claims insufficiency of the evidence to sustain conviction upon any of such counts, errors of the court in sustaining and in overruling certain specified objections to the admission of evidence. He also claims that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct warranting the setting aside of all the judgments of conviction, specifying many instances of alleged misconduct and he charges that the court committed serious error in giving and refusing certain instructions; also, in modifying instructions and permitting the jury to have the instructions with such modifications appearing thereon.

The reporter's transcript of the evidence has been carefully examined. It consists of approximately 2,500 pages and reveals that appellant was indicted upon eighteen counts, the last three of which were dismissed at the trial upon motion of the district attorney. As to another count the jury was directed by the court, upon the district attorney's motion, to render a verdict of not guilty, similar action being taken in regard to still another count, upon motion of appellant's counsel. On six counts, the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty. The three counts which the district attorney moved to dismiss involved alleged soliciting by appellant of one Carolyn Galbraith to commit perjury, subornation of perjury in connection with the same person, also bribing her as a witness, as defined in section 137, Penal Code. Two of the counts upon which the jury acquitted appellant charged him respectively with soliciting one Vincent Herron to commit perjury and with bribery of said Herron, under said section 137. Summarizing, it will be seen that at the conclusion of his trial appellant stood convicted of six criminal offenses arising from his dealings with Mr. and Mrs. Trew, the other remaining conviction arising from his dealings with George Gallina. The two convictions based upon his soliciting perjurious statements from Mrs. Trew, as well as two similar convictions arising from his transactions with George Trew and George Gallina were charged as violations of section 653f, Penal Code, which provides punishment for every person who solicits another to commit or join in the commission of various listed crimes including perjury. The two counts under which he was found guilty of subornation of Mr. and Mrs. Trew respectively as well as count II under which he was found guilty of an attempt were set up under section 127 of the Penal Code which reads as follows:

> "Subornation of perjury. Every person who willfully procures another person to commit perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury, and is punishable in the same manner as he would be if personally guilty of the perjury so procured."

The counts in which Mr. and Mrs. Trew were concerned all had to do, directly or indirectly, with a lawsuit filed by appellant as Mrs. Trew's attorney and with investigations by State Bar authorities as to the manner in which the case was handled. The suit arose from a traffic accident which occurred on September 19, 1938, in which Mrs. Trew claimed she was injured and for which she sought damages in the sum of $25,000. The specifications of injury and damage set up in a complaint filed by this appellant in behalf of Mrs. Trew on October 10, 1938, against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, read as follows:

"III. That by reason of the negligence of the defendant as aforesaid, the plaintiff, Patricia Trew, was bruised and injured about her body and person, and was severely injured in her health, strength and activity, and was made sick and sore thereby; that she received a severe nervous shock; that said plaintiff has suffered thereby, and still continues to suffer, great pain and mental anguish; that by reason of the foregoing injuries the plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00).

"IV. That by reason of the injuries as aforesaid, the plaintiff, Patricia Trew, was compelled to receive medical care and treatment; that plaintiff is obligated to pay for said services, and upon information and belief alleges that it will be necessary to secure additional medical services in the future, and to have X-rays taken; that said plaintiff does not know at this time the amounts due and to become due for said services rendered and to be rendered; that said plaintiff will ask leave of this Court to amend this complaint to state said amounts when they are ascertained."

This action was settled approximately four months later by the corporation's paying to appellant, as Mrs. Trew's attorney, the sum of $6,000. This may cause surprise when it is noted that Mrs. Trew suffered no broken bones, sprains or even the slightest scar, whose injuries as detailed to the jury in this case, by the doctor who attended her and who was engaged upon the recommendation of this appellant, were a bump on the back of the head, some scattered bruises on the back and chest, a definite muscular spasm over the sacroiliac joint and bruises on the knees. The doctor ordered her to stay in bed for three weeks and during that period called on her ten times and ten or fifteen times during the next 3½ months. He stated that he gave her sedative pills the first time he attended her and told her to put an ice-pack on her head; that five days later he strapped her back and possibly again at a later time. He also stated that he gave Mrs. Trew one or possibly two heat treatments; that she had no fracture but complained of pain in back. "I felt she had a sacroiliac sprain," but no X-rays were taken of her back. In determining whether to give credence to this testimony by the physician itemizing Mrs. Trew's bruises, the jury, of course, had a right to consider the testimony of the motorman describing what happened at the time of the accident. He testified that his car struck Mrs. Trew's automobile; that it was quite a heavy jar which knocked the automobile a few feet; "She had stopped suddenly in front of me and just had started up"; that the impact knocked her car four or five feet but not against the curb at the southwest corner; "She pulled the car over after the impact; she pulled it around the corner. She was just starting up when the accident happened, why, she had the car in gear, and she ran over and stopped; she was making a left turn." According to this witness he went over to the auto and talked with Mrs. Trew, who got out of the auto. He also testified that a lady got off the car at the same time and went over to the auto; that Mrs. Trew talked to her and came back and got on the car, tried to get some witnesses; was around there after the accident five or six minutes; that she appeared to be perfectly conscious and seemed to know what she was talking about.

The settlement for $6,000 followed, by only a few days, the taking of the plaintiff's deposition on February 16, 1939, before H. D. Palmer, a notary public. As to this proceeding count I of the indictment charged "That on or about February 2, 1939, the said defendant Bingham Gray, then and there knowing that said deposition was to be taken on or about February 16, 1939, and then and there knowing that said plaintiff, Natalie Patricia Trew, was to be a witness before the said H. D. Palmer, notary public, as aforesaid, and then and there knowing that the said Natalie Patricia Trew, plaintiff in said civil action, was to be duly and regularly sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth with respect to said material matters at the taking of said deposition, said defendant, Bingham Gray, did knowingly, willfully, unlawfully and corruptly solicit and instruct the said Natalie Patricia Trew to willfully, knowingly, falsely and perjuriously testify, swear and state as a witness in the giving and taking of her said deposition in substance, as follows: That she, the said Natalie Patricia Trew, was rendered unconscious by said accident; that when she regained consciousness a woman and the motorman of the street car involved in the accident came over to her, the said Natalie Patricia Trew; and that she, the said Natalie Patricia Trew remembered nothing more until she came to in her bed at her home with a doctor bending over her; and that said doctor, to wit, one Saul Moss, was her family doctor and her aunt's physician; and that she was not, by her testimony, to connect the said Moss and the said defendant, Bingham Gray, together; and that she was to and should testify that since said accident, she had been wholly incapacitated from performing any work of any sort; that she did not want to leave her house because when she did leave, such leaving made her feel bad; that she had had several fainting spells since the accident and that she was melancholy and that the world was against her and that her husband and her mother who should be close to her, had turned against her; and that she should exaggerate in other respects the extent of her injuries and the suffering and pain caused therefrom; and that she had had constant headaches and frequent dizzy spells ever since that accident; the said defendant, Bingham Gray, stating to said Natalie Patricia Trew that such false and perjurious testimony would make her case stronger and enable him to secure more money for her on account of said alleged injuries.

"That in truth and in fact, to the knowledge of the said defendant, Bingham Gray, the said testimony so solicited and directed by said defendant, Bingham Gray, was false in the following particulars: That the said Natalie Patricia Trew did have a clear and distinct recollection of all of the events following such accident occurring on the day thereof; that in truth and in fact, the said Natalie Patricia Trew had, following said accident, driven her automobile to a place where she had picked up her mother, had then taken her mother home, had then gone and gotten her husband and proceeded home with him and had continued and remained fully conscious of all events following said accident on the day thereof; that in truth and in fact, said Dr. Moss was not the family doctor of said Natalie Patricia Trew nor was he nor had he ever been her aunt's physician, but in truth and in fact, said doctor was a doctor called at the suggestion of the defendant, Bingham Gray; that in truth and in fact, said Natalie Patricia Trew remained in her home from the date of said accident, to wit, on or about September 18, 1938, until on or about January 15, 1939, except for occasional absences therefrom, at the direction and suggestion of said Bingham Gray who on several occasions instructed her to remain in her home in order to build up the claim for damages in said action;

"That in truth and in fact, said Natalie Patricia Trew did wish to leave her home and was not rendered worse nor did she feel bad after being absent therefrom; that in truth and in fact, said Natalie Patricia Trew had not had several or any fainting spells since said accident nor was she melancholy nor did she feel that the world had turned against her nor did she believe or feel that her husband or mother had turned against her nor had she had constant headaches or frequent or any dizzy spells; that in truth and in fact, she had not been wholly incapacitated from performing any work since said accident;

"That in truth and in fact, the said defendant, Bingham Gray, well knew the falsity and perjury of said statements and testimony which were so solicited and directed by him to be made by said Natalie Patricia Trew under oath at the taking of said deposition."

Count II of the indictment, accusing the appellant of subornation of perjury committed on February 16, 1939, charged that on that date said crime occurred, when Mrs. Trew's deposition was taken; that the perjurious statements and representations which had been solicited by appellant were actually sworn to as true, Mrs. Trew thereby committing willful and corrupt perjury and being procured to do so by the defendant, Bingham Gray. Under this count appellant was found guilty of attempted subornation of perjury, "a lesser offense than that charged in count 2 of the indictment but necessarily included therein."

More than a year after Mrs. Trew's lawsuit was settled, and on March 20, 1940, appellant's conduct in connection with the case was inquired into, count V of the indictment charging that in connection with that investigation appellant again and on or about March 1, 1940, solicited Mrs. Trew to commit perjury, that "there was pending before The State Bar Special Local Administrative Committee number 1, a duly and regularly appointed and acting committee of the State Bar of the State of California, an inquiry into a charge and charges of unethical and improper conduct of said defendant, Bingham Gray, who was at all times in this count mentioned, an attorney-at-law duly and regularly licensed to practice law in the State of California, and member of said State Bar * * * that in said inquiry before said Committee, it was material to know how much money had been paid to said Natalie Patricia Trew and had been received by her out of the total sum of Six Thousand and no/100 Dollars ($6,000.00) paid by said Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a corporation, in the settlement of said action, and it was also material to know in what manner one Dr. Saul Moss became the physician for said Natalie Patricia Trew and it was material to know the manner in which the accident occurred as a result of which Natalie Patricia Trew brought suit against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a corporation, in case numbered 432819, the nature and extent of her injuries in connection with said accident, and all matters and things surrounding the cause of action of the said Natalie Patricia Trew in said case.

"That the said defendant, Bingham Gray, well knowing the said Natalie Patricia Trew would be a witness in said proceedings before said Committee and well knowing that as such witness, said Natalie Patricia Trew would be sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and well knowing that said Natalie Patricia Trew had received the sum of One Thousand One Hundred Fifty and no/100 Dollars ($1150.00) and no more out of said settlement of Six Thousand and no/100 Dollars ($6,000.00) as aforesaid, and well knowing that said Dr. Saul Moss was not nor never had been the family physician of said Natalie Patricia Trew, and was not nor never had been the physician of the aunt or any aunt of said Natalie Patricia Trew, and well knowing that the said Natalie Patricia Trew had exaggerated and committed perjury in connection with the deposition theretofore taken on or about February 16, 1939, in her case against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a corporation, case numbered 432819, and that said Natalie Patricia Trew had falsely in said deposition stated that she did not remember how she got home after the accident and that when she came to after arriving at home, the doctor was leaning over her and working on her and that at the time of the taking of the deposition, heretofore mentioned, the pain in her head seemed to get worse instead of better and that she had pains in her head that shoot down her neck all the time and that after the accident and at the time of the taking of the deposition, she did not want to leave her house because she felt worse when she returned, the said defendant, Bingham Gray, did knowingly, willfully, unlawfully and corruptly solicit and instruct the said Natalie Patricia Trew to willfully, knowingly, falsely and perjuriously testify, swear and state as a witness under oath before said Committee, in substance as follows:

"That she, the said Natalie Patricia Trew, had received Twenty Seven Hundred and no/100 Dollars ($2700.00) out of said settlement aforesaid, and that the said Dr. Saul Moss was the family physician and the physician of an aunt of said Natalie Patricia Trew, and that the said Natalie Patricia Trew did not know and remember how she got home after the accident and did not know that she drove her automobile home thereafter and that the said Natalie Patricia Trew did not come to until the doctor was leaning over her and working on her after arriving home after the accident and that at the time of the taking of the deposition the pain in the head of said Natalie Patricia Trew seemed to get worse instead of better and that she had pains in her head that shoot down her back all the time and that she felt worse after being out of her home and upon her return to her home.

"That in truth and in fact, the said defendant, Bingham Gray, well knew the falsity and perjury of said statements and testimony which were so solicited and directed by him to be made by said Natalie Patricia Trew under oath to the aforesaid Committee."

Count VI of the indictment charged appellant with soliciting on or about March 1, 1940, George Trew, the husband of Natalie Patricia Trew, to commit perjury in connection with the same matters mentioned in Count V in connection with Mrs. Trew's perjury.

Count VIII accused appellant of subornation of perjury in "That on or about the 20th day of March, 1940, the defendant, Bingham Gray, did willfully, knowingly and corruptly procure, induce and instigate one Natalie Patricia Trew to commit the crime of Perjury; that the said perjury of the said Natalie Patricia Trew so procured by the defendant, Bingham Gray, was committed as follows: * * *

"That in connection with and in the course of the aforesaid proceeding and inquiry by the said State Bar Special Local Administrative Committee number 1, the said Natalie Patricia Trew was duly and regularly sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth by W. Joseph McFarland, a person then and there lawfully entitled to and having legal authority to administer said oath; that after being so sworn as aforesaid, said Natalie Patricia Trew did willfully, unlawfully and perjuriously testify and state as true material matter which she knew to be false, which matters and things so stated were in substance as follows:

"That she obtained approximately Twenty Six Hundred and no/100 Dollars ($2600.00) as a result of the settlement of her case against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a corporation, numbered 432819, theretofore pending in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles; that she did not remember the entire amount of the settlement; that she did not leave her home after the accident and until January, 1939, and that she was in bed most of the time between the date of the accident on September 18, 1938, until January, 1939, and did not discuss with the defendant, Bingham Gray, the fact that she should stay indoors or in the house during the period between September 18, 1938, and January, 1939; that the last time that she had seen the defendant, Bingham Gray, prior to March 20, 1940, was the day before yesterday, in other words, March 18, 1940, and that when she was subpoenaed to appear before the State Bar Committee, heretofore referred to, she did not know what the subpoena was for; that she had not agreed with defendant Gray to call his office or go to his office if she did receive a subpoena to appear before said State Bar Committee; that she had no understanding that she might be called to appear before said State Bar Committee; that she had no idea she was going to get a subpoena to appear before said State Bar Committee and the fact that she might get such subpoena was never mentioned by the defendant Gray and that she and her husband, George Trew, did not at any time prior to the time that she was subpoenaed, have a conversation with the defendant Gray about the fact that she might be subpoenaed to testify before the State Bar or the State Bar Committee, heretofore referred to; that the only time in the period of six months prior to the service of the subpoena upon her to testify before the said State Bar Committee in which she had seen the defendant Gray was on one occasion when she had visited said Gray to ask about a job and that she remembered no other occasion upon which she had talked to said Gray in said period of time; that when her attention was directed to the fact that she and her husband had met with the defendant Gray at the corner drug store on or about March 1, 1940, that the reason she had not told about that meeting when first asked to relate her previous meetings with the defendant Gray occurring in the period of six months prior to March 20, 1940, was because she did not think of it and that she had forgotten one or two things, but had tried to remember everything; that during the course of the conversation at the drug store between the defendant Gray, Mr. Trew and Mrs. Natalie Patricia Trew, nothing was said or brought up about the case of Patricia Trew against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation and nothing said about the case that she could remember and nothing was said in that conversation about the testimony of herself before the said Committee of the State Bar that she knew of and that she paid no attention to conversation between the defendant Gray and her husband, George Trew, at the said drug store on or about March 1, 1940.

"That the aforesaid testimony so given by said witness Natalie Patricia Trew, was false and untrue to the knowledge of said Natalie Patricia Trew at the time the same was given and that the same was false and untrue in the following particulars:

"That the said Natalie Patricia Trew did not obtain approximately Twenty Six Hundred and no/100 Dollars ($2600.00) in settlement of her case against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, but on the contrary, received a much smaller amount which was approximately Eleven Hundred Fifty and no/100 Dollars ($1150.00); that in truth and in fact, the said Natalie Patricia Trew did remember the entire amount of the settlement of her case, heretofore referred to against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, and that the same was approximately Six Thousand and no/100 Dollars ($6,000.00); that in truth and in fact she had left her home after September 18, 1938, the approximate date of the accident, and the month of January, 1939; that in truth and in fact, she was not in bed most of the time between the approximate date of the accident and January, 1939, but on the contrary, was up out of bed and around the house during the major portion of said time; that in truth and in fact she did discuss with the defendant, Bingham Gray, the fact that she should stay indoors between September 18, 1938, and January, 1939, and he advised her to stay in the house at all times after the accident and prior to the settlement of the case, telling her in substance that it would increase her showing of damages as a result of the accident involved and that if she were seen outside the house that someone might take pictures of her movements for the purpose of demonstrating that she was not as badly injured as she claimed to be; that the last time she saw the defendant, Bingham Gray, prior to appearing as a witness before said State Bar Committee on March 20, 1940, was not the day before yesterday, or in other words, March 18, 1940, but on the contrary was on March 20, 1940, within the period of one hour prior to the time that she gave this testimony; that she did in truth and in fact know what the subpoena was for when she was subpoenaed to appear before the said State Bar Committee and that she knew at that time that the subpoena was for the purpose of procuring her testimony as a witness at the hearing of said State Bar Committee and that said State Bar Committee was then and there conducting an investigation and inquiry into the conduct of the said Bingham Gray as a member of the State Bar and a practicing attorney in Los Angeles; that in truth and in fact she and her husband, George Trew, had agreed with the defendant Gray to call his office or go to his office if she did receive a subpoena to appear before said State Bar Committee; that in truth and in fact she did have an understanding that she might be called to appear before said State Bar Committee as a witness and that she knew this because the defendant had told her in substance that several of his clients were being subpoenaed before said Committee and that she probably would or might also be called upon to appear because she had been one of his clients and that this understanding and conversation between herself, the defendant Gray and her husband, George Trew, occurred on or about March 1, 1940, at a drug store in the vicinity where she and her said husband lived; that at the time she testified before the said State Bar Committee on or about March 20, 1940, she at all times during said testimony knew and remembered the meeting between herself and her husband, George Trew, and the defendant Gray at the drug store in the vicinity of her home, which took place on or about March 1, 1940, and that with regard to said meeting, that there was conversation between those persons heretofore named about the proposed testimony to be given before the said Bar Committee by herself and her husband and that the defendant Gray then and there made arrangements for her to read the deposition theretofore made by her in connection with her suit against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, in which the nature and extent of her injuries was mentioned, the defendant Gray then and there further called to her attention the fact that she should testify that she received an amount of approximately Twenty Seven Hundred and no/100 Dollars ($2700.00) as her part of the settlement of said case and that the information should be kept away from the said Bar Committee that the defendant Gray had caused the employment of Dr. Moss to attend upon herself as a physician and surgeon and that she should falsely lead the Committee to believe that Dr. Moss was her family physician and that at all times during the course of her testimony before the said State Bar Committee, she knew and remembered the aforesaid conversation in substance and the approximate date thereof.

"That all of the testimony so given by the said Natalie Patricia Trew as aforesaid, was material to the issue and point of inquiry before the said hearing taking place before the said State Bar Special Local Administrative Committee number 1 while engaged in the matters and considerations heretofore set out and in connection with the matters then pending in said hearing before said State Bar Committee in which such testimony was given, as aforesaid, and thereby she, the said Natalie Patricia Trew, did commit willful and corrupt perjury."

Count X charged appellant with suborning perjury in that on or about March 20, 1940, he procured George Trew to commit perjury in much the same way as alleged in relation to Mrs. Trew in count VIII; that his sworn testimony before the State Bar Special Local Administrative Committee No. 1 was false and untrue in the following particulars: "That he, the said George Trew, did, in truth and in fact, know that his wife, Natalie Patricia Trew, had contacted the defendant Gray by telephone before seeing him on the late afternoon of March 20, 1940, and that said telephone conversation took place several days before March 20, 1940, and in the month of March, 1940, and at a time when the said Natalie Patricia Trew was served with a subpoena to appear before the said State Bar Committee; that the said George Trew had talked with the defendant Gray on the telephone on or about March 1, 1940, and within a short time thereafter and about the same date the said George Trew, Natalie Patricia Trew and defendant Gray met and conversed at a drugstore in the vicinity of the residence of George Trew, on or about March 1, 1940, at which time and place the aforesaid three persons discussed the possibility of Natalie Patricia Trew being called before the State Bar Committee that was investigating matters concerning the conduct of the defendant Gray as a member of the State Bar, and also discussed the manner in which Dr. Moss had been secured to attend upon Natalie Patricia Trew as a result of an accident theretofore had by Natalie Patricia Trew, on or about September 18, 1938, and also discussed that fact that prior to appearing as a witness before said State Bar Committee the said Natalie Patricia Trew should read the deposition which she had given in her case against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, which deposition was in the office of the defendant Gray; that as a part of the discussion of the said parties, on or about March 1, 1940, the defendant Gray suggested to those present that the State Bar Committee be told that Natalie Patricia Trew received approximately $2700.00 out of the settlement of her case against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation; that the witness George Trew, appearing before the State Bar Committee on March 20, 1940, then and there well knew and well remembered, at all times, that he had seen defendant Gray and talked with him, as aforesaid, on or about March 1, 1940; that in truth and in fact he, the said George Trew, did know the substance of the conversation held on March 4, 1940, when he was asked about the same at said Bar hearing on March 20, 1940, and that he, the said George Trew, in truth and in fact, had paid attention and was interested in the subject matter of the conversation of March 1, 1940, at the time said conversation took place and did, in truth and in fact, remember the conversation between Natalie Patricia Trew and the defendant Gray in substance and in effect; that in truth and in fact the said George Trew was not telling the truth to his best knowledge and belief on March 20, 1940, because at that time he well remembered the conversations of March 1, 1940, in substance and effect; that in truth and in fact the defendant Gray was not given approximately $2700.00 in connection with the settlement of the case theretofore filed by Natalie Patricia Trew against the Los Angeles Railway Company by George Trew, but on the contrary, received the amount of $2700.00 plus approximately $1500.00, which latter sum of $1500.00 had been unlawfully retained by the said Gray and of which sum Natalie Patricia Trew and George Trew had been deprived by the said Gray to the then knowledge of the said George Trew; that in truth and in fact George Trew had not paid the doctors who had attended upon Natalie Patricia Trew, either in cash or otherwise, and that in truth and in fact he did not have left, after paying the doctors, an approximate amount of $2100.00 out of the settlement received by Natalie Patricia Trew, as a result of her suit against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, and that in truth and in fact the said George Trew had not told the truth in every instance in his testimony, as is hereinbefore indicated in these assignments of falsity of the testimony of George Trew, and on the contrary, the said George Trew well knowing the answers to the questions thus propounded to him claimed in the instances above enumerated that he did not remember the matters and things to which his testimony was thus directed."

From the mass of material contained in the foregoing charges by the Grand Jury and from the evidence reported in the transcript, mention of certain dates and incidents of special importance is desirable at this point, to make clear the sequence of events in which appellant was involved with Mr. and Mrs. Trew.

The first and second charges revolve around Mrs. Trew's deposition taken on February 16, 1939, and concerning which the jury found appellant guilty of soliciting her to commit perjury and also guilty of an attempt to suborn her. They also convicted him of soliciting both Mr. and Mrs.

Trew, a year or so later, when the local committee of the State Bar was investigating appellant's conduct in handling certain of his cases. The hearing on that matter was held on March 20, 1940, and the time of solicitation as to both Mr. and Mrs. Trew was fixed by the grand jury in its indictment (counts V and VI) as on or about March 1, 1940. This was the approximate date when the transcript clearly shows that Mr. and Mrs. Trew were in conference with appellant at a drugstore not far from the Trew residence. It appears from the record that on the night of March 20, 1940, Mr. and Mrs. Trew had dinner with appellant in a restaurant just across the street from the office building in downtown Los Angeles where the hearing was held. An hour or two later Mrs. Trew was called before the committee and lied under oath substantially as set out in count VIII, upon which appellant's conviction of suborning her was based. When it appeared that Mrs. Trew was getting beyond her depth in a morass of false testimony she was temporarily excused and her husband immediately brought before the committee. It was not long before he became involved in contradictory and patently perjurious statements and then both he and Mrs. Trew testified to the falsity of their testimony in the earlier part of the hearing. Upon George Trew's false testimony when first before the committee appellant's conviction of suborning him (count X) is based.

Counsel for appellant argue in their opening brief that the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Trew is so completely discredited and so inherently improbable and that their testimony and the testimony of Mrs. Davis, the mother of Mrs. Trew, is in such irreconcilable conflict with admitted circumstances that it does not constitute the type of substantial evidence essential to sustain a verdict of conviction on any of the counts involving appellant with Mr. or Mrs. Trew.

In reply to this argument it may be said that the jury was instructed as follows:

"* * * A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony as to any matter material to the cause on trial.

"A witness willfully false in one material part of his or her testimony is to be distrusted in other; that is to say, the jury may reject the whole of the testimony of a witness who has willfully sworn falsely as to a material point; and the jury, being convinced that a witness has stated what was untrue as to a material point, not as a result of mistake or inadvertence, but willfully and with the design to deceive, may treat all of his or her testimony with distrust and suspicion, and reject all unless they shall be convinced that he or she has in other particulars sworn to the truth." (Italics added.)

There can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who reads the transcript in this case that the members of this jury knew they were listening to the testimony of admitted perjurers, but they also knew that people of that type are the very ones who may be most easily suborned or successfully solicited to commit perjury. They also saw the appellant on the stand and heard his testimony as a witness in his own behalf. They were charged by the court as to all witnesses as follows:

"The jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them and of the credibility of the witnesses who have testified in the case. The character of the witnesses, as shown by the evidence, should be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining their credibility and the facts as to whether they have spoken the truth. And the jury may scrutinize not only the manner of witnesses while on the stand, their relation to the case, if any, but also their degree of intelligence. A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies; his interest in the case, if any, or his bias or prejudice, if any, against one or any of the parties; by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty or integrity; however, said character evidence is to be considered by you for no other purpose whatever than to aid you in determining the credibility of said witness, or by contradictory evidence."

[1] It is apparent that the jury decided, as was their right, to give credence to the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Trew on the material points that resulted in appellant's convictions.

[2-5] Notwithstanding the many pages which counsel have devoted to the claimed inherent improbability of the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Trew, buttressing their arguments with contradictory statements made by those witnesses at various hearings (including a Grand Jury investigation in March 1940, and hearings before the State Bar trial committee in July and August, 1940), and calling our attention to inconsistencies on divers occasions in their attitude toward appellant, we fail to find it, or the testimony of Mrs. Davis, so "inherently improbable as to be impossible of belief" and therefore that it "must be considered to be in effect no evidence at all." This is the only condition which under the authority of People v. Von Perhacs, 20 Cal.App. 48, 51, 127 P. 1048, and cases therein cited, would warrant this court in disturbing the conclusion of the trial judge in passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdicts when considering the motion for a new trial. In the instant case the motion was made upon the ground, among others, that the verdicts rendered by the jury were contrary to the evidence. That there was a substantial conflict in the evidence produced at the trial there can be no doubt, and the rule in such a case is stated in the well-considered case Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 151, at page 162, 86 P. 178, at page 182: "Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, however much the evidence may preponderate against the verdict, the sole remedy of the aggrieved party is his application to the trial judge for a new trial. It is the duty of the trial judge, who has heard the evidence and had ample opportunity to judge as to the amount of credit to be given to the various witnesses, to grant a new trial when he is of the opinion that the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, notwithstanding that there is a substantial conflict therein. No such power exists in this court. * * * The final responsibility must rest where it is placed by the well-settled law, * * * with the trial court."

While this was a civil case tried by a jury the rule has at least as much validity in a criminal case, and in this criminal case the motion for a new trial was denied by the trial judge.

We have no doubt that the same arguments touching upon the weakness of the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Trew, which are presented so ably and at length in the appellant's briefs, were made eloquently and at length before the jury at the close of the trial and again when the motion for a new trial was heard by the trial judge, but it must be noted that the jurors were not limited in their consideration of the evidence to the statements of the Trews. Various other important matters were before them. For example, Cecil Borror, his brother William Floyd Borror and their friend Edward Miller, all of whom were injured in an automobile collision, testified that at approximately the time when they engaged appellant to represent them in damage actions he counselled them to follow a deceptive course which would tend to exaggerate their injuries. According to William Floyd Borror "he said I should lay there in bed, when I first got hurt, a little longer, and it would make the case look better," and Cecil Borror testified, "Well, he was telling Edward Miller not to go to work and my brother to take it easy" and as to his brother, William Floyd, * * * he said something about his head and back injuries would be best because they can't prove you are not hurt in the back and head and spine injuries." Edward Miller gave similar testimony: "He told us he wanted to be sure not to go around very much, because somebody might see us, and to stay off of street cars and everything, because if they would see us jumping on and off street cars like that and would take pictures of us going around like we were not hurt, we wouldn't have any chance. * * * Why, he talked more about the injuries, and I told him my head ached about a day or two days after the accident; and he told me to keep having headaches and playing like I had real dizzy spells, because he said I didn't have to be scared, because no X-rays and no doctor couldn't say there wasn't anything wrong with my head. * * * I told him I was running short of money; and he said I didn't have to worry about that, because he would fix it up to get some money for us so that we could let things get through and all, so that we could get some money; and he told me I couldn't go back to work for quite a while. * * * He said he would let me know when I could go back to work."

Mr. Charles P. Carter was injured in an automobile collision on November 11, 1938, and engaged appellant to represent him. In January following, his deposition was to be taken, and he detailed to the jury some of the advice given him by appellant as follows: "He said to stress my injuries, pile it on, that the doctors would back up whatever I testified to. * * * He said to tell them that I was unconscious for quite a while and to tell them that blood ran out of my ear, and several other things that I don't recall.

"Q. What did you say to him about the proposition of having blood run out of your ears? A. I told him none ran out, and that would be perjury and I wouldn't testify to that.

"Q. What did Mr. Gray say about that? A. He said the value of the case would be decreased considerably.

"Q. Was anything said about X-rays? A. Yes; he said that he would have some X-rays taken later on, that Dr. Walker was an X-ray expert at the Los Angeles County Hospital, and that no two doctors would read them alike and that Dr. Walker's reading of the X-rays would have a lot of weight in the case.

"Q. Did Mr. Gray at any time tell you what the blood in your ear would indicate? * * * As well as I recall, he said a basal fracture."

On cross-examination this witness testified as follows: "Q. Don't you know as a matter of common knowledge that a basal fracture of the skull is one of the most dangerous fractures of the skull and is accompanied by many more symptoms than blood running out of the ear? A. So Mr. Gray told me.

"Q. And don't you know that a person who gets a basal fracture of the skull is a very sick person for weeks at a time, and frequently dies? A. Mr. Gray told me just that."

It may be noted here that Mrs. Trew early in this trial gave the following testimony: "* * * when I entered the office, I asked Mr. Gray how I had done on my deposition; and he told me he was very disappointed and that I had not done as he told me to do; and that cases like that were settled out of court every day for $200.00 or $300.00; and that he had more money than that tied up in the case; and he had done quite a bit of work on it; and he told us then he was just going to have to put more into my deposition; he said he was going to put it in there that I had seen a drop of blood in the lobe of my ear. He said if there is a basic skull fracture and there was no X-ray, no doctor could tell any difference. My husband and I both told him we would not agree to anything like that; and he said, 'Well, it does not matter if you agree or not, I am going to put it in.' We told him if he did put it in he would put it in by himself and we didn't want anything to do with that * * *."

Mr. Trew's version was as follows: "Well, Mr. Gray was very disappointed in my wife's deposition. He told her he was very disappointed in it, and he said he settled cases every day like this for just a little,—he said a specific amount, but I don't remember what it was,—and he scolded her a good deal for not giving a good deposition and not saying everything he had told her to say; and he said that in order to get anything out of the case he would have to add something in the deposition, something about her ear. He said, 'We will put in there that you—I think he said have got a fracture at the base of the ear, and the X-ray can't prove anything there'."

We have thus far discussed the convictions which resulted from appellant's transactions with the Trews. The jury also heard testimony concerning his effort to persuade George Gallina to give false testimony concerning an automobile collision which Gallina witnessed, in the neighborhood of Bakersfield, and convicted him of soliciting perjury in regard thereto. The details of this offense are recited in count XII of the indictment as follows:

"That on or about the 22nd day of May, 1940, the said defendant Bingham Gray then and there knowing and believing that the said George Gallina was to become a witness for the superior court of the State of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, in connection with the aforesaid actions and suits by the said Jesse Webb, Frank Curtis and William B. Allen, and then and there knowing and believing that the said George Gallina was to be duly sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth with respect to material matters in the taking of testimony on direct and cross examination in the aforesaid suits and actions, said defendant, Bingham Gray, did knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and corruptly solicit the said George Gallina to willfully, knowingly, falsely and perjuriously testify, swear and state as a witness in the giving and taking of his testimony when called to the witness stand, in substance, as follows:

"That he did not notice whether the parties plaintiff, or any of them, had their hands out, or had a hand out, just prior to the collision, or whether they did not; that he, the said George Gallina did not remember if a hand signal was given and that he, the said George Gallina, should forget a few things and that he should forget that on the night of the accident occurring approximately September 29, 1939, out of which the aforesaid causes of actions arose, he did say that no hand signal was in fact given by parties plaintiff, or any of them, and that he should testify that he did not remember that he saw one way or another with regard to a hand signal being given in connection with the accident he had witnessed.

"That in truth and in fact, to the knowledge of the said defendant Bingham Gray, the said testimony so solicited by him was false in the following particulars:

"That the said George Gallina did have a clear and distinct recollection of the events connected with the accident occurring on September 29, 1939, out of which the aforesaid plaintiffs' causes of actions arose and that he did remember definitely and distinctly that no hand signal was given at any time that he observed the cars involved in the accident by anyone in the car in which plaintiffs were riding.

"That in truth and in fact said defendant Bingham Gray well knew the falsity and perjury of the statements and testimony which were so solicited by him to be made by the said George Gallina, under oath, at the time he was to be called as a witness, as aforesaid, and the said Bingham Gray well knew that the matters and things as to which he was soliciting said George Gallina to testify were not true to the knowledge of said George Gallina."

[6-8] It is contended that the evidence adduced at the trial was insufficient to sustain the conviction on this count. Three points are urged: first, that the subject concerning which perjury was solicited, was immaterial; second, that the testimony of George Gallina was not corroborated; and lastly, that his testimony was inherently improbable. As to the first point, —since the answer to the suit brought by appellant in behalf of his clients set up in general terms contributory negligence on their part, and since, according to Gallina's testimony, appellant solicited him to testify falsely concerning his observation upon that matter, it is apparent that appellant considered the subject very material. And, in our opinion, it was. Furthermore, Gallina told the jury that at the trial of the damage action he testified that he could have seen the hand signal if the driver of the coupe had his hand out; that when the coupe started to turn left he could still see a little ahead of him. The first point then, is not well taken. As to the second point, corroboration was furnished by Ann Gallina, the wife of George, who testified that at the time of the trial of the damage action appellant called at her home about 4:00 p.m. and waited there two hours or more for her husband. Meanwhile, upon learning that Gallina had been subpoenaed he said, according to Mrs. Gallina, "I wouldn't know what they are going to pay George", (referring to the insurance company), "I suppose just a few dollars. * * * Well, if he was my witness I could give him a little more money"; further that appellant said to her, "I wish you would talk to your husband and get him on my side, I would like him to help me." This conversation was said to have occurred some little time, days or weeks, after Gallina, according to his statement to the jury, had told appellant and his brother that he saw no hand out when the coupe made the turn. When, on the afternoon in question, after a two-hour wait on the part of appellant, Mr. Gallina finally came home, he and appellant engaged in conversation and the jury were told by Mrs. Gallina that she heard her husband say, "I am not for no one; I am just telling the truth. * * * I am only going to tell what I saw." Mrs. Gallina testified also that on a prior occasion, but after the accident, appellant called at her home while her husband was away and asked if she and her husband wanted to go out with him; proposed that Mrs. Gallina get him a girl, the four of them to go somewhere. Under the rule cited in People v. Todd, 9 Cal.App.2d 237, 242, 49 P.2d 611, corroborative testimony in a case of this sort need not be strong. We believe it was quite sufficient as herein shown, (See People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40; People v. Dahl, 107 Cal.App. 302, 290 P. 608; People v. Humphrey, 27 Cal.App.2d 631, 640, 81 P.2d 588), and we therefore omit reference to additional corroboration which was presented to the jury.

[9] As to the last point,—the argument that the testimony of Gallina is inherently improbable carries little weight in view of the fact that appellant called at the Gallina home and according to the witness Alma Pappas who accompanied him there, "mentioned that the Bakersfield case was being tried and Mr. Gallina said Yes, he knew it, he had been subpoenaed by the insurance company and had been in court for several days listening." The jury may have concluded (we almost said "must have concluded") that this visit at this critical time,—while the case in which Gallina was to be a witness was merely adjourned overnight,—had a special purpose and object in view; such, for instance, as a last chance to obtain perjured testimony in the tort action. Gallina's testimony in this criminal trial was not incredible in our opinion; quite to the contrary.

[10] Appellant complains that the court committed error in admitting as hearsay evidence a transcript of the testimony which was given by Mr. and Mrs. Trew during the second part of the proceeding before the State Bar committee on March 20, 1940, a hearing at which appellant was not present. This transcript was read to the jury after objection to its introduction was made and overruled. After the reading the following took place:

"Mr. Hanna (Attorney for Appellant): Your Honor please, at this time we move the court to instruct the jury, first, that no part of this evidence which has been introduced by this transcript of these proceedings before The State Bar committee on the evening of March 20th shall be considered or taken by them as any evidence of the testimony which either Mr. or Mrs. Trew gave that evening was untrue; secondly, that none of this evidence shall be taken by them as any evidence that anything related therein to have been done or said by Mr. Gray was done or was said.

"The Court: What is your position on that motion, Mr. Kearney?

"Mr. Kearney (Deputy District Attorney): Well, I think that motion is probably correct, that they are not to take the inference from the reading of that, they are to take it from the testimony of the witness on the stand; but that is put in merely to show the perjured testimony that is charged in some of the counts of the indictment. They can only take that as proof of what was testified to there, that is proof of the fact they testified there under oath. I think that is correct.

"The Court: The jury will be so instructed and admonished."

It is clear from this that the purpose of the district attorney was to satisfy the jury that the Trews in the second part of the hearing admitted the falsity of their statements, that is, their perjury, during the first part. They gave testimony to the same effect directly to the jury which tried this case, and in the presence of this appellant, thereby curing as respondent points out, any error which otherwise might be said to have arisen, notwithstanding the court's limitation upon the purpose for which the transcript was admitted.

[11] The claim is also made that the court erred in overruling appellant's objection to admission of the testimony of Charles P. Carter, and of Cecil Borror, William Floyd Borror, Edward Francis Miller and his mother, Mrs. Laura Miller. In answer to this objection it may be said that it appeared in certain counts in the indictment, as for example, in count VIII charging subornation, that The State Bar Special Local Administrative Committee, number 1, in pursuance of their duties under the law, conducted an inquiry into the ethics of Bingham Gray in practicing his profession as attorney-at-law and into his conduct as a member of the State Bar; that each of the above named witnesses was called before that committee and examined under oath concerning his dealings with appellant as hereinbefore related, and in view of the advice given the jury at the time objection was made it is our opinion that the court committed no error in this regard. The remarks of the court on this subject were as follows:

"* * * The court will advise the jury at this time that the evidence, if any, of general similar acts and transactions with parties not named in the indictment will be admitted for the limited purpose of evidence of common design of criminal enterprises, if any, charged in the hereinafter designated counts of the indictment, and for the limited purpose of proving a general plan or scheme to defraud, as well as to prove consciousness of guilt. Such evidence will be and is admitted only as to the following counts—and I would suggest that you make notations of these counts as to which this particular line of evidence will be limited—

"Counts 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 14."

[12] The jury were also given a written instruction on the same matter which will be quoted hereinafter. The correctness of the ruling as to the testimony of each and all of these witnesses is clearly established by a reference to People v. Baker, 25 Cal.App.2d 1, at page 4, 76 P.2d 111, at page 112, where the court says: "It is the next contention of the defendant that the court erred in refusing to strike the testimony relating to other offenses because the corpus delicti of the alleged similar offenses also was not sufficiently established. This evidence was admissible to show guilty knowledge and the intent of the defendant and to establish a definite prior design or system, and a continuing conspiracy, and it is not essential that such similar transactions shall have resulted in the commission of a crime. It is sufficient if they tend to prove a scheme of the defendant which included the acts charged."

[13] Objection is made by appellant to the latitude permitted by the court in the cross-examination of Miss Alma Pappas, a witness produced by the defense at the trial. It appeared that this witness, a close friend of appellant, who at one time wore his diamond ring, had had a falling-out with him some little time before the trial of this case but that they had made up their differences. When, at the trial, on direct examination she gave testimony strongly in his favor it was but natural and altogether proper for the district attorney to attack her credibility. In this connection he asked her if she had not told an investigator of the State Bar Association "to check the Trew matter, that there was something there and that Gray was plenty worried about it." To this the witness replied, "I may have said that, but it wasn't the truth." Since Miss Pappas had been called before the Grand Jury on March 26, 1940, and there made statements under oath directly contrary to those made under oath to the jury which tried this case the court committed no error in allowing searching cross-examination. Nothing appears in the record to indicate that it went beyond proper bounds in the effort to impeach the witness.

The trial of this case opened on Monday, March 10, 1941, and taking of testimony continued uninterruptedly on all court days until the last witness left the stand on Thursday, April 3rd. It finally went to the jury on Wednesday of the following week, the representatives of the District Attorney's office meantime taking approximately a day to present their opening and closing arguments; the two attorneys representing the appellant, three days. The jury returned with their verdicts on Friday, April 11th.

Considering the length of time spent in trial and the number of counts submitted for the jury's consideration it is not surprising that a large number of instructions were handed to the court. Some were given to the jury; some were refused; others were given as modified. So far as we can determine, the treatment accorded the submitted instructions was, in every instance, correct. Appellant's counsel have taken a different view, and with the same diligence and exhaustive argument that characterized their efforts in the courtroom they present to us, in their briefs, their objections. We have read them all and find that they have been carefully analyzed and ably refuted by respondent. Since the briefs can be read by anyone interested we do not feel warranted in discussing any of these objections at length but shall comment upon a few. One related to character testimony offered for and against the defendant. As to evidence that appellant's reputation for truth, honesty and integrity was bad, the court, at his request, charged the jury that such evidence "does not destroy, impair or affect the presumption of innocence, and must not be considered by you as having any effect toward counteracting that presumption. Neither does such evidence constitute any part of the evidence which the prosecution is required to introduce to prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in order to warrant a conviction upon any count contained in the indictment.

"The prosecution has introduced evidence attacking the general reputation of the defendant for truth, honesty and integrity.

"You are instructed that such evidence may be considered by you for the limited purpose only of determining the credibility of the defendant's testimony and the weight to be given to it. You must not consider such evidence as any evidence that the defendant is guilty of any of the offenses charged in the indictment or as evidence of the probability of the guilt of the defendant of any of the offenses charged in the indictment. Such evidence does not affect the question of guilt or innocence of the defendant to any extent except to the extent that it may be considered by you as affecting the credibility of the defendant's testimony."

At the request of the prosecution the following instruction was given:

> "Evidence of good character is evidence relevant to the question of guilty, or not guilty, and is to be considered by you in connection with the other facts and circumstances in the case. Evidence of good character may raise a reasonable doubt of guilt in a case in which, without such evidence, no such doubt would exist.
> "But if you are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty as charged in the information herein, it will be your duty to so find him, notwithstanding such evidence of good character."

[14] Appellant claims that there was an irreconcilable conflict between these two instructions which worked to his detriment. Upon a careful reading, however, it will be seen that the first instruction related to evidence introduced by the prosecution that the appellant's reputation was bad, while the other related to evidence introduced by the appellant that his reputation was good. In other words there was here no instruction upon the weight or effect of character testimony as such, but only as to the consideration that might be given to the evidence bearing upon appellant's bad reputation and to the opposing evidence bearing upon his good reputation. We see no real conflict between these two instructions relating to two different kinds of evidence, but to us it seems clear that, as appellant certainly suffered no impairment of his rights by reason of the instruction which his counsel requested, neither did he, by the instruction which told the jury that evidence of his good character might be sufficient to save him, at the jurors' hands, from what otherwise would be a verdict of guilty. People v. Baldocchi, 10 Cal.App. 42, 47, 101 P. 28; People v. Piner, 11 Cal. App. 542, 553, 105 P. 780; People v. Buchanan, 119 Cal.App. 523, 526, 6 P.2d 538.

[15] After the jurors retired to the jury room they were given all the written instructions which the court had previously read to them. Among these were proper instructions on the doctrine of the presumption of innocence and the requirement of proof beyond reasonable doubt. Another instruction received by the jury read as follows:

> "(~~You are instructed that~~) ~~y~~ou have no right to disregard the testimony of the defendant on the ground alone that he is a defendant and stands charged with the commission of the crime. (~~The law presumed the defendant to be innocent until he is~~ > ~~proven guilty, and~~) ~~t~~he law allows him to testify in his own behalf, and the jury should fairly and impartially consider his testimony, together with all the other evidence in the case, and if from all the evidence you have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, you should acquit him. (~~And in this connection you should remember that the defendant is presumed to speak the truth, and unless this presumption is destroyed by the evidence in the case, your oaths require you to find that he has spoken the truth~~)."

Because the jury thus beheld that the court struck out language which would have been merely repetitious, admitted so to be by appellant's counsel, they now claim that in some way the court erred. This is a groundless claim.

[16] "Appellant testified" (quoting from his counsel's brief) "that in 1938 he handled 27 personal injury cases involving aggregate recoveries of $64,115.00; that in 1939 he handled 27 personal injury cases involving aggregate recoveries of $99,303.45 and that during the first five months of 1940 he handled 12 personal injury cases involving aggregate recoveries of $41,609.54," and "it was shown that The State Bar Investigating Committee investigated approximately seventy-five of appellant's cases." It is urged therefore that the court erred in failing to give, in full, an instruction requested by appellant as follows:

> ~~"(You are instructed that)~~ ~~e~~vidence has been introduced of alleged offenses committed by the defendant other than those pleaded in the indictment. ~~(You are in-~~
> ~~structed that)~~ ~~s~~uch evidence may be considered by you only as bearing upon the question of whether there was a system or plan of the defendant to commit offenses of the type charged in the indictment or as evidence of guilty intent or as evidence of consciousness of guilt; (and in this connection you may properly consider the number and relation of the cases and transactions concerning which evidence has been introduced by the prosecution in proportion to the total number of cases or transactions of the defendant during the period of time to which the evidence introduced by the prosecution relates)." Instead, the court drew a line through the words and phrases which we have enclosed in parentheses and suffered the instruction in that condition to be seen by the jury. We do not believe the court erred in disapproving the portion of the instruction which was stricken, nor yet in permitting it to go to the jury in the form which counsel deprecates. If any of the jurors noticed the stricken portion they could only conclude that the court did not agree with appellant's counsel on the principle which they undertook to state, and since in our opinion the court was right, for a number of reasons which we shall not take time to state, no harm was done.

[17] Formula instructions were given on each of the counts upon which appellant was convicted. Each such instruction began with the following phrase in which the word "facts" was used by mistake for "statements." "If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the following facts are true then you should convict the defendant. * * *" This, as we all know, is a common error in the use of English, but we cannot believe the jurors were in any way misled by it, for by the very words of the quoted phrase they knew that they were charged with the duty of determining upon the evidence which had been presented to them whether certain things, incidents or elements thereafter listed in the instruction were or were not true.

They were also instructed that "Where, as in cases of perjury and of subornation of perjury, several distinct assignments of perjury are laid, the indictment will be sustained if any one of these be proved, if that, by itself, be sufficient to constitute the offense."

The formula instruction on count I read as follows: "If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the following facts are true, then you should convict the defendant of soliciting another to commit perjury, as charged in count I of the indictment.

"(1) That at all times mentioned in count I of the Indictment there was duly pending in the superior court of the State of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, the civil action referred to in count I of the Indictment, namely Natalie Patricia Trew v. Los Angeles Railway Corporation.

"(2) That said superior court had jurisdiction of said civil action.

"(3) That on or about February 16, 1939, at and in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, the defendant, knowing that the deposition of said Natalie Patricia Trew would be taken by the defendant in said civil action, and that said Natalie Patricia Trew would be sworn to testify to the truth in said deposition, did knowingly, willfully, unlawfully and corruptly solicit and instruct the said Natalie Patricia Trew to willfully, knowingly, falsely and perjuriously testify as a witness in said deposition in substance and effect as alleged in count I of the Indictment.

"(4) That said solicited testimony was false, as alleged in count I of the Indictment.

"(5) That said defendant knew said solicited testimony was false.

"(6) That said Natalie Patricia Trew knew that said solicited testimony was false.

"(7) That defendant knew that said Natalie Patricia Trew knew that said solicited testimony was false.

"(8) That said solicited testimony was material to the issues involved in said civil action. I instruct you as a matter of law, that said solicited testimony was material to the issues involved in said civil action." (Italics added.)

[18-21] We have emphasized the last sentence to indicate the main ground of appellant's objection to this instruction. Quoting from his brief, "This instruction told the jury, among other things, that all of the alleged solicited testimony, specified in count I was material." (Our italics.) He then recites certain items of alleged solicited testimony specified in count I, concluding "The jury was thus told that the above quoted statement about Dr. Moss was material testimony upon the taking of Mrs. Trew's deposition. The fact is that that testimony would never become material unless and until Dr. Moss took the witness stand and testified and then the only materiality of the testimony would be for the purpose of attacking Dr. Moss's credibility by showing his interest." Appellant then argues, "To constitute perjury, it is essential that the testimony be material at the time it is given." Here he overlooks the important point that count I did not charge appellant with the crime of perjury, but with the crime of soliciting Mrs. Trew to commit perjury. In such a situation respondent correctly states the rule in his brief: "Appellant argues throughout this topic of his brief the theory that the statements of Mrs. Trew were not perjury because they were not material and therefore appellant could not be guilty of the crime of solicitation under section 653f of the Penal Code. This is where he falls into error, commonly observed when a violation of section 653f of the Penal Code is involved. We repeat again, that in order for a person to be guilty of that section, it is not necessary that the person solicited shall actually commit perjury. Whether the false testimony that she gave at the taking of her deposition, and which was solicited by appellant, was, at the time of the taking of the deposition, perjurious, is entirely immaterial for a deposition taken under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure may be read into evidence, § 2022, Code of Civ.Proc., and if read into evidence and the testimony at that time material, it would be perjury. Appellant had no way in the world of knowing that the testimony he solicited Mrs. Trew to testify to falsely would not be material. He had every reason in the world to believe that Dr. Saul Moss, her attending physician, would testify concerning her injuries at the time of trial. That whether or not Dr. Moss was retained by appellant to look after Mrs. Trew (she not having heard of him previously) or whether he was her family physician and had been her aunt's physician for some time would certainly go to the doctor's interest and his credibility in the case. There of course can be no question that perjury can be assigned upon testimony which goes to the credit of a material witness in a case. People v. Metzler, 21 Cal.App. 80, 82, 130 P. 1192; People v. Barry, 63 Cal. 62, 64.

"The test of perjury is not whether the false testimony actually does influence the tribunal or jury but whether it can influence it. In re Braynard, 52 Cal.App. 631, 634, 199 P. 576.

"What has been said about the false testimony pertaining to Dr. Moss is true as to each of the other items of false testimony solicited by appellant of Mrs. Trew and above quoted."

[22] Similar complaints to the formula instructions on count II and count V are correctly disposed of by the same reasoning. As to the formula instruction on count V, appellant also complains that the State Bar Committee "* * * certainly had no power to inquire into the incident as to whether appellant had solicited Mrs. Trew to testify falsely upon the taking of her deposition. Such actions were not within the purview of the investigating authority of the committee and therefore testimony before the committee relating to such subjects was not material." This complaint is effectively answered by the following excerpt from respondent's brief: "Appellant also states that the resolution which was actually adopted authorizing the committee to investigate the subjects mentioned in the resolution confined its activities to ambulance chasing. The authorization quoted may in no way be so limited. It will be noted that the term 'ambulance chasing' is stated parenthetically. Ambulance chasing is properly used to embrace all forms of unethical solicitation and handling of nearly any type of litigation. The resolution permitted the Committee to investigate, among other things, 'evils incident thereto'—evils incident to the 'settlement, prosecution * * * of personal injury, * * * claims and litigation.' Certainly the solicitation of one to commit perjury in connection with the settlement of a personal injury action is an evil, incident to the settlement, prosecution, or defense of that particular personal injury claim.

"It therefore follows that the subject of inquiry followed by the Administrative Committee in question was material to its investigation and properly within the scope of its authorization."

[23] Various objections are made to the formula instruction on count VIII charging appellant with suborning Mrs. Trew, all of which in our opinion are sufficiently answered by respondent, reliance being had upon People v. Follette, 74 Cal.App. 178, at page 199, 240 P. 502, at page 511, in which case the court said: "The indictment, as we have already observed, contains a large number of assignments of perjury. It may be that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain all of such assignments, but the rule is well settled that, while the indictment may embrace two, or more, or many assignments of perjury, if the evidence sustains one or more of the assignments it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove all of the charges." The court here cites the case of State v. Taylor, 202 Mo. 1, 100 S.W. 41.

The objections to formula instructions on counts X and XII are similar to those urged against other instructions herein mentioned, and are equally groundless.

[24] Appellant claims that he was prejudiced by the court's refusal to instruct the jury as follows: "You are instructed that the fact that the court has advised you to return a verdict of acquittal on two of the counts in the Indictment is not to be taken by you as any indication that you should convict the defendant on any of the counts in the Indictment." Since the jury was adequately instructed upon reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence, he was sufficiently protected under the law; this instruction, therefore, was unnecessary and the court did not err in refusing to give it.

[25] An additional instruction which the court refused to give was this: "You are instructed that counts I and II of the Indictment are alternative counts, and you must not convict the defendant of the offenses charged in both of said counts." Appellant states that "This instruction became particularly essential and proper in view of the fact that the court instructed the jury that they might find the appellant guilty of attempted subornation of perjury under the allegations of count II of the indictment," and argues that counts I and II were based upon identical acts of the appellant. Count I was based on an act charged to have been committed on or about February 2, 1939; namely, soliciting Mrs. Trew to commit perjury. On February 16, 1939, Mrs. Trew went before the notary public who took her deposition, swore to tell the truth and lied. If this were perjury the crime of suborning it would be complete on that date and not before. But section 124, Penal Code, says, "The making of a deposition, affidavit or certificate is deemed to be complete, within the provisions of this chapter, from the time when it is delivered by the accused to any other person, with the intent that it be uttered or published as true." Mrs. Trew, according to the record, failed to sign or deliver her deposition and it may be that for that reason the court felt justified in instructing the jury that "the evidence as to count II of the indictment has failed to prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the crime of Subornation of Perjury in violation of section 127 of the Penal Code." This was followed by the further instruction: "You are further advised however, that you have the right, in your discretion under the evidence, as to count II, to find the defendant guilty of the crime of Attempt to commit the crime of Subornation of Perjury, a felony, as the crime of Attempt has been defined for you in these instructions. You are not bound by the court's advice in this connection." The attempt became complete when Mrs. Trew gave her false testimony on February 16th and not until then. It is manifest, therefore, that counts I and II were not based on identical acts and appellant was not aggrieved by the court's refusal to give the requested instruction.

[26, 27] Another instruction which the court refused to give read as follows: "You are instructed that the defendant is presumed not only to be innocent of the offenses charged in the indictment, but of any other offense, and you must presume that the defendant was innocent in all of his other acts and transactions revealed by the evidence, unless you are convinced to the contrary by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt." That no error arose from this refusal appears from the reasoning of respondent as follows: "The instruction thus proposed by appellant, would have made it necessary for the jury to find appellant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the other alleged offenses. This is not the law and it is not necessary that the evidence of other offenses be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. In Lund v. State, 1934, 207 Ind. 347, 190 N.E. 850, at page 853, the court said: 'Appellant tendered instruction No. 4, which was to the effect that the evidence concerning other and similar transactions, which was admissible for the purpose of showing knowledge, must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt before it could be considered by the jury. The instruction was properly refused. It is only the ultimate material facts to which the rule of reasonable doubt applies. The facts regarding the other transactions were simply evidentiary facts introduced for the purpose of being considered, together with all of the other evidence in the case, upon the question of criminal knowledge and intent; and though the jury may have entertained some reasonable doubt as to some of the other transactions, or some of the other items of evidence, which tend to prove guilty knowledge or intent, if, notwithstanding that fact, and having considered the evidentiary facts, doubtful and otherwise, they were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the ultimate fact of guilty knowledge and intent, it is sufficient'."

In addition, we may say that defendant was not on trial before this jury for all his other acts and transactions revealed by the evidence. If any of them had been charged as crimes against him of course he would have been entitled, as to each offense so charged, to an instruction such as immediately follows. The court properly instructed the jury as to the counts on which he was tried, in this language: "A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal but the effect of this presumption is only to place upon the state the burden of proving him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

[28] Appellant claims that error arose when the court refused to instruct the jury as follows: "The court has permitted the prosecution to introduce evidence of other acts of the defendant claimed by the prosecution to constitute offenses similar to those charged in the indictment. You must determine the question as to whether or not the defendant committed any such similar offenses solely upon the evidence introduced, and you must not speculate or indulge in any conjecture that there were any other acts of the defendant which constituted similar offenses and concerning which no evidence has been introduced."

"In the cross-examination of certain witnesses testifying upon the question of the defendant's reputation, questions were asked which implied or suggested that the defendant had been guilty of acts of misconduct concerning which no evidence has been introduced.

"You are instructed that since no evidence upon such subjects was introduced, you must conclusively presume that defendant was innocent of any such suggested acts of misconduct."

Inasmuch as the jury was instructed "to judge of the facts upon the testimony and other evidence produced here in court" and "You are to be governed therefore solely by the evidence introduced in this trial and the law as given you by the court. The law will not permit jurors to be governed by mere sentiment, conjectures * * ," we feel that no error arose in the court's refusal to give these instructions. Respondent calls our attention to the fact that "every objection to questions asked on cross-examination of character witnesses offered by appellant, which questions implied or suggested that appellant had been guilty of acts of misconduct other than those upon which evidence was introduced, was sustained, and the following instruction, therefore, applies: ' * * and if any counsel has intimated by questions, which the court has not permitted to be answered, that certain things are, or are not, true, you must disregard such questions and refrain from any inferences based upon them'"; and "Furthermore, the court expressly instructed the jury at the request of the defendant that evidence attacking the general reputation of the defendant for truth, honesty and integrity should not be considered as evidence that the defendant was guilty of any of the offenses charged in the indictment or as evidence of the probability of guilt of the defendant, and that such evidence was admissible only for the purpose of determining his credibility."

Appellant complains of the court's action in refusing to give other requested instructions but we find no merit in any of them.

[29] He also charges the deputy district attorney who prosecuted this case with misconduct in many particulars; but as to almost all the specifications noted in his brief there was no assignment whatever made during the trial. The rule in such a case was stated in simple language in People v. Brittan, 118 Cal. 409, at page 412, 50 P. 664, at page 666: "As to the misconduct of the district attorney, there was no objection made nor exception taken, and it cannot be reviewed." This rule is established by a legion of authorities, many of which are noted in 7 McKinney's Digest, section 1092 et seq. The reason for it is stated in People v. Stein, 23 Cal.App. 108, at page 118, 137 P. 271, at page 275, as follows: "Over and over again, the appellate courts of this state have held that objectionable remarks by the district attorney in a criminal case will not be reviewed or considered unless they have been objected to at the time they were made, so that the trial court may be accorded an opportunity to counteract, if it can thus be done, their effect upon the jury." See, also, People v. Kizer, 22 Cal.App. 10, at page 20, 133 P. 516, 520, 521, 134 P. 346. In the latter case the court points out that "It is not, however, in every case that a reviewing court will restrict its examination to cases where objections are made. There are such flagrant violations of the rights of defendants that an admonition by the court, after objection, may not remove the prejudicial impression irresistibly made upon the minds of the jury by such unwarranted comment." We have given careful consideration to each and every charge of misconduct, itemized by this appellant, whether objected to or not, and find that there was no flagrant or any violation of his rights. He had the good fortune to be defended by attorneys, always on the alert to protect him from any possible invasion or disregard of his rights, and all objections interposed in his behalf as the case proceeded were promptly, and in our opinion, fairly ruled upon. And so it was, in regard to the closing argument. It must be remembered that for three full days the cause of the defendant had been presented to the jury by attorneys skilled in logic, rhetoric and oratory but no record of that presentation is before us. It is clear, however, that certain portions of the argument by the people's representative, which appellant's attorneys now find objectionable, were directed to matters discussed by them in their arguments. If such comment were before us it might be that the prosecutor's answer would seem mild indeed, but regardless of that, and studying each instance of alleged misconduct in the light of authorities cited by counsel for the appellant and for the people, we do not feel that this appellant suffered any prejudice to his rights. The remarks of Mr. Justice Burnett in People v. Burke, 18 Cal.App. 72, at pages 102 and 106, 122 P. 435, at pages 449, and 450, are peculiarly applicable to the situation under discussion and we pause to quote them: "* * * Manifestly, some allowance must be made for the zeal of attorneys and some confidence reposed in the intelligence and fairness of the jury, and it may be said, generally, that every statement of the district attorney criticised by appellant is less objectionable than what has been held by the Supreme Court to be insufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment. * * * The representative of the people, it is true, conducted the prosecution with a good deal of vigor. Without it, however, he could not hope to prevail against the alert, aggressive, and able counsel for appellant who stubbornly contested every inch of the way. * * * In a word, appellant was fairly tried and justly convicted. The record is unusually free from error * * * we are convinced that no appellate court would be justified in interfering with the judgment of the trial court."

[30] As to the charges of misconduct in this case we agree with counsel for respondent when he says: "In many of the instances here claimed to be misconduct, the record shows absolute silence by defense counsel at the time. In others an assignment was made and denied because the conduct was not misconduct. In others the assignment was recognized and the jury properly instructed. Absolutely no showing is made that in the instances where no objection was made an assignment would 'have been futile'." Nor was appellant in any way prejudiced by the court's rulings upon points of evidence or generally in the conduct of his trial. If, notwithstanding our opinion as hereinbefore expressed, any error has crept into this case, the judgments should stand, nevertheless, under section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution of California, since no miscarriage of justice has resulted. The fact that the same jury which convicted appellant upon six counts involving the Trews acquitted him on four others in which they were involved, is an indication that they understood the instructions of the court, bearing upon the presumption of innocence and the requirement of proof beyond reasonable doubt. Their ability to distinguish between the merits of the different counts from a legal point of view satisfies us that they were sensible and reasonable individuals. As such they would have been justified in concluding that Mrs. Trew's injuries did not warrant an honest claim for more than $200 or $300, an estimate of their value which she once attributed to appellant. The evidence showed that on this claim he secured a settlement, within a few months, in the sum of $6,000. The participation of the Trews in that dishonest transaction cannot be excused, but they were not on trial before this jury, while the appellant was. In fact, he was the principal actor, and the jurors by their verdicts, convicting him of soliciting and suborning perjury in connection with the claim and the investigation concerning it, demonstrated their belief that his was the master mind which conceived and carried out the fraud.

The judgments are each and all affirmed. The order of the trial court denying a new trial upon any of the counts is also affirmed.

PECK v. PECK.

Civ. 13419.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
June 23, 1942.

1. Divorce 🔑160

Where a hearing on defendant's cross-complaint for a divorce was in the nature of a default, trial court was without authority to grant support money to defendant when prayer for support money had been dropped from amended cross-complaint.

2. Judgment 🔑117

In any action which is heard as a default matter, the defendant may rely upon the fact that no judgment can be had against him in excess of or beyond the prayer of the complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Edward Bishop Peck against Erna Rubinstein Peck for annulment of marriage in which defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From a decree awarding defendant a divorce and award of alimony, plaintiffs appeal.

Decree modified and as so modified, affirmed.

Shattuck & MacCarthy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elliot F. Wolf, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

In a complaint for annulment of marriage it was alleged that the plaintiff and defendant were married in Yuma, Arizona, and that the defendant refused at all times thereafter to live with or cohabit with the plaintiff as his wife. Answer was filed denying the allegations of refusal to cohabit. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint for divorce alleging cruelty and failure to provide. In the prayer of the cross-complaint was a clause praying for support and maintenance of defendant during the pendency of the action and thereafter. Answer to the cross-complaint was duly filed.

Thereupon defendant filed an amended cross-complaint alleging in addition to the matters above set forth that she and the plaintiff had entered into a property settlement agreement. The property settlement agreement was made a part of the cross-complaint. It provided that the plaintiff pay defendant's counsel fees and costs in the sum of $115, which was agreed to be a full and complete settlement of all claims of defendant upon the plaintiff. Also the amended cross-complaint dropped that clause of the prayer above referred to, asking for support money.

The cause was called for trial as a default on the amended cross-complaint. Counsel for both plaintiff and defendant appeared and participated therein. There was testimony to support a finding of cruelty, although at best the parties lived together a few days less than five months and one was about as able to support himself as the other. The trial judge refused to be bound by the terms of the property agreement in respect of support money for the defendant, and made a minute order directing the preparation of an interlocutory decree of divorce for the defendant and the payment by plaintiff to her of $50 a month until the further order of the court.

Then the trial court of its own motion and without prior notice to counsel vacated the above-mentioned minute order, and set the case down for trial "on its merits." Counsel for plaintiff noticed a motion to be heard at the same time, requesting the court to vacate its order awarding alimony. Upon the hearing thus set by the court, both plaintiff and defendant and their counsel appeared, testimony was taken and argument was had. The motion to enter different decree was denied, and the decree awarding defendant $50 per month was ordered to stand. Upon the same date the trial court signed the interlocutory divorce, and award of alimony, from which this appeal is taken.

[1] While there is some dissimilarity in the facts involved, the situation so far as the law is concerned is the same as in the recent case of Darsie v. Darsie, 49 Cal.App.2d 491, 122 P.2d 64. In the present case, regardless of the statement in the minute order setting a date for trial on the merits, both hearings on the cross-complaint were in the nature of a default. There being no prayer for it in the cross-complaint, the trial court was without authority to grant any support money to the defendant and cross-complainant. Darsie v. Darsie, supra, and cases therein cited.

[2] The gravamen of the rule to be here applied is that in any action which is heard as a default matter, the defendant may rely upon the fact that no judgment can be had against him in excess of or beyond the prayer of the complaint. Without such a rule, no defendant would be safe in permitting any case to go against him by default, because there could be no assurance that the judgment would not go beyond the relief prayed for in the complaint. In the case now under consideration, the plaintiff and cross-defendant and his counsel had every right to rely upon the fact that no alimony was asked for in the cross-complaint. As pointed out in the Darsie case, this rule does not deprive the court of the power to grant alimony in a proper case. This could have been done by ordering that the default be set aside, the prayer of the cross-complaint amended to demand alimony, and served upon the plaintiff, or by appropriate proceedings upon an order to show cause.

The decree is modified by striking therefrom the following: "It is adjudged further that plaintiff and cross-defendant, Edward Bishop Peck, pay to defendant and cross-complainant, Erna Rubinstein Peck, the sum of Fifty Dollars ($50.00) per month as and for her support and maintenance, beginning on the 1st day of September, 1941, and payable in monthly installments thereafter until further Order of Court." As so modified the decree is affirmed.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff insurance company brought this action to recover taxes paid under protest to defendant state treasurer. The amended complaint prayed for a total refund of $330,348.22. At the time of trial plaintiff dismissed a portion of its claim amounting to $32,002.62, leaving in issue its claim for a refund in the amount of $298,345.60. The trial court, by its judgment, determined that plaintiff was entitled to a refund of $17,443.66. From this judgment both the insurance company and the state treasurer appeal, plaintiff claiming it is entitled to a refund of the total amount claimed, and defendant claiming that plaintiff is entitled to no refund at all.

The tax here in controversy is provided for by article XIII, section 14(b) of the Constitution. The section was added to our Constitution in 1910 and reads as follows: "Every insurance company or association doing business in this state shall annually pay to the state a tax of one and one half per cent upon the amount of the gross premiums received upon its business done in this state, less return premiums and reinsurance in companies or associations authorized to do business in this state * * * ." Section 14 was materially amended in 1933, and again in 1938, but, so far as the problem here presented is concerned, the language of this portion of the section has not been materially changed. It will be noted that under the constitutional provision the tax is imposed on "every insurance company * * * doing business in this state" and is levied upon "gross premiums received upon its business done in this state, less return premiums * * *."

This litigation involves the tax payable by plaintiff in the year 1935, predicated upon business transacted in this state during the calendar year 1934. It was stipulated that in 1935 the State Board of Equalization assessed and levied a tax against plaintiff of $490,584.14 and that included therein were taxes of $298,345.60 based on the amounts received during 1934 by plaintiff as considerations for annuity contracts sold by it in California. On plaintiff's appeal the sole question presented is whether the considerations received by it upon the sale in California of annuity contracts are taxable under the above quoted constitutional provision. This turns upon whether such considerations can properly be considered as "gross premiums received upon its business done in this state" as those terms are used in the constitutional provision. The trial court held that such considerations were part of plaintiff's "gross premiums" and were therefore taxable.

It was also stipulated that during the calendar year 1934 plaintiff paid refunds and cash values to holders of annuity contracts residing in California in the sum of $670,909.94. The trial court held that these refunds and cash values were "return premiums" as those terms are used in the constitutional provision above quoted, and held that the tax on the same amounting to $17,443.66, should be refunded. It is from this portion of the judgment that defendant appeals.

Appeal of Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

As already indicated, plaintiff paid the questioned tax under protest, and brought this action for a refund. The trial court overruled the demurrer of defendant, indicating that he then believed that the complaint, prima facie, stated a cause of action and that the case should go to trial where evidence of contemporaneous construction of the constitutional provision could be introduced. Although the parties stipulated to many facts, a protracted trial was had to determine the proper construction of the section, and to determine whether there had been a contemporaneous construction of the section by the taxing authorities. On the basic questions presented to it the trial court found:

"VI. That at the time of the adoption of article XIII, section 14(b) of the Constitution of California in the year 1910, the word 'premium' was used by various life insurance companies and others to describe the consideration for annuity contracts; that at that time, prior thereto, and ever since, and now, life insurance companies have engaged and do now engage in the business of writing such annuity contracts, and that the business of writing such annuity contracts has ever since been and is now one of the recognized businesses in California in which life insurance companies as such were and are authorized to engage."

"VII. That since the adoption of said article XIII, section 14(b) of the Constitution of California, life insurance companies have been at all times required by law to make and file annually with the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California a report or return showing the total amount of gross premiums received from business done in this state; that the several insurance commissioners since the adoption of said article XIII, section 14(b), have at all times required life insurers to include in such return of their gross premium receipts for taxation purposes the considerations or premiums received from the issuance and sale of annuity contracts in the State of California; that prior to and since the adoption of said article XIII, section 14(b), of the Constitution, the several insurance commissioners have construed said article XIII, section 14(b), of the Constitution of California as requiring the inclusion of such annuity premiums as a part of their return of gross premiums from business done in this state upon which the tax is authorized to be levied by said constitutional provision."

On this appeal the contending parties each rely on two main lines of argument. Plaintiff contends that the word "premiums" as used by insurance companies, by people connected therewith, and by the public generally, in 1910, did not include the considerations paid for annuity contracts. Defendant makes the opposite contention, it being his position that the consideration paid for an annuity contract is commonly referred to by experts and by the public as a "premium," and that the term should be so construed in the constitutional provision here in question.

Plaintiff next contends that, if the word, as used in the constitutional provision, is ambiguous, the ambiguity was removed by administrative interpretation both before and after the adoption of the constitutional provision, and that this contemporaneous construction should control. Defendant seeks to demonstrate in his brief that the administrative authorities never construed the tax provision as not applying to the consideration paid for annuities.

The problem as to whether a tax on "premiums" includes a tax on the consideration paid for an annuity, while never before directly presented in this state, has been presented to the appellate courts of several of the states. An examination of those cases shows that they are in hopeless conflict with strong dissenting opinions in each line of authority. These cases will be referred to later in this opinion, reference now being made to the conflicting lines of authority for whatever weight such fact may have in determining whether the term is ambiguous.

As already indicated, the trial court found on the disputed question of administrative construction that since the adoption of the constitutional provision the various insurance commissioners had at all times required life insurers to include in their return of gross premiums the considerations received from the issuance of annuity contracts, and that prior to, and since, 1910, the several insurance commissioners construed the provision as requiring the inclusion of annuity premiums.

Plaintiff refers to a discussion between court and counsel with regard to this finding which it seeks to construe in its favor. During a discussion over the settlement of findings the trial court expressed some doubt as to whether such a finding should have been made, and finally stated: "In other words, I don't think there is any real conflict on either question, although I do appreciate that the Courts have held that conflicting inferences may be drawn from the same facts." Plaintiff suggests that this finding was outside the issues, and contends that the evidence shows incontrovertibly that the contemporaneous administrative construction was opposed to the finding, and interprets the above statement of the trial court as supporting that contention. Such interpretation is not correct. It is quite clear that the trial court meant that a "finding" on this issue had no place in the findings because it believed that there was no conflict in the evidence as to the interpretation of the commissioners, which interpretation was to the effect that considerations paid for annuities must be included as "premiums"; that the legal effect of such administrative interpretation in fixing the meaning of the constitutional provision was a question of law, and did not involve a resolution of a conflict in the evidence. Certainly, the trial court did not indicate that it believed the finding was opposed to the evidence.

[1] As to the finding being outside the issues, it is quite clear that contemporaneous construction is a guide to the interpretation of a doubtful statute. A finding as to such construction in the present case would be without the issues only if the present provision can be said to be free from ambiguity. Of course, each party to this appeal contends that it is free from ambiguity, each ascribing a different meaning to the term. In view of the contrariety of decisions, and prevalence of dissenting opinions in each line, it seems quite clear that the meaning of the term is not entirely free from doubt.

Before directly discussing the proper meaning of the provision in question some reference must be made to its background and to related statutory provisions. Prior to 1910 insurance companies were taxed by statute, the tax being based on a percentage of "gross premiums." Stats. of 1903, p. 359; Stats. of 1905, p. 136. The constitutional provision here in question was adopted in 1910 as part of a rather broad revision of the tax structure. The report of the tax commission indicates that, so far as the insurance company tax is concerned, the constitutional amendment was not designed to make a change in the existing system. Plaintiff contends that before the provision was placed in the Constitution it had acquired a well-defined meaning which excluded the consideration paid for annuities from the category of "premiums," and contends that the presumption is, that the provision, when placed in the Constitution, was intended to have the same meaning.

[2, 3] It is quite clear that an annuity contract differs from a life insurance contract. The risk is fundamentally different in the two contracts. In a life insurance policy the risk assumed is to pay upon the assured's death; in a pure annuity contract the risk assumed is to pay as long as the assured may live. But, although an annuity contract is not a life insurance contract it is equally clear that the sale of annuity contracts in California is part of the business done by insurance companies. In fact, only insurance companies may engage in the sale of annuities in this state. As early as 1913 the attorney general of this state ruled that in order to qualify for the purpose of selling annuities, a company had to qualify as an insurance company. This opinion is undoubtedly in conformance with past and existing statutory provisions. Section 594 of the Political Code a originally enacted in 1907, Stats. of 1907, p. 141, classified "all insurance business" in this state into "thirteen kinds." The first subdivision then read as follows: "Life insurance business, including endowments and annuities * * * ." Although that section has frequently been amended, substantially that same language has remained in the law since 1907. In 1935, section 594 of the Political Code was repealed and its provisions carried into the Insurance Code. Stats. of 1935, p. 496. As amended in 1939 (Stats. of 1939, p. 2637), section 100 of that code divides insurance into twenty classes, of which subd. 1 is life insurance. Section 101 reads: "Life insurance includes insurance upon the lives of persons or appertaining thereto, and the granting, purchasing, or disposing of annuities." See, also § 2762, Civ.Code, now § 10170, Insurance Code. St.1935, p. 639. This statutory classification makes it clear that in this state the selling of annuities is part of the "business done in this state" by life insurance companies as such terms are used in article XIII, section 14(b). If the tax imposed by the Constitution were simply on "business done in this state" by insurance companies there could be no doubt at all but that the considerations received upon the sale of annuities would be taxable. But the constitutional provision is more limited. It does not impose the tax on all business done by insurance companies in this state, but only on the "gross premiums received upon its business done in this state." It is obvious that the constitutional provision did not intend to tax all receipts of insurance companies. It is not a gross receipts tax. Income from rentals, investments, etc., is obviously not included. But it seems equally clear that it was the intent of the constitutional provision to tax all receipts that could reasonably be classified as "premiums." With this obvious purpose in mind we turn then to the question as to whether the term "premiums" reasonably includes considerations received on the sale of annuity contracts.

Plaintiff urges that the term "premiums" technically, historically and generally refers only to the consideration received upon the sale of a life insurance policy. In its opening brief it makes the statement: "Historically, also, the word 'premium' means a compensation paid for insurance. As used by legal writers, the compensation for an annuity is never termed a 'premium,' but is spoken of consistently as the 'consideration.'" App.Op.Br., p. 6. Again at page 36 of that brief appears the following: "At the time of the constitutional amendment of 1910, and for centuries before that, neither the general public, nor legislators, lawyers, nor judges used the word 'premium' to designate the consideration for an annuity." If these statements were borne out by the record they would constitute a complete justification for plaintiff's position, and require a reversal. But the plain fact is that such statements are in direct opposition to what the record here shows. A considerable portion of defendant's case was devoted to demonstrating that in 1910, and prior and subsequent thereto, life insurance companies, their actuaries and agents, authors of legal texts, and judges and authors of insurance texts, referred to the consideration paid for an annuity as a "premium." Several hundred pages of transcript are devoted to that sole purpose as are many of the exhibits. In view of this overwhelming showing, the statements above quoted are simply contrary to the evidence.

Space does not permit an exhaustive reference to the many exhibits introduced or read into evidence by defendant on this issue. A few will suffice to demonstrate the point. Defendant's exhibit 26 was an excerpt from "Practical Lessons in Actuarial Science" (2d ed., 1905), by Miles Dawson, a recognized authority in the insurance field. In a chapter headed "Definition of 'Premium'" Mr. Dawson states: "The Institute of Actuaries' Text-Book defines Premium as follows: 'The sum, whether single or periodical, which is payable in consideration of a benefit, is usually called a premium.' This definition does not include the idea that the premium must be sufficient or at least equal to the present value of the benefit, nor indeed does that idea properly enter into the definition of the word. The distinction is all the more important as the actuary in his ordinary work is engaged in finding present values of sufficient premiums and thus always has the question of the sufficiency of a premium in view. It is beyond question, however, that a sum of money paid and received in consideration for an insurance, endowment or annuity is a premium, whether it be sufficient or not from an actuarial standpoint. A very simple definition would seem to be: 'A premium is the price of an insurance, endowment or annuity.'" Defendant has collected on pages 21 to 30 of his brief quotations from eight or nine recognized text books in the insurance field, some written prior to 1910 and some subsequent thereto, all referring to the consideration paid for an annuity as a "premium." In Blackstone's Commentaries, Book II, page 461 (Lewis' Edition) appears the following: "Thirdly, the practice of purchasing annuities for lives at a certain price or premium, instead of advancing the same sum on an ordinary loan, arises usually from the inability of the borrower to give the lender a permanent security for the return of the money borrowed, at any one period of time. * * *"

In the Encyclopedia Britannica published in 1907 there is an article on "Annuities" and many examples of how they are computed in which the consideration for an annuity is referred to as the "annual premium."

There were introduced into evidence by defendant several booklets of the Actuarial Society of America published in 1905, 1907, 1908 and 1910. These exhibits contain questions given in examinations by the Society to applicants for membership. In many of the questions therein referring to annuities the consideration therefor was designated as a "premium." Rate books of various insurance companies doing business in California prior and subsequent to 1910, including some of plaintiff's, were admitted in evidence. In practically all of these rate books, including some introduced by plaintiff, the consideration for an annuity was referred to as a "premium." Professor Mowbray, an outstanding authority in the insurance field, and consulting actuary for the insurance commissioner, and who was a fulltime actuary with that department from 1908–10, when asked what was generally the term applied to the consideration paid to insurance companies for annuities at or about 1910, testified: "As I recall the books and articles that were written prior to that time, and having to rule out some that I have been familiar with since, the terminology varied somewhat. The term 'premium' was sometimes used; the term 'value of annuities,' particularly in technical actuarial work, was used; and in some instances 'consideration'; but my recollection is that the more common use was to designate it as 'premiums.'" This was based on information gained from insurance texts, rate books, etc. He also testified that he had examined several books, popular and technical, written about that period and that he was quite sure that he did not find one in which the word "premium" was not used in connection with annuity contracts. Mae Barr Long, deputy insurance commissioner since 1923 and who has been connected with the department since 1906, testified that in all rate books she examined prior to 1910 compensation for annuities was always referred to as a "premium."

In addition to this exhaustive and convincing proof as to the meaning of the term "premium" at or about 1910, and later, the parties stipulated that the tax here involved was imposed upon considerations received on certain designated types of policies which were attached to the stipulation. There are several very interesting facts about these policies. In the first place, nearly every one of them refers to the consideration to be paid as a "premium." In the second place, almost all the policies had incorporated therein a life insurance feature. A few examples will suffice to demonstrate the point. The first policy introduced is called a "Retirement Annuity." Throughout that form the consideration for the policy is referred to as a "premium." On the outside of the specimen policy appears "Life Annuity beginning at age 65 of $79.00 per month. Number of Premium Units:—Two; Age at Issue 35; Annual Premium $200.00. * * * Premiums payable until commencement of annuities." The contract entered into is to pay the annuitant a specified number of monthly payments beginning at a specified age. In giving the annuitant various options, the phrase "provided premiums have been duly paid" several times appears. In the event the annuitant dies before any payments are made, a minor life insurance feature is incorporated in the policy.

The next policy introduced was called a "Cash Refund Annuity." While it has no life insurance features, on the outside of the policy appears "Single Premium, Non-Participating."

The third policy—Exhibit C—is a deferred annuity. It has a column headed "Annual Premium"; and another "Annual Premium Payable for * * * Years", and provides that in case of death of annuitant prior to the date of the first annuity payment "all premiums paid hereon" shall be refunded to a designated person. It also provides that annuity payments are in consideration of a designated number of "full years' premiums." A grace of thirty-one days "will be granted for the payment of every premium. * * *" In several other places the consideration paid for the policy is described as a "premium." An insurance feature is a part of this policy.

In all but one of the specimen policies a similar situation prevails. They all consistently refer to the consideration paid by the purchaser as a premium and nearly all of them have incorporated in varying degrees a life insurance feature.

While it is true that these are policies issued in 1934 (the year here in question) and not the policies issued in 1910, they are some evidence of what this plaintiff now considers the proper interpretation of the word under construction.

In the face of this evidence, it is obvious that the term "gross premiums," as used in the constitutional provision, is, to say the least, capable of the interpretation that it includes the consideration paid for an annuity. It is true that plaintiff refers to several dictionary definitions of the term "premium" (Webster, Century, Bouvier and other authorities) which generally describe the term as the consideration paid for "a contract of insurance." It is very natural to find in such general definitions a reference to contracts of insurance, but the showing made by plaintiff demonstrates that the overwhelming number of authorities, both technical and general, when speaking specifically of annuities, refer to the consideration paid therefor as a "premium."

To overcome this showing plaintiff relies on two main arguments:

[4] First, it urges, that if the consideration for an annuity be called a "premium," it is not a premium for "life insurance." In plaintiff's analysis, the tax, so far as it is concerned, reaches only premiums paid on life insurance. The section does not so provide. It imposes the tax on every insurance company doing business in this state, and the tax is imposed upon "the gross premiums received upon its business done in this state * * *" —not upon gross premiums on its life insurance business done in this state. As already pointed out, the sale of annuities is part of the business done by insurance companies in this state. This argument is without merit.

[5] The second argument advanced by plaintiff to meet the convincing showing made by defendant as to the proper meaning of the term "premiums," is that prior to 1910, and for twenty years thereafter, the constitutional provision was interpreted by the taxing authorities as not imposing a tax on the consideration received for annuities. The complete answer to this argument is that the record does not support plaintiff's contention. While it is true that the record definitely shows that the plaintiff did not include annuity premiums in its annual returns made to the insurance commissioner for the years 1930 to 1934, the record is very sketchy as to what plaintiff did prior to that time. Moreover, there is no evidence that the insurance commissioner knew that this plaintiff or any other insurance company was not reporting annuity considerations, or that he actively or passively acquiesced in such practice. Plaintiff relies strongly on the form provided by the insurance commissioner prior and subsequent to 1910 for the report of the gross premiums of insurance companies for purposes of the tax. This state form, in use in substantially the same form so far as this problem is concerned from 1906 to 1934, merely required "gross premiums" to be shown in one column, with no segregation between life insurance and annuity premiums, and another column was entitled "amount insured." The use of the phrase "amount insured," in plaintiff's view, is inconsistent with a request for the return of premiums received on annuity contracts. Professor Mowbray testified that it was feasible from an insurance standpoint to list the "amount of outstanding annuities," and explained in detail how that would, or could, be done. This destroys plaintiff's major premise that the heading "amount insured" necessarily meant that the insurance commissioners had determined that annuity premiums should not be returned. Moreover, the evidence shows that the various foreign insurance companies also filed with the insurance commissioner so-called "convention" returns, setting forth their national annual business, in which form the number of outstanding annuity policies were listed together with the amount of annual payments represented thereby. In some of these annual statements one column was entitled "Gross Premiums less Reinsurance" received on annuities. In the annual statement of 1910 the consideration received for annuities in that year was included within the "Total of New Premiums" column. In line 17 of the form are listed "Renewal premiums for deferred annuities." It would be a reasonable assumption on the part of the insurance commissioner of California, in view of the care with which annuities were included in the convention form, that the same had been carried over into the California form without segregation. That is exactly what the commissioner did assume. The evidence shows that in 1910 the annuity business of life insurance companies was trivial in comparison with their life business. The annuity business remained a relatively minor part of the insurance business until about 1930 when the late depression caused a huge spurt in the annuity business. Certainly, the form of the return is not such as to compel the conclusion that the insurance commissioner knew that annuity considerations were not being included in the state returns.

In support of its contention that the insurance commissioner must have known that annuity considerations were not being returned, the plaintiff points to the state return made by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in 1911, the first year returns were made after the constitutional amendment went into effect. That company reported gross premiums for that year of $1,790,672.38, on a printed form. Underneath this figure, and outside the space on the form where gross premiums were required to be reported, in very small handwriting appears this notation: "1,007.24 Consideration for Annuities not included in above." So far as the evidence is concerned, this is the only return filed from 1911 to 1934 by any insurance company that showed on its face that annuities were not included therein. From this isolated instance plaintiff argues that thereafter for over twenty years the commissioner acquiesced in the noninclusion of annuity considerations. To this argument there are several answers. The notation is written in such small writing that it is not unreasonable to infer that it was so inconspicuous that it escaped official notice. There is no evidence at all that the notation was observed and acquiesced in by the insurance department—in fact, at one time plaintiff professed a willingness to stipulate that if Mae Barr Long, whose duty it was then to examine such returns, were recalled as a witness, she would testify that she never observed the notation in question. It is hardly reasonable to argue that from this one isolated incident it can be inferred that every succeeding commissioner from 1910 on, knowingly acquiesced in the failure to report annuity considerations.

Except for the Metropolitan incident there is very little in the record to show what the contemporaneous construction of the department was for the period 1910 to 1927. Most of the records of the department for most of the period had been destroyed pursuant to statutory authority so that any formal rulings by the department on this question, if any, were not available. A fair reading of the testimony of the various excommissioners who were available at the time of the trial, of Mae Barr Long, of William Tinkler, at present the principal examiner of the insurance department and a long time employee, and of H. F. Risbrough, who has been deputy commissioner since 1908, demonstrates that during this period the situation was as follows:

The insurance department did not examine foreign insurance companies carefully except when the company first qualified to do business in this state; because of lack of clerical and expert help, California was compelled to accept the careful periodical examination of the books of such companies made by the "home" state of the company; that these convention examinations of the nationwide business of such companies did not disclose the fact that these companies were not including the considerations received upon the sale of annuities for tax purposes, because, as already pointed out, the convention form definitely included receipts from the sale of annuities; that because of this fact, and, because during these years the annuity business was not a material portion of the business, the various insurance commissioners and their expert staff members simply "assumed" that annuity receipts were included. Certainly there is no evidence that anyone was ever informed by the department that annuity premiums were not to be included in the return. It was simply a situation where the department assumed the companies were including annuity receipts. Some companies apparently included annuity premiums while other companies apparently failed to do so. Certainly, such a factual situation cannot be distorted into a contemporaneous construction to the effect that such premiums properly could be excluded.

From the year 1927 on, there can be no doubt but that the department, in answer to several inquiries, uniformly ruled that annuity receipts must be included. On January 13, 1927, the then insurance commissioner, Charles R. Detrick, received a letter from the vice-president of the West Coast Insurance Company asking if the purchase money of a single payment life annuity came under the heading "gross premiums received" for taxation purposes. Under date of January 14, 1927, a letter was sent to that company signed "Charles R. Detrick, Insurance Commissioner, by Barrett N. Coates," a consulting actuary of the department, stating that "it is our understanding that the single premium received by your company as consideration for the issuance of a life annuity contract constitutes a gross premium * * * and that such premium should be included in the statement for tax purposes." There is nothing in the record to rebut the inference that that letter was merely a routine reply stating the well settled policy of the insurance commissioner's office toward that problem.

In 1932 the then commissioner E. Forrest Mitchell engaged in correspondence with the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company concerning this problem. During that year the attorney general of the State of Oregon had rendered an opinion that annuity considerations were not taxable in that state. This opinion provoked the request from the Pacific Mutual as to the law of this state. The problem was submitted to the late Frank L. Guerena, then attorney for Commissioner Mitchell. Mr. Guerena gave a written opinion to the commissioner in which he pointed out the differences between the Oregon and California statutory provisions, and in which he held that annuity receipts were taxable in this state. He also stated: "I am also advised that it has been the practice of insurance companies for many years to report their income from annuity contracts as taxable income. * * *" A copy of Mr. Guerena's opinion was sent to Mr. Davis, vice-president and general counsel of the Pacific Mutual. Mr. Davis, under date of September 16, 1932, wrote to Commissioner Mitchell thanking him for a copy of the Guerena opinion, and stating: "I quite agree with the conclusion reached by Mr. Guerena, and now that that matter is settled, the main point is to determine that all companies operating in California are taxed upon the basis of the inclusion of annuity premiums in their statements." He also stated that he had been given to understand "that a number of Eastern companies were not paying taxes on these amounts." Under date of September 20, 1932, Mitchell wrote to Davis telling him he was glad that Davis agreed with Guerena on the question of the taxability of annuity premiums and continuing: "You may rest assured that every company operating in the State of California will be required to include annuity premiums in their statement. A special communication insisting on this point will be addressed to all concerned and the matter will be carefully watched by this Division." No such special communication was then sent out. From this fact, plaintiff argues that the commissioner acquiesced in the non-payment of such taxes. No such inference is permissible. A reading of the correspondence indicates that apparently some companies were paying the tax including, inferentially, Pacific Mutual, and some others were probably not paying it; that the commissioner determined to investigate, but, because of the tremendous work in connection with receiverships growing out of problems caused by the depression, did not get around to it until 1934 when the new forms for tax returns were prepared which provoked this litigation.

In 1933 the commissioner first became aware of the fact that a particular company had not paid the tax on its annuity considerations. In that year the Missouri State Life Insurance Company of Missouri was insolvent, and proceedings in connection therewith were pending in that state. In examining that company's books it was discovered that it had not included in its California tax returns annuity considerations sold in California. The Missouri court rejected this state's claim for such taxes, holding that there had been a long administrative interpretation in this state that such premiums were not taxable. Defendant states in his brief, and this fact is not challenged by plaintiff, that subsequent to the trial of the present case assets of the Missouri company in California were by stipulated judgment applied to pay the challenged tax.

In May of 1934 the Union Labor Life Insurance Company inquired of the insurance commissioner if the annuity considerations were taxable in California. Mr. Mitchell replied that they were, and stated that if the company had not theretofore reported them it should inform him of the amount of such business. Under date of June 11, 1934, the company replied that such annuities had been included in its 1933 report.

The record need not be further analyzed. It is apparent from the above analysis of the evidence that:

1. The word "premium" for many years prior to 1910 was used technically and generally by insurance companies, insurance and legal writers and others to include the consideration received by the company on the sale of an annuity.

2. Contrary to the contentions of plaintiff there has not been an administrative interpretation over many years to the effect that such considerations need not be included. The most that can be said is that some companies did not include them, but that the insurance commissioner's office at all times assumed that such premiums were being included; that in view of the nature of the convention form this was a reasonable assumption; that whenever the problem was presented to the insurance commissioner he always replied that such considerations were taxable.

[6] Without reference to the cases from other jurisdictions, it seems quite clear that under the constitutional and statutory provisions of this state, in view of the generally accepted meaning of the term "premium," and in view of what the record shows as to contemporaneous construction in this state, the holding of the trial court that annuity considerations are taxable as gross premiums was correct and should be affirmed. Some reference, however, should be made to the cases from other states.

An examination of such cases demonstrates that there is a hopeless conflict on the question presented on this appeal. There is a respectable number of cases holding that considerations paid for annuities are not premiums and are not taxable as such. Practically all cases so holding place their main reliance on a Pennsylvania case decided in 1916 and a New York case decided in 1920. The Pennsylvania case is Commonwealth v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 254 Pa. 510, 98 A. 1072, 1073. The opinion in this case was written by the trial judge and was adopted by the supreme court of Pennsylvania without comment of its own. The first point discussed in the opinion was whether insurance companies could deduct dividends paid to policyholders by allowing them to be applied on premiums. After disposing of that point the trial judge considered whether the considerations received by the company upon the sale of annuities were premiums within the meaning of the Pennsylvania tax statute. The court first distinguished annuities from life insurance and then held: "The consideration for an annuity contract is not generally regarded as a premium * * *." Not one authority is cited to support that conclusion.

The problem was next presented in 1920 to the New York intermediate appellate court in People v. Knapp, 193 App. Div. 413, 184 N.Y.S. 345. Five judges sat in that case. The so-called majority opinion was prepared by Judge Henry Kellogg and was concurred in by but one other judge. In this opinion annuities are first distinguished from life insurance, and then, in reliance on the Pennsylvania case, supra, it is held that the considerations received on the sale of annuities are not premiums within the meaning of the tax statute there involved. The only other authorities cited are the general dictionary definitions of "premium" found in Webster, the Century dictionary and Bouvier, heretofore referred to in this opinion.

It will be noted that in the Pennsylvania case and in Judge Henry Kellogg's decision in the New York case the theory seems to be that since annuities are not life insurance, the consideration paid for annuities cannot be held to be premiums. That is a clear non sequitur.

In the New York case Judge Kiley filed a special concurring opinion. The opinion opens with this sentence (184 N.Y.S. at page 348): "I cannot find that any other term has been used to designate the amount paid for an annuity contract than the word 'premium.'" He then agrees with Judge Henry Kellogg that there must be a reversal because the state failed to introduce any evidence on the question as to how the state had construed the provision in the past.

John M. Kellogg, P. J., wrote a dissenting opinion in which one other judge concurred, in which he held that the obvious intent of the taxing law was to tax the business of insurance companies; that the sale of annuities was part of the business of insurance companies; that the word "premium" includes consideration paid for annuities.

Thus it will be noted that three of the five judges agreed that the term "premium" included considerations received on the sale of annuities. In 231 N.Y. 630, 132 N.E. 916, five judges of the court of appeals, with one judge absent, and Pound, J., dissenting, approved the following order: "Per Curiam. Order affirmed, with costs, on opinion of H. T. Kellogg, J., below."

Following these two decisions the following cases have held that annuity considerations are not premiums and are not taxable: Daniel v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, Tex.Civ.App. 1937, 102 S.W.2d 256; State v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 1938, 68 N.D. 641, 282 N.W. 411; State v. Ham, 1939, 54 Wyo. 148, 88 P.2d 484.

In the North Dakota case, supra, there was a strong, well reasoned dissent. All of the cases place great reliance on the frail support of the Pennsylvania and New York cases, and in some of them great weight is placed on the fact that in the particular state there had been an administrative construction adverse to the inclusion of annuity considerations in the tax. In some of the cases the statutory provisions are dissimilar to those in this state, so that the opinions may be predicated on the language of the particular statute.

As opposed to these cases, the following cases have held that the considerations paid for annuities are premiums and are taxable: Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Murphy, 1937, 223 Iowa 333, 271 N.W. 899, 109 A.L.R. 1054 (an exceptionally well reasoned opinion discussing all prior cases and concurred in by all eight justices of the court); New York Life Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 1937, 89 N.H. 21, 192 A. 297 (a unanimous opinion that considers and finds wanting most of the arguments advanced by plaintiff in the present case); State v. New York Life Ins. Co., 1939, 198 Ark. 820, 131 S.W.2d 639 (a decision by a divided court. The evidence showed that the insurance commissioner, following the decisions in Pennsylvania and New York, supra, had ruled that such considerations were not taxable. The dissenting opinion is predicated partly on this administrative construction and partly on the peculiar legislative provisions in Arkansas); State v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 1940, 189 Miss. 830, 196 So. 796, 800, 198 So. 763 (where the majority held that the meaning of the terms "gross amount of premium receipts" included annuity considerations and that there was no ambiguity in the statute); State v. Lucas, 1941, 348 Mo. 286, 153 S.W.2d 10, 12 (a unanimous opinion where, after careful consideration, it was held that the contention that the money paid for an annuity was a "consideration" and not a "premium" must be overruled, for text-writers, insurance departments, those familiar with the insurance business, insurance men, including relator's agents, and the public have been, for many years, referring to annuity contracts as policies, and referring to the money paid for an annuity as a premium"); Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Hobbs, 1941, 154 Kan. 1, 114 P.2d 871, 135 A.L.R. 1234 (a decision by a divided court, the majority, after discussing all prior cases, holding that such considerations were taxable).

After reading all of the above cases we are convinced that the New York and Pennsylvania cases, and the cases following them, are unsound, and are predicated upon false premises and should not be followed. We are also convinced that the cases last above cited enunciate the proper rule and should be followed.

It follows, from an analysis of the California constitutional and statutory provisions, from an analysis of the proper meaning of the term "premium," and from the weight of authority outside the state, that considerations received upon the sale of annuities are "premiums" and are taxable as such, and that the position taken by plaintiff on its appeal is unsound.

Appeal of Charles G. Johnson, State Treasurer of the State of California.

As already pointed out, the trial court held that plaintiff insurance company was entitled to a refund of taxes paid under protest in 1935 in the amount of $17,443.66. The defendant state treasurer appeals from the judgment in favor of plaintiff for this amount.

Under article XIII, section 14(b) of the Constitution the tax is computed upon "gross premiums received upon its business done in this state, less return premiums * * *." It was here stipulated that plaintiff received as gross premiums in 1934 (including annuity considerations) $11,474,830.61 on business done in this state. During the same year, according to the stipulation of facts, "plaintiff paid refunds and cash values to holders of annuity contracts residing in the State of California in the sum of $670,909.94 * * *" on the types of annuity policies itemized in the stipulation. The tax, as assessed by the state, did not make a deduction for this item. The judgment for $17,443.66 is predicated on the deductibility of these "refunds and cash values" as "return premiums." The exact nature of these payments is not entirely clear from the record. Wendell Milliman, assistant actuary of the plaintiff, testified that these payments did not include "annuity payments made to annuitants under annuity contracts," but that such sums included "amounts returned to annuity purchasers on the surrender of annuity contracts." This witness conceded that cash and surrender values paid to holders of life insurance contracts were not deductible by his company; that the refund was claimed on annuity contracts because "upon surrendering the contract the annuitant foregoes the payment of any future amount provided for by that contract and covered by his original consideration. The amount returned to the annuitant at the time of the surrender of the contract is in that respect a return of the original consideration, or a portion of the original consideration."

Defendant contends that, even if such payments are "return premiums," as those terms are used in the Constitution, in this particular case they are not deductible because no tax was in fact paid on the premiums when received. It is argued that the theory of the deduction provision is that the company should not be required to pay a tax on premiums which are not retained by it but are returned to the purchaser of the annuity; that the "return premiums" here involved were paid to California residents in 1934, but were on policies issued prior to that year; that prior to 1934 the company interpreted the constitutional provision as not requiring the return of premiums paid for annuities; that, as a result, no tax was paid on the premiums when first received by the company, and, therefore, no refund should be allowed when a portion of such premiums is later returned to such purchaser. Plaintiff contends that the effect of the defendant's construction is to read into the constitutional provision following the words "return premiums" the words "previously taxed," without any warrant for such judicial interpolation. In support of his position, defendant cites a number of cases involving situations not allied to that herein, but which are cited to show that the courts adopt a realistic approach to the construction of tax statutes, but admittedly none of the cited cases approaches the present one on the facts.

[7] The argument of defendant, so far as this point is concerned, amounts to this: These refunds are "return premiums" as those terms are used in the constitutional provision, and, under normal circumstances, could be deducted, but, some time in the past, this company failed to pay the tax on the considerations secured upon the sale of annuities, and therefore, for these past sins, it should be precluded from securing a refund on return premiums in 1935 when it has not paid the tax on the original premiums some years before. This argument assumes that recovery for the past unpaid taxes is barred by the statute of limitations. We will assume, without deciding, that such recovery is barred. There is nothing in the constitutional provision intimating that return premiums are only deductible when the tax was paid on the original premium. When the tax statute was first passed in 1903, or when the constitutional provision was first passed in 1910, there can be no doubt that in those first few years most return premiums would be on policies issued prior to those dates. It would be a forced construction of the provision to say that such return premiums were not deductible because not previously taxed.

[8] If the company were suing for a refund for the tax paid in 1935 on return premiums paid over in that year, and, if the state's action to recover for unpaid 1935 taxes on premiums was barred by the statute of limitations, we have no doubt at all that the unpaid taxes would be offset against the claim for a refund. That is as far as the cases cited by defendant go. But if defendant is correct, claims for taxes that we have assumed are barred by the statute of limitations may thus be recovered indirectly. That would violate the fundamental theory underlying statutes of limitations in tax statutes. Such a doctrine might well bankrupt a company where it had changed its position in reliance on the erroneous but good faith belief that no tax was due. If defendant's position is correct, whenever the government desired to collect a tax already barred by the statute of limitations, all it would have to do would be to levy an excessive tax for one year, and, when the taxpayer sued for a refund, claim that it had the right to offset taxes not paid many years before. We think the position taken by defendant on this point is untenable.

Defendant next contends that the amounts paid to holders of annuity contracts upon the surrender and cancellation of such contracts are not "return premiums" within the meaning of the Constitution. In this connection he also urges that even if such payments are "return premiums," such deductions are allowed only "upon business done in this state" and there is no evidence that payments were made on policies originally sold in California. He also contends that such payments were made on policies that to some extent contained life insurance features. These contentions present several difficult and debatable propositions.

The most obvious example of a return premium is presented by the situation when a fire insurance policy is cancelled. Normally, such policies are issued for three years, and the total premium for the three-year period is paid when the policy is issued. If the policy is cancelled at the end of one year, the insured is entitled to a return of two years' premium. In connection with a life policy, the most obvious illustration is where the premium is paid, but, before the policy takes effect, it is cancelled because of fraud. The amount returned to the policyholder is clearly a return premium. Defendant contends that the phrase must be limited to such or similar situations and cannot be extended to include refunds and cash values paid to holders of annuity contracts upon the cancellation of their policies before the annuity takes effect. This contention is predicated on the argument that prior to the enactment of the constitutional tax provision, or the statute that preceded it, the phrase "return premiums" had acquired a well-defined meaning under which it was applicable to fire and other types of insurance, but not to life insurance or contracts of annuity. He further contends that in 1910, and for many years before that date, the law prohibited making cash payments upon the cancellation of life policies, and, in his analysis, upon the cancellation of annuity contracts.

[9] We do not believe that the statutory provisions cited by defendant are conclusive on this question. Since 1872 the Civil Code has provided for the return of premiums in three code sections—sections 2617, 2618 and 2619 (now §§ 481, 482 and 483, Insurance Code, St.1935, p. 509; St. 1939, p. 2290). No useful purpose would be served by quoting those sections in this opinion. They are obviously applicable to insurance such as fire insurance, but less obviously applicable to life insurance or annuities. However, section 2619 of the Civil Code, as originally enacted provided: "A person insured is entitled to a return of the premium when the contract is voidable, on account of the fraud or misrepresentation of the insurer, or on account of facts, of the existence of which the insured was ignorant without his fault; or when, by any default of the insured other than actual fraud, the insurer never incurred any liability under the policy." Clearly, that section could, and does, apply to life insurance and annuity policies. The other sections do not suggest what should be done on the cancellation of a life policy or an annuity policy.

So far as life insurance policies are concerned, from an early date there has been a specific provision which has regulated what shall be done on cancellation of such policies, which provision did not use the phrase "return of premiums." Section 451 of the Civil Code, enacted in 1873, provided for payment to the insured of a sum equal to 75 per cent of the then present value of the policy as ascertained by section 447 of the Civil Code. There can be no doubt that from this early date the legislature treated return premiums as one thing, and cash paid on surrender or cancellation of life policies as quite another. That this surrender value did not apply to annuities is made quite clear by the subsequent statutory history. Long prior to 1910 the provision requiring the cash payment was repealed, and a new system of surrender values was adopted and set forth in section 450 of the Civil Code. By this section it was provided that on cancellation the entire net reserve value of the policy should be applied either to the purchase of non-participating term insurance for the full amount of the policy, or to the purchase of a non-participating paid up policy. This provision continued in force until 1911, and hence was in effect when the constitutional tax amendment was adopted. It is this provision which causes defendant to argue that when the tax amendment was adopted payment of cash was prohibited, with the result that at that time there could not have been a "return premium" on a life policy, and so, he urges, on an annuity policy. In 1911, section 450 was amended to direct payment of cash surrender values, but its application to annuities and certain other policies was expressly excluded.

It seems plain to us that section 450 of the Civil Code, either in its original or amended form, did not apply to annuity contracts. Its inapplicability as amended is express, and, if applied to annuities in its original form, such application would result in an absurdity. As already pointed out, an annuity is different from a life policy. It would be absurd to say that the holder of an annuity, on cancellation, must accept term or paid up life insurance —something entirely different from an annuity, something he did not purchase and presumably did not desire.

[10] From this analysis we think it quite clear that, except for the limited situations set forth in section 2619 of the Civil Code, supra, the Legislature, from an early date, so far as life policies are concerned, has distinguished between a "return premium" and the cash or surrender value paid upon the cancellation of such policies. Stated another way, except for the situations set forth in section 2619 of the Civil Code, the cash or surrender values paid upon the cancellation of life policies are not "return premiums" as those terms are used in the constitutional provision in question. They are not deductible from the amount of gross premiums received. The plaintiff's witness Milliman agreed that such payments on life policies were not deductible.

[11] Some brief reference should be made to two California cases cited by the parties on this point. The first of these is Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 177 Cal. 540, 171 P. 313. The sole question involved in that case was whether "dividends" paid to holders of life insurance policies in a mutual benefit company were "return premiums" within the meaning of the tax provision here under discussion. The court held that they were not. The court found that the phrase "return premiums" as applied to life policies had a well-defined technical and limited meaning which was not broad enough to extend to such dividends. The court quoted, with approval, the definition of the phrase in Black's Law Dictionary as follows (177 Cal. at page 543, 171 P. at page 314): " 'The repayment of the whole or a ratable part of the premium paid for a policy of insurance upon the cancellation of the contract before the time fixed for its expiration.' " On the same page the court stated: "In Joyce on Insurance and also in Elliott on Insurance—the two main modern text-books on this branch of the law—there are to be found in each an entire subdivision devoted to the subject of 'Return of premiums and assessments,' in which these terms are given application to cases wherein the risk has not attached, or where the policy is void, or has been issued through a mistake of law or fact, or has been procured through fraud and the like, and wherein the use of the phrase is limited to the class of cases above enumerated. Joyce on Insurance, c. 35; Elliott on Insurance, § 299. See, also, Dawson's Elements of Life Ins. p. 166. Nowhere, in fact, so far as the industry of counsel in the search for precedents have gone, or as our own independent research has extended, had the phrase 'return premium' ever been given in the domain of either fire or life insurance, prior to the enactment of the amendment to our constitution under review any other than the limited meaning in which that phrase has been defined and discussed by the law dictionaries and law-writers above referred to."

The court went on to hold that, so far as life insurance was concerned, the phrase, as used in the Constitution, had this limited and technical meaning. The court did not consider the question whether a similar rule applied to annuities, nor did it consider the question whether "premiums" paid for an annuity were "gross premiums." The court was not dealing with annuity contracts at all.

The other case referred to, and relied upon by plaintiff, is Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Richardson, 192 Cal. 369, 219 P. 1003. That case did not involve the interpretation of the phrase "return premiums" at all. It held that where dividends are applied to payment of the premium, the "gross premium" to be returned is the amount of the premium fixed by the policy as reduced by the dividend. It will be noted that by this decision the insurance companies accomplished the result they unsuccessfully attempted to secure in the Northwestern case, supra, but upon an entirely different theory. The decision did not purport to overrule the reasoning of the Northwestern case.

[12] Under the decision in the Mutual Benefit case it is apparent that the insurance companies had been reporting gross premiums in excess of those required by law and were entitled to refunds. This led, in 1925, to the state and the insurance companies entering into a statutory stipulation providing, among other things, that "matured endowments or surrender values" on cancellation of life contracts should not be deducted as return premiums. Stats. of 1925, p. 218.

For these many reasons, we think it to be clear that cash or surrender values paid on the cancellation of a life insurance policy are not return premiums as used in the tax provision in question. But that does not determine that cash or surrender values paid on the cancellation of a pure annuity contract prior to the starting of payments to the annuitant are not return premiums. Section 2619 of the Civil Code, supra, obviously refers to annuity contracts, but that does not mean that the phrase "return premiums" is limited to the situations there set forth. Annuity contracts provide by their terms for refunds to the purchaser upon cancellation. If they did not so provide, few purchasers would be found for them. Payments so refunded before the risk attaches—i. e., before payments start to the annuitant—regardless of whether sections 2617 and 2618 of the Civil Code are applicable, are by contract "return premiums" within the meaning of the Constitution.

It seems quite clear that in the early statutory provisions in this state prior to 1910 the Legislature did not have specifically in mind cash or surrender values of annuity policies. That form of policy, in those early years, was such a minor part of the insurance business, that, so far as cash and surrender values are concerned, the Legislature did not find it necessary to protect the holders of such policies by specific statutory regulation. Section 594 of the Political Code, for reasons already set forth, did not make all provisions of the law relating to life insurance ipso facto applicable to annuities without regard to their obvious inappropriateness. So far as the cash and surrender values of annuities are concerned, the Legislature, apparently, was willing to let them be determined by the contract of the parties.

The conclusions so far advanced in this opinion, while in accord with plaintiff's main contentions on this appeal and in accord with the conclusions of the trial court, do not necessarily mean that the particular items involved on this appeal are deductible. An examination of the record discloses that there are several reasons why the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and conclusions of the trial court that these items are deductible.

[13, 14] It must be kept in mind that plaintiff is suing for a refund, and that, therefore, the burden of proof was on it to show that it was entitled to the refund. Miller v. McColgan, 17 Cal.2d 432, 110 P.2d 419, 134 A.L.R. 1424; Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 3 Cal.2d 83, 43 P.2d 278. According to the stipulation of facts, these return premiums were paid on policies denominated as "Retirement, Cash Refund, Life, Refund, Special Life, Income Bond and Group Annuity." As to several of these types of policies, Professor Mowbray testified that they had connected with the annuity feature, a life insurance feature in varying degrees—that is, such policies had included therein some provision based upon a life contingency. What amount of the return premiums paid to the holders of such policies was predicated on original premiums charged for the life insurance feature, and what portion was attributable to the annuity feature, does not appear in the evidence. Cash surrender values on life policies are not deductible. Moreover, it is only those cash surrender values paid on annuity policies cancelled before the risk attaches—that is, before payments have started to the annuitant—that are deductible as return premiums. The evidence fails to disclose the matters from which a proper computation can be made. For that reason, this portion of the judgment must be reversed. Justice requires that this issue be retried where the parties can introduce evidence on these factors.

There is one other matter that should be mentioned. According to the stipulation, the so-called return premiums were paid to "holders of annuity contracts residing in the State of California." There is no indication in the stipulation, or in the evidence, that such return premiums were paid on policies originally written in California. The defendant views as shocking the contention of the plaintiff that return premiums paid to residents of this state without regard to where the original premiums were collected or the annuity contracts entered into are deductible as return premiums. The constitutional provision imposes the tax on the "amount of the gross premiums received upon its business done in this state, less return premiums. * * *" The defendant contends that the deduction or credit allowed for "return premiums" is, in legal effect, an exemption from liability, and, as such, must be strictly construed against the taxpayer (Miller v. McColgan, supra, 17 Cal.2d at page 442, 110 P.2d 419, 134 A.L.R. 1424); that, reasonably interpreted, the constitutional provision means that return premiums can be deducted only when the original policy was issued in this state. The plaintiff contends that any return premium paid to a resident of California is deductible whether or not the original premium was collected in California. Thus, plaintiff contends that, if an annuity policy was issued in a foreign state, and, thereafter, the policyholder becomes a resident of California and while residing here cancels the annuity contract under such circumstances that the surrender value is a return premium, the payment is deductible although the original policy was not sold in this state. The constitutional provision is not clear on this point. It would appear that the phrase "business done in this state" qualifies both "gross premiums" and "return premiums." It is a possible construction to say that it was the purpose of the provision to allow a deduction for the return of the premium only where the original premium was collected in California, that is, was part of the "business done in this state" by the insurance company; that, otherwise, the "return premium" is not on "business done in this state" as that phrase is used in the provision in question.

On the other hand, the construction contended for by plaintiff is also possible. The solution of this problem affects not only companies selling annuity policies, but every company selling any type of policy in this state. The problem was only incidentally presented to the trial court and is only cursorily treated in the briefs. It seems more than likely that evidence is available as to how the taxing authorities and the insurance companies have interpreted this problem during the almost forty-year period that this provision, or its counterpart, has been in effect. Plaintiff contends that it would be impossible, from an accounting standpoint, to apply the section as interpreted by defendant. That contention, if true, would certainly be a factor in interpreting the section. Obviously, it will not be presumed that the provision would grant a reduction and then deny it because it cannot be computed. But that is a matter that can only be proved by expert testimony. For these reasons, inasmuch as this phase of the case must be retried for other reasons, the court expresses no opinion on the point under consideration. That point can be more fairly determined after a trial at which both litigants may offer what evidence is available on the issue.

Summary and Conclusion.

As heretofore pointed out, this action was brought by plaintiff for the refund of taxes paid by it under protest in the amount of $330,348.22, reduced at the trial to $298,345.60. The theory of plaintiff was that the considerations paid for annuities were not "gross premiums" within the meaning of article XIII, section 14 (b) of the Constitution. The trial court held adversely to this contention of plaintiff. The trial court did hold, however, that plaintiff was entitled to a refund of $17,443.66, and entered judgment in plaintiff's favor in this amount. This judgment was predicated on the theory that plaintiff was entitled to deduct from its gross premiums received in 1934 the amount of $670,909.94 —the amount of refunds and cash values paid by plaintiff in that year to holders of annuity contracts residing in this state. From this judgment both plaintiff and defendant have appealed, the former contending that it is entitled to a refund of the total amount claimed, and the latter claiming that plaintiff is entitled to no refund at all.

In this opinion we have held that the trial court was correct in its holding that the considerations paid for annuity contracts constitute "gross premiums" as those terms are used in the taxing provision in question. That issue has been determined and should not be retried.

On the appeal by the defendant we have held that the evidence does not sustain the findings that the sum fixed in the judgment is deductible. Plaintiff is entitled to some deduction if it can present the evidence required under the rules laid down in this opinion. Justice requires that it be given the opportunity, if it so desires, to present that evidence. If the plaintiff be so inclined, a retrial should be had solely to determine the amount of return premiums which plaintiff may be entitled to receive under the rules set forth in this opinion.

For the foregoing reasons, on the appeal of defendant, the judgment is reversed for the limited purposes heretofore indicated, and the trial court directed to proceed as herein set forth, the defendant to recover costs on both appeals.

CONSOLIDATED PRODUCE CO., Limited, v. TAKAHASHI et al.

Civ. 2808.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 18, 1942.

Hearing Denied Aug. 13, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⚿544(3)

A party dissatisfied with a judgment may appeal on the judgment roll alone, and, when he does so, the appeal must be decided on that record.

2. Appeal and error ⚿659(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, reviewing court could not order up any part of the record which properly should have been included in a reporter's transcript had one been ordered, but which formed no proper part of the clerk's transcript on appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⚿907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, reviewing court must resolve all intendments in favor of the judgment and hence was required to presume that case was tried on the theory that a ground of waiver of security relied on by trial court in support of its judgment but not supported by any sufficient pleading was properly before the court, that evidence was received thereon without objection, and that the evidence sustained the finding.

4. Appeal and error ⚿882(17)

The general rule is that a finding outside the issues must be disregarded on appeal, but, where the parties voluntarily submit and try an issue without any specific pleadings, they may not thereafter complain that the findings and judgment were not within the issues framed by the pleadings.

5. Chattel mortgages ⚿225(1), 227

Where mortgagor wrongfully removes mortgaged crop from the land without mortgagee's knowledge and consent, mortgagee may follow it and under certain circumstances may claim the proceeds from a wrongful sale of such mortgaged property. Civ.Code, § 2972.

6. Chattel mortgages ⚿136

Where mortgagee of tomato crop breached contract with mortgagor, refused to accept the tomatoes which contract required mortgagor to deliver to mortgagee for sale, acquiesced in mortgagor's sale thereof to third parties, and did not assert mortgage lien, but brought action on note and obtained attachment on ground that mortgage security was valueless, lien of mortgage was "waived" and another attaching creditor whose writ of attachment was served on purchaser of tomatoes prior to mortgagee's attachment was entitled to proceeds of sale of the tomatoes. Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Vaughn N. Thompson, Judge.

Action in interpleader by the Consolidated Produce Company, Limited, against K. Takahashi and others, wherein Mrs. K. Takahashi, as administratrix of the estate of K. Takahashi, deceased, was substituted as defendant. From a judgment in favor of named defendant, defendant George Manos appeals on the judgment roll, and moves for an order to transmit an exhibit for use on the appeal.

Motion denied and judgment affirmed.

Stickney & Stickney and William H. Wylie, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Elmer W. Heald, Frank Birkhauser, and Harry W. Horton, all of El Centro, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment awarding respondent money, deposited in court, in an action in interpleader brought to determine the claimant entitled to receive this money. Appellant has also moved the court for an order to transmit a certain exhibit here for use on this appeal.

Pending this appeal K. Takahashi died, and his widow, Mrs. K. Takahashi, as administratrix of his estate, has been substituted in his stead.

[1,2] This appeal was taken on the judgment roll. As far as the record shows no steps were taken in the court below for the preparation of a reporter's transcript or a bill of exceptions. A party dissatisfied with a judgment may appeal on the judgment roll alone, and when he does, his appeal must be decided on that record. Under such circumstances we cannot order up any part of the record which properly should have been included in a reporter's transcript, had one been ordered, but which forms no proper part of the clerk's transcript on appeal. Borenstein v. Borenstein, 20 Cal.2d 379, 125 P.2d 465; Sutcliffe v. Sutcliffe, 220 Cal. 398, 31 P.2d 195; Stern & Goodman Inv. Co. v. Danziger, 206 Cal. 456, 274 P. 748.

To understand the issues involved, a somewhat detailed statement of facts is required. Some of the facts are set forth in Takahashi v. Kunishima, 34 Cal.App.2d 367, 93 P.2d 645.

Manos Brothers was a partnership composed of George and William Manos.

In 1937, Harry K. Kunishima had possession of twenty acres of land in Imperial County on which he raised tomatoes. The trial court found: "That the said Harry K. Kunishima had, on or about the 30th day of August, 1937, made and entered into a marketing contract and agreement with the defendant George Manos, by the terms of which contract the said George Manos agreed to advance to the said Harry K. Kunishima certain sums of money at specified times and agreed to do and furnish certain things, including the payment to the said Harry K. Kunishima of sixty cents ($.60) per crate of tomatoes, advancing the same on Tuesday and Friday of each week as said tomatoes were harvested and packed."

On December 11, 1937, Kunishima executed a promissory note for $4,000 payable to Manos Brothers, which was secured by a mortgage on the tomato crop. This mortgage was duly recorded. The promissory note and crop mortgage were sold and assigned to George Manos by Manos Brothers on July 10, 1938.

About July 12, 1938, Takahashi filed suit in the Superior Court of Imperial County against Harry K. Kunishima to recover judgment on his own and assigned claims for wages. He recovered judgment on July 26, 1938, for $1,064. A writ of attachment had been issued and served on Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd. After judgment execution was issued and served on that company. A return was made showing the company held the sum of $1,140.91 as the sale price of tomatoes delivered by Harry K. Kunishima.

On July 22, 1938, George Manos filed suit against Harry K. Kunishima on the promissory note. In this action he did not seek to foreclose the crop mortgage securing the note. Manos filed an affidavit for an attachment in which he stated that the note "was secured by a mortgage upon personal property, but that said security has become valueless." A writ of attachment was issued and served on Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd., subsequent to the levy made in the action of Takahashi v. Kunishima.

Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd., brought this action in interpleader against K. Takahashi, Harry K. Kunishima, George Manos and Manos Brothers to require them to litigate their claims to the money it held which was deposited in court.

Harry K. Kunishima filed an answer in which he asserted no claim to the money.

Various pleadings under various names were filed by Takahashi and George Manos. They are certainly not examples of good pleading. When stripped of their unnecessary verbiage we believe they sufficiently set forth the ultimate facts upon which their respective claims to the money are founded.

Manos bases his claim upon the lien of the crop mortgage and upon the alleged conversion of the mortgaged tomato crop by Kunishima.

Takahashi bases his claim on the liens of the attachment and execution and on the alleged waiver of the security of the mortgage by Manos Brothers and George Manos. As a ground of waiver Takahashi pleaded the suit on the promissory note, the facts stated in the affidavit for an attachment, and the fact of the issuance and levy of the writ of attachment on plaintiff in the action by Manos.

The trial court found the facts in accordance with the allegations in the pleadings of Takahashi, concluded that the security had been waived and gave judgment for Takahashi.

As an additional ground of waiver the trial court also found:

"That in the spring of 1938 and as soon as said tomatoes were ripe and ready for harvesting, the defendant Harry K. Kunishima commenced the harvesting and packing of said tomatoes and delivered the same to the defendants George Manos or Manos Brothers until a date in May, 1938, when the said George Manos and Manos Brothers then and there refused to accept delivery of said tomatoes or to receive the same for resale, or otherwise, and on or before the 20th day of May, 1938, the said George Manos and Manos Brothers did authorize and direct the said Harry K. Kunishima to harvest and pack said tomatoes remaining on said property and to sell the same himself directly to such purchaser or purchasers as he might be able to find for said unsold tomatoes. That the said George Manos and Manos Brothers did cease advancing to the said Harry K. Kunishima the amounts of money provided for in said marketing contract and thereafter and commencing with the 20th of May, 1938, the said Harry K. Kunishima, with the full knowledge and consent of the defendants George Manos and Manos Brothers, did sell the balance of said tomatoes that were harvested from said premises to the plaintiff Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd., a corporation, harvesting, marketing and selling the same to said Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd., openly and notoriously and with the full knowledge, consent and approval of the defendant George Manos and the defendant Manos Brothers, and that the said Manos Brothers and George Manos did authorize the sale of said tomatoes by the said Harry K. Kunishima to the said Consolidated Produce Company, Ltd., free from any lien of said mortgage and did waive any rights of the said George Manos and Manos Brothers to the lien of said mortgage or to the enforcement of said mortgage as to said remaining tomatoes and/or the proceeds thereof."

[3] It is true, as maintained by Manos, that the foregoing finding of waiver is not supported by any sufficient pleading. However, as the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, we are required to resolve all presumptions and intendments in favor of the judgment to the extent that we must presume that the case was tried upon the theory that this particular ground of waiver was properly before the court; that evidence was received on this subject without objection; that the evidence sustained this finding.

[4] The rule governing us in cases of this kind is clearly set forth in Freeman v. Gray-Cowan, Inc., 219 Cal. 85, 25 P.2d 415, 416, as follows:

"The general rule is that a finding outside the issues must be disregarded. However, where the parties voluntarily submit and try an issue without any specific pleadings they may not thereafter complain that the findings and judgment were not within the issues framed by the pleadings. McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 64 P. 278; Poledori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 375, 48 P. 325; Baar v. Smith, 201 Cal. 87, 255 P. 827; Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 505, 261 P. 994. * * *

"However, the record is not before us and it is impossible to determine whether objections were made to the introduction of the deeds which established title in the plaintiff. Nor is it possible to ascertain with respect to what issue or for what purpose the offer was made. In accordance with the rule that every intendment must be indulged in favor of the judgment, we must assume that the evidence was introduced in support of the issue of title. In Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 702, 192 P. 534, 537, it is said: 'And where the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, so that the record fails to disclose whether or not, at the trial, objections were interposed to evidence as not within the issues, it has been held that it will be presumed in support of the findings and judgment that the pleadings were treated as sufficient to raise the issues upon which the findings were made and that evidence in support of such issues was introduced and went in without objection (Illinois Trust & S. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 296, 47 P. 60; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 159, 64 P. 278; Beardsley v. Clem, 137 Cal. 328, 332, 70 P. 175), although the rule may be different where such a presumption would result in the reversal of the judgment. (Rudel v. Los Angeles County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 P. 400).' A most pertinent statement is also found in Poledori v. Newman, supra, 116 Cal. at page 377, 48 P. at page 326, as follows: 'Upon a direct appeal from the judgment, upon the judgment roll alone, it will be assumed in support of the judgment that all objections to evidence in support of the findings were waived. If objection to the introduction of any evidence had been made upon the ground that the defect to which it related was not alleged in the complaint, the court would have permitted the plaintiffs to amend their complaint. Parties will not be permitted to lie by and keep silent when evidence is offered, and after the court has rendered its judgment, object thereto upon the ground that the evidence sustaining it was inadmissible under the issues presented by the pleadings.'"

To the same effect are the cases of Peck v. Noee, 154 Cal. 351, 97 P. 865; Saere v. Imperial Water Co. No. 3, 206 Cal. 13, 272 P. 1044; Dodge v. National Surety Co., 110 Cal.App. 618, 294 P. 741; Harper v. Buckles, 19 Cal.App.2d 481, 65 P.2d 947; Dorris v. Crowder, 26 Cal.App.2d 49, 78 P.2d 1039; Bicknell v. Strawn, 26 Cal.

The sole question presented to us for decision is this: Do the facts found support the conclusion of waiver of the security and thus support the judgment?

[5] Section 2972 of the Civil Code provides that the lien of a crop mortgage continues on the crop after its severance from the ground so long as it remains on the land of the mortgagor. It is also settled that if the mortgagor wrongfully removes the crop from his land without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagee, the mortgagee may follow it. Also that under certain circumstances a mortgagee may claim the proceeds from a wrongful sale of the mortgaged property. McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 P. 69.

[6] We have no such state of facts here. The mortgagee breached its contract with the mortgagor and refused to accept the tomatoes which the mortgage required be delivered to the mortgagee for sale at the best price obtainable, told the mortgagor to sell the crop elsewhere, and knew that the tomatoes had been sold and delivered to plaintiff. Under the findings it is clear that after May 20, 1938, neither Manos Brothers nor George Manos made any objection to the sale to plaintiff nor made any claim on the crop or the proceeds of its sale until after Takahashi had attached the money in the hands of plaintiff. In the action in which the attachment was issued, George Manos, the owner of the note, did not claim the money by virtue of the lien of the mortgage but by means of a writ of attachment issued in an action on the promissory note and not to foreclose the mortgage. Nor did he then seek possession of the tomatoes by reason of the lien of the mortgage and their tortious removal by the mortgagor. His claim to the tomatoes and the money representing their sale price was first asserted in this action.

Under similar circumstances it has been held that the mortgagee waived the lien of the mortgage. See Ramsey v. California Packing Corp., 51 Cal.App. 517, 201 P. 481; Riddle v. Etling, 84 Cal.App. 460, 258 P. 162; Valley Bank v. Hillside Packing Co., 91 Cal.App. 738, 267 P. 746; Haber v. J. G. Boswell Co., 130 Cal.App. 514, 20 P.2d 100; I. S. Chapman & Co. v. Ulery, 15 Cal.App.2d 452, 59 P.2d 602; Wingard v. Banning, 39 Cal. 543.

In I. S. Chapman & Co. v. Ulery, supra [15 Cal.App.2d 452, 59 P.2d 604], the court quoted from Ramsey v. California Packing Corp., supra, as follows: "'* * * obviously, if the crops were removed by and with the consent of the plaintiff, then they were not wrongfully or tortiously removed, and in that case the lien of the mortgage ceased upon such removal by operation of law. This proposition follows from the terms of section 2972 of the Civil Code. * * * This agreement (allowing the mortgagors to sell the mortgaged crops and turn over the proceeds of sale to plaintiff and Emerson) amounted in practical effect to a substitution of the personal obligation of the mortgagors for the security of the mortgage.' * * *"

As the lien of the mortgage had been waived, and as the lien secured by Takahashi in his action against Harry K. Kunishima was prior to the lien of the attachment by Manos in his action on the promissory note, the trial court correctly awarded the funds in controversy to Takahashi.

The motion to order an exhibit transferred to this court is denied.

The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

In an information containing two counts defendant was charged with arson and with burning insured property. He was convicted on both counts. The appeal is from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction. A statement of the more important facts brought out in the testimony shows that this contention is without merit. Carl Schou, who lived about thirty feet from defendant's residence at 8927 Ellis Avenue in the city of Palms, arrived home at about 3 o'clock in the morning and through his bedroom window noticed that defendant's residence was afire. He at once aroused defendant and a Mrs. Paulson, also known as Mrs. Arnold, who was living in the house with defendant. He then went to his landlady's residence and telephoned the fire department and upon returning met defendant coming out of the house. Together they secured a hose from the premises, sprayed water on the fire and put it out. The firemen arrived promptly and were met in front of the house by defendand who told them: "The fire is out; never mind." After several questions the firemen learned from defendant that the fire had been in the back of the house. They investigated and found that sparks and live embers were in the eaves and smoke was still coming out. The firemen entered the attic through a scuttle hole on the service porch and found three tin cans, each partly filled with kerosene, fresh newspapers spread out in a row in the center of the attic, a roll of tar paper and some charred wood and paper. The rear wall had been burned above and around one of the cans of kerosene. A wheel-type can opener was found in the kitchen. Two of the kerosene cans had been opened by a can opener of that type. Both defendant and Mrs. Paulson stated that they were unable to use the can opener. The cans and the can opener were examined by an expert, who found nothing wrong with the can opener. He stated that from his examination and test he had determined that the particular can opener in question had been used to open one of the cans found in the attic. The newspapers found in the attic bore the dates of February 7, 10, and 11 of 1941. Defendant had stored his old newspapers in a pile in the garage, which was kept locked, but the investigator checked the pile of papers and found that the papers of the dates of those found in the attic were missing from the pile.

Defendant told an investigator that when he retired on the night of the fire all of the doors, including the screen door and the garage door, were locked. Investigators examined the exterior of the house with defendant, using their flashlights, and found no evidence that anyone had tried to enter any of the doors or windows by force and that the screen door to the service porch was undamaged. When an investigator returned the following morning defendant showed him a cut in the screen next to the casing of the door to the service porch and stated that Mrs. Paulson had discovered the cut shortly after daylight.

Defendant and Mrs. Paulson had purchased the four-room house early in 1940, taking the deed as husband and wife and as joint tenants, the purchase price being $2,025. The lot was valued at $850. At that time the buildings were insured in the sum of $1,600. In December, 1940, defendant secured $2,000 additional insurance on the property, making a total of $3,600. In the meantime improvements made by defendant on the property had cost between $400 and $500.

[1, 2] Since the decision in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778, the rule applicable in cases of circumstantial evidence has been definitely established. If the circumstances shown in evidence reasonably justify the verdict of the jury the opinion that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of defendant will not warrant interference by a reviewing court. People v. Miller, 41 Cal.App.2d 252, 106 P.2d 239. In the present case the jury might reasonably have concluded that the fire was of incendiary origin; that it was what is commonly known as an "inside job;" and that defendant set fire to the house for the purpose of securing the relatively large amount of insurance which had been placed upon it.

The order is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action by Don R. King against the San Jose Keystone Mining Company and others to recover a balance due for services performed for defendants, wherein defendants filed a counterclaim. From adverse judgments, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

C. B. Wooster, of San Jose, for appellants.

T. L. Chamberlain, of Auburn, and Harold Ropers, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff and respondent recovered a judgment for a balance due for services performed for defendants and appellants herein, and the sole question raised on this appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

Plaintiff alleged that "commencing on the 6th day of May, 1936, and continuing to and including the 24th day of January, 1938, in the County of Placer, State of California, at the special instance and request of the defendants San Jose Keystone Mining Company, H. Bert Walton and C. B. Wooster, and each of them, and upon the promise of the said last-named defendants, as hereinafter set forth, the plaintiff performed work and labor for the defendants in and about that certain mining property known as the San Jose Keystone Mine, which said work consisted of surveying above and underground, drawing plans and working maps of said mine, and the real property upon which it is situate, drawing plans for compressor house and ore bin, felling trees, installing air and water pipe-line, installing electric motors, telephone system and wire lines, buying supplies, and like services required in the preparation of said property for mining operations and the commencement of mining operations; that all of said work and labor was done and performed on said San Jose Keystone Mining property." It was further alleged that defendants promised, at the time of the commencement of the work, to pay therefor at the rate of $180 a month, and that after allowing deductions for time off, plaintiff was entitled to compensation for working eighteen months and nine days. Plaintiff admitted receipt of $250 in cash, stock work $250, and board and lodging valued at $120.

Defendant denied the existence of an agreement to pay plaintiff a fixed salary; admitted that plaintiff worked on the mine but alleged that he had been paid in full. A counterclaim for $149.50 for the use of a tractor was set up and allowed by the court.

The court found that all the facts alleged in the complaint were true, except that the work was not done at the special instance and request of H. Bert Walton and C. B. Wooster, individually. Judgment was given for $1,063.

We have, then, the simple question: How much, if anything, was plaintiff entitled to recover for the services rendered?

Considering the total credits admitted by plaintiff, the amount of the judgment and the counterclaim allowed, and the finding that plaintiff was entitled to compensation at the rate of $180 a month, it appears that the court determined the total value of the services rendered to be $1,840.50. To have earned this amount, at the foregoing rate, plaintiff must have worked a little more than ten months and six days.

In view of the conclusions we have reached, we find it unnecessary to set forth the evidence adduced in support of the finding that defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff a salary of $180 a month. For the purposes of this appeal, we may assume that the evidence was sufficient to support such a finding.

[1] Disregarding conflicting evidence and considering, as we must, the evidence most favorable to plaintiff, we are unable to discover any evidence that would justify a judgment for the amount given. Plaintiff was called as a witness and the following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Your complaint sets forth here that you worked for the mine for eighteen months and nine days. That period of time, how much time would you say you spent there on the mine property? A. I would say at least half that time.

"Q. Roughly, how many months? A. Nine months, nine to ten months."

There is nothing in the record showing that plaintiff worked on the property for a greater length of time than that shown by his own statement as given above. Keeping in mind the well-recognized rules as to certainty in matters of this kind, it is apparent from the plaintiff's own testimony that he is not sure he worked more than nine months on the property, and that testimony concerning anything in excess of that amount was pure conjecture. Plaintiff further testified that he made a number of trips from the mine to Sacramento and other points to purchase supplies, but as far as the record shows, this was included in the estimate of nine months.

[2, 3] Plaintiff sought to recover for work done while he was away from the property and living in San Jose, and in this connection testified that he was "under the impression" from what was said at a directors' meeting that he was to be paid a regular salary between the dates mentioned in his complaint, and that he had spent considerable time away from the mine, trying to interest people in the purchase of mining stock and in performing other services for the company. Without pausing to analyze the evidence on this point, we are of the opinion that this testimony tends in no way to support plaintiff's contentions. In the first place, plaintiff's "impressions" as to what happened at the directors' meeting were not sufficient to establish a definite and enforceable contract, and the trial court specifically found that the allegation in the complaint "that all of said work and labor was done and performed on said San Jose Keystone Mining Property" was true. This amounted to a finding that plaintiff performed no work off of the property for which he could recover compensation.

A number of other points are raised but inasmuch as we have reached the conclusion that there is no evidence sufficient to support a judgment for the amount given, it is unnecessary to discuss them.

The judgment is reversed.

In suit to quiet title to realty, defended on ground that defendants were beneficiaries under a deed of trust given by codefendant covering a leasehold interest and that such interest was still in effect and that plaintiffs acquired title subject to the interest and deed of trust, evidence was not sufficient to entitle defendants to a judgment sustaining their claims.

2. Witnesses 🔑397

In suit to quiet title to realty, recitals in a title company's unsigned and uncertified preliminary title report on the property which report was admitted for purpose of impeachment were not competent proof of execution or recordation of a lease and deed of trust upon which defendants relied.

4. Vendor and purchaser 🔑244

That an agreement for sale of realty stated that purchaser agreed to take title temporarily subject to "Exception three" as shown by preliminary title report wherein "Exception three" mentioned a lease executed by vendor and a trust deed covering leasehold interest did not show that purchaser had actual "notice" of lease and trust deed, in view of purchaser's other testimony, and hence purchaser did not take title subject to lease and trust deed where there was no competent proof that such instruments were executed or recorded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Suit by Andrew Pansini and others against Jerome Weber and others to quiet title to real property. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants Alfonso T. Sepulveda and others appeal.

Affirmed.

John J. Wilson and Bartlett & Kearney, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Mitchell, Silberberg, Roth & Knupp and C. E. Erkel, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Respondents brought this action to quiet title to real property in Los Angeles County purchased by them from the Lurie Company, a corporation. Among the defendants sued were Gerald E. Arbuckle, Mae B. Ingraham, Jerome Weber, William I. Heffron, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Gerald E. Arbuckle, a bankrupt, and these appellants. The first three filed disclaimers, and Heffron defaulted. Appellants answered, alleging that they were the beneficiaries named in a trust deed given by Arbuckle covering a leasehold interest theretofore acquired by him in the property; and on information and belief appellants alleged that said leasehold interest was still in full force and effect, and that respondents acquired their title subject to said leasehold interest and the deed of trust. The judgment decreed that respondents' title be quieted, that the alleged adverse claims of appellants were void and invalid, and that appellants be enjoined from asserting claims to or any interest in the property.

[1, 2] Appellants contend that the evidence was sufficient to entitle them to a judgment sustaining their claims. There is no merit in the contention. The only evidence relating to their claims consisted of the recitals in an unsigned and uncertified preliminary title report on the property, which, in connection with another document, was admitted in evidence for the purpose of impeachment; and it is apparent that such recitals do not constitute competent proof of the execution or recordation of either of the instruments upon which appellants relied to establish their claims. The proceedings leading up to the introduction in evidence of the report were as follows: Respondents proved title and right of possession by the oral testimony of the respondent Andrew Pansini, and a grant deed conveying the property to respondents by the Lurie Company, the owner of the property. Pansini testified that pending negotiations for the purchase of the property and on July 1, 1939, respondents entered into possession as tenants from day to day at a rental of $40 a day; that thereafter the property was deeded to them by the Lurie Company, and that continuously since July 1, 1939, they had been and were then in possession of the property. The deed from the the Lurie Company to them was offered and received in evidence. It was dated July 15th, acknowledged on July 21st, and recorded on August 1, 1939. On cross-examination and evidently for the purpose of showing knowledge on the part of respondents of the Arbuckle lease and the trust deed, respondent was asked whether during the negotiations for the purchase of the property Mr. Lurie ever told him "that the property was involved in some difficulties," and respondent gave a negative answer. Thereupon counsel for appellants called respondent's attention to certain testimony theretofore given by him by way of deposition to the effect that preceding the sale of the property to them the Lurie Company and respondents had entered into some sort of a written agreement; and counsel for appellants then asked for the agreement. It was produced and counsel for appellants started to read certain provisions therefrom. Objection was made upon the ground that no part of it could be read into the record unless the document itself was admissible; whereupon counsel for appellants offered the agreement in evidence. Respondents objected on several grounds, among them being that the agreement was not in response to any issue made by the pleadings and had no bearing upon the case. In answer to the objection appellants' counsel stated: "I am offering it for the purpose of impeaching his testimony," and the court said, "For the purpose of impeachment, at least, the document is now admissible in evidence, and is received as Defendants' Exhibit A." The instrument proved to be an agreement of purchase and sale, and counsel for appellants then read the following provision therefrom: "Second parties agree to take title to said property subject to Exceptions one, two and four as shown on the preliminary report of Title Guarantee and Trust Company, of Los Angeles, No. 1173476, and to take said title temporarily subject to Exception three, the first party agrees to remove said Exception three within a reasonable time. First party agrees to pay title fees and any expenses involved in connection with the removal of said Exception three." The cross-examination then continued as follows: "With respect to Exception three, have you got the preliminary report of the title company? A. No, sir. Q. Have you seen the report? A. No, sir. Q. Do you know what exception three referred to in the agreement is? A. No, sir." Thereafter and as part of their case appellants offered the report in evidence, and it was admitted over respondents' objections that it was not the best evidence and did not tend to prove any of the issues in the case. The report is dated July 19, 1939, and the first line reads: "The Lurie Company, a corporation." Then after describing the property it purports to set forth the "exceptions" referred to in the agreement of purchase and sale. The first and second refer to taxes and an easement for a public street. The third is as follows: "3. A lease dated July 1, 1938, executed by The Lurie Company, a California corporation, as lessor, and by G. E. Arbuckle, as lessee, for the term of 99 years from July 1, 1938, upon terms, conditions and covenants therein provided recorded December 5, 1938, in Book 16291 Page 16 O.R. and as modified by agreement executed by said lessor and lessee dated November 30, 1938, recorded December 5, 1938, in Book 16182 Page 510 of O.R. said leasehold estate is subject to: * * *." Then follows the enumeration of several unrecorded subleases, and the recordation of two trust deeds purporting to have been executed by Arbuckle covering the master lease, and given to secure loans. Mae B. Ingraham, who disclaimed, appears as the beneficiary in the first trust deed, and the appellants Alfonso T. Sepulveda, Concepcion Finley, Laura Thesing and Candelaria Bernstein in the other. However, appellants made no attempt to follow up by offering in evidence either the Arbuckle lease or the trust deed, nor did they offer in evidence any certified copies thereof or any oral testimony whatever concerning their execution or recordation; so that those instruments were connected with the case only indirectly by way of recital in the preliminary title report; and as will be noted, the agreement and title report were offered and received in evidence, not as proof of title or adverse claims, but only for the purpose of impeaching a statement made by respondent on cross-examination. It follows, therefore, that in the absence of any competent proof of the execution or recordation either of the Arbuckle lease or the trust deed, appellants failed to substantiate the allegations of their answers as to the existence of these alleged adverse claims.

[3] In contending that the recitals in said preliminary report do serve as competent proof of the matters therein recited, appellants seek to invoke the rule that "when a witness is a party to an action any statement made by that party may be considered not only for the purpose of impeachment but as an admission against interest and as proof of the facts in issue to which it relates." However, that rule has no application here for the simple reason that the preliminary title report was not the statement or declaration of either the respondents or the Lurie Company from which respondents derived title. As stated, it was an unsigned, uncertified report prepared by the title company making search of the title; and the testimony of both Pansini and Lurie shows that neither had ever seen the report or knew of its contents. Pansini's testimony, in this regard, has already been quoted; and Lurie testified that he was "under the impression that there was a title report," but that he did not know what it contained; that his attorney handled those matters. As shown by the cases cited by appellants on this point, in order to bring a statement or declaration within the operation of the rule contended for it must be shown that the statement or declaration was signed or made by the party against whose interest it is sought to have it apply; and that is not the situation here presented.

[4] Appellants argue that since the agreement stated that respondents agreed "to take said title temporarily subject to Exception three (3)" as shown by the preliminary title report, which the Lurie Company agreed to remove within a reasonable time, respondents had actual notice of the contents of the title report. This contention is negatived by respondent's testimony wherein he stated positively that he had never seen the preliminary report and that he did not know what was referred to in the agreement as "exception three." Appellants also argue that "respondents had constructive notice of appellants' title by the prior recording of the instruments upon which appellants' title is founded." But as already pointed out, there is no competent proof upon which a finding could be based that the instruments so relied upon by appellants were ever executed or recorded.

Moreover and in any event, even though the recitals in the uncertified and unsigned preliminary title report could be considered as some evidence of the execution or recordation of the Arbuckle lease and trust deed, there would still be a fatal defect in appellants' proof in that they offered no evidence whatever in support of the allegations of their answers that said lease and trust deed were "still in full force and effect."

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Samuel J. Dunkin was convicted of issuing checks without sufficient funds, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Samuel J. Dunkin, in pro. per.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was charged in an amended information containing four counts with issuing checks without sufficient funds, and with a prior conviction of the same offense. He pleaded not guilty to the charge, denied the prior conviction and also pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity. The jury found him guilty on all four counts; found that the allegation of the prior conviction was true, and that he was sane at the time of the commission of the offenses charged in the amended information.

This appeal is prosecuted from the order denying motion for new trial and from the judgment of conviction.

The sole contention presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to show that appellant had no credit arrangement with the Bank of America to pay the checks at the time they were drawn or issued. In this connection, appellant asserts that by merely ascertaining the fact that he did not have a general credit arrangement with the bank, instead of establishing "whether there was an 'understanding or credit arrangement' with the Bank of America with regard to the four checks here in question," the prosecution failed to prove the offense defined by section 476a of the Penal Code, to wit: "(Issuance of check, draft or order without sufficient funds or credit with intent to defraud: Punishment: * * * 'Credit' defined: * * *) Any person who for himself * * * willfully, with intent to defraud, makes or draws or utters or delivers any check, or draft or order upon any bank * * * for the payment of money, knowing at the time of such making, drawing, uttering or delivering that the maker or drawer * * * has not sufficient funds in, or credit with said bank * * * for the payment of such check, draft or order, in full upon its presentation, although no express representation is made with reference thereto, is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than fourteen years. * * * 'Credit' defined. The word 'credit' as used herein shall be construed to mean an arrangement or understanding with the bank * * * for the payment of such check, draft or order."

The checks forming the basis of counts I and II were drawn on the Monterey Park branch of the Bank of America and were cashed by attendants at two Standard Oil Company service stations in the city of Los Angeles on April 1 and 2, 1941. The checks upon which counts III and IV were based were drawn on the Slauson and Vermont branch of the Bank of America and were cashed at Standard Oil Company service stations in Long Beach and Wilmington on May 23, 1941.

The four checks were introduced in evidence and the manager of the Monterey Park branch of the Bank of America testified that appellant had an account with that branch on April 1, 1941, but that the account was overdrawn on that date in the sum of $7.30; that on February 17, 1941, the overdrawn draft amounted to $1.30 and no deposits were made in the account after that date, except deposits made by the bank itself to offset charges made against the account by the return of such checks as the two checks here in question; that the account was finally closed by the bank on May 31, 1941, with an overdraft against the account at that time. This witness who, as manager of the particular branch, was familiar with the records of the bank, testified that he knew appellant and knew that no arrangement for credit to appellant had been made by the bank.

Mr. Hemmele, the teller of the Slauson and Vermont branch of the Bank of America, testified that he had access to the records of the bank, that he had examined the same and found there was no record of any account in appellant's name or in any similar name; that no arrangement for an extension of credit to appellant was ever made by the said bank, and that both checks (Exhibits 3 and 4) were rejected by the bank upon presentation. Neither of these witnesses was cross-examined by appellant, and he offered no evidence in conflict with their testimony.

[1] In view of the fact that appellant's account in the Monterey Park branch had been overdrawn for at least ten weeks prior to the issuance by him of the two checks covered by counts I and II of the amended information, together with the further fact that he had no account in the Slauson and Vermont branch upon which the two checks covered by counts III and IV were drawn, the testimony of the officers of these two branches of the Bank of America that appellant had made no arrangement with the bank for an extension of credit is conclusive.

This testimony in conjunction with the evidence of other witnesses adduced at the trial was legally sufficient to sustain the jury's verdict of appellant's guilt and to support the judgment of conviction.

[2, 3] As stated in People v. Schneider, 36 Cal.App.2d 292, 296, 98 P.2d 215, 217: "Answering the two additional points made by appellant relating to the evidence tending to establish guilt, it will suffice to say that the testimony given by the manager of the bank upon which the check was drawn that the person whose name was signed thereto had neither an account with the bank nor any credit therewith, was prima facie evidence of the fictitious character of the check, People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296; People v. Roche, 74 Cal.App. 556, 241 P. 279; People v. Walker, 15 Cal.App. 400, 114 P. 1009; People v. Bernard, 21 Cal.App. 56, 130 P. 1063, and that the intent to defraud and appellant's knowledge of the fictitious character of the check might reasonably have been inferred by the jury from all the circumstances shown by the evidence. People v. Roche, supra; People v. Thal, supra; People v. Hamby, 55 Cal.App. 37, 202 P. 907."

For the reasons stated, the judgment and order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action by F. Carleton Smith and wife against Clara H. Pope for damages resulting from injuries sustained by the wife in an accident which occurred while she was entering defendant's automobile. From judgment for the plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Dempster McKee, of San Diego, for appellant.

Clarence Harden, of San Diego, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and respondents, husband and wife, rendered by the court sitting without a jury against Clara H. Pope, defendant and appellant, for damages for personal injuries. The question involved turns on the construction of the so-called "guest statute." § 403 Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 154.

The facts of the case are not in dispute. The trial court specifically found as to the facts. We will therefore summarize them as found by the court. The injuries received by respondent Margaret D. Smith occurred on May 10, 1940, just before she entered an automobile driven by appellant. Appellant had arranged by telephone to take Mrs. Smith, without compensation, to a luncheon to which both women had been invited. Upon her arrival at the Smith home Mrs. Pope stopped her car at the curb. Mrs. Smith came out of her front door and walked toward the Pope car. The car was parked on the left or wrong side of the street, with the engine running and in gear. The driver remained seated in the car which was parked next to the sidewalk curb. Mrs. Smith went around the front end of the car and took hold of the handle of the door of the car opposite the driver's seat. Mrs. Pope is a short woman and, for convenient operation of the car, had attached to the clutch pedal an extension, the better to enable her to depress the clutch pedal and bring the car to a stop without shifting gears. On this occasion she operated the car in this fashion. She was wearing new shoes, the soles of which were slippery. The evidence indicates that Mrs. Pope reached across the car, unlatched the door which Mrs. Smith was approaching, and was in the process of opening it, or had opened it, when Mrs. Smith took hold of the handle of the door. Mrs. Pope's foot slipped off the clutch pedal just as Mrs. Smith grasped the door handle, causing her body to be thrown against the ground. At the instant when she had one foot on the ground, one foot in the air, but not yet on the running board and while she still had the handle of the car door in her grasp, the car jerked forward and Mrs. Smith was thrown thereby to the ground with resultant injuries. This act was found by the court to have been an act of negligence. It is conceded that this act of negligence did not constitute wilful misconduct permitting a recovery under the guest law. The injuries suffered were quite severe. Mrs. Smith's hip was broken. An operation became necessary and her recovery was slow. The court assessed the general damages recoverable by her at $4,000. The expenses incurred in treatment recoverable by Mr. Smith amounted to $1,397.54, and his general damages were assessed at $500. Appellant does not complain of the amount of the judgment. The court made findings of the evidentiary facts substantially as above and drew from these facts a conclusion that respondents were entitled to judgment.

Appellant now contends that Mrs. Smith was, as a matter of law, a guest within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code, and for that reason the judgment must be reversed. Respondents, of course, contend that the guest-host relationship was not established and that Mrs. Smith had not yet become a guest within the meaning of that section and that the finding of the trial court to that effect is controlling on appeal.

The original section 141¾ of the California Vehicle Act, St.1923, p. 517, as added by St.1929, p. 1580, in so far as it is pertinent to this discussion, reads as follows:

> "Any person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle, moving upon any of the public highways * * * and while so riding * * * receives * * * an injury, shall have no right of recovery against the owner * * *."

The section as it then stood was construed in Moreas v. Ferry, 135 Cal.App. 202, 26 P.2d 886, wherein the court analyzed the wording of the section. In that case, the plaintiff rode with the defendant to a theater. That theater was crowded. They decided to seek another place of entertainment. The defendant was sitting by the steering wheel and requested the plaintiff to crank the car. The plaintiff cranked the car and the crank kicked, breaking plaintiff's arm. The court held that under such circumstances the injury was not inflicted in any vehicle "moving upon any highway" and was not inflicted upon the guest "while so riding."

That section was also construed in Prager v. Isreal, 15 Cal.2d 89, 98 P.2d 729, 730, where it was held not applicable to a case where the defendant driver, who had been sitting in the automobile, started to leave the automobile and go around to the other side while plaintiff, in stepping from the automobile, had one foot on the ground and the other foot on the running board and the car moved forward throwing her to the ground. In other words, it was held that the plaintiff was not a guest under those circumstances, within the meaning of the act, who had accepted a ride in a vehicle "moving upon any of the public highways", and "while so riding as such guest" was injured, and that the plaintiff could not be said to "be riding" in said automobile within the meaning of said statute.

Subsequently, the Legislature recast the section and eliminated from it the wording "moving upon any of the public highways" and inserted the words "in any vehicle upon a highway" and further eliminated entirely the use of the phrase "while so riding."

Section 403 of the Vehicle Code now reads in part, in so far as here applicable, as follows:

> "No person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle upon a highway without giving compensation for such ride * * * has any right of action for civil damages against the driver of such vehicle * * * on account of personal injury to * * * such guest during such ride * * *." (Italics ours.)

[1-4] The conditions for the exemption from liability thus granted are two. (1) A guest shall accept a ride "in any vehicle"; and (2) the injury must occur "during such ride." In order to claim the benefit of the lessened liability provided by this section the defendant must show that the "guest" first accepted a ride in a vehicle and was thereafter injured during such ride. The term "in any vehicle" as here used, is not, and by force of reason would not be, limited to the construction that a person must be actually seated within the enclosure of the automobile before a person could be said to be "in any vehicle". It might well be anticipated that a person could be invited to ride on a vehicle other than within the enclosure so provided and still be a guest "in any vehicle," but we believe the additional term used, i. e., that the person must be injured "during such ride" contemplates that such a ride by the guest must have been actually commenced. In other words, it was not necessary, as it was before under the former section, to show that the vehicle was "moving upon any * * * highway," but only to show that the injury occurred "during the ride" which would include in that category all the time elapsed from the time of entering the vehicle, and while so continuing such occupancy, until the journey's end. This construction receives support in Frankenstein v. House, 1940, 41 Cal.App.2d 813, at page 815, 107 P.2d 624, at page 625, where it is said in discussing the time when the guest-host relationship begins: "Having placed herself under his care for a ride in his vehicle, and having remained therein until she was thrown therefrom 'on the highway', the relation of host and guest continued at all times from her entry into the automobile until she was thrown to the street." (Italics ours.) The court, in a recent case, Harrison v. Gamatero, 52 Cal.App.2d 178, 125 P.2d 904, decided May 21, 1942, has duly emphasized the term "during such ride," still remaining in the act, and has held that it must be shown that the injury occurred "during such ride." In Prager v. Isreal, supra, 15 Cal.2d at page 94, 98 P.2d at page 732, the court said: "We are likewise of the opinion that a person alighting from an automobile, who is in a position with one foot on the ground and the other on the running board when it so moves cannot be said to be 'riding' in said automobile within the meaning of said statute." The converse must therefore be true and it must follow that a person occupying practically the same position preparatory to entering a car cannot be said to be "riding" in said automobile within the meaning of the statute. See, also, Nemoitin v. Berger, 111 Conn. 88, 149 A. 233; Hunter v. Baldwin, 268 Mich. 106, 255 N.W. 431. Citations from the several states are not particularly helpful to the solution of this question, due to the difference in the wording of their guest statutes. The Iowa statute is quite similar to ours. Code of Iowa 1927, 1935, § 5026-b1, and Code of Iowa 1939, § 5037.10. It provides: "Guest statute. The owner * * * shall not be liable for any damages to any passenger * * * riding in said motor vehicle as a guest * * *." (Italics ours.) In construing that statute in Samuelson v. Sherrill, 225 Iowa 421, 280 N.W. 596, the court cited with approval Puckett v. Pailthorpe, 207 Iowa 613, 223 N.W. 254, 256, which was a case somewhat similar to the instant case. There, as here, the plaintiff was about to enter the car of defendant to begin a journey. Plaintiff had met the defendant, but by no prearrangement, at a restaurant, and defendant had invited the plaintiff to ride in his car on his return home. Plaintiff went ahead of the defendant to the car and, reaching it took hold of the handle of the door. The door came loose from its fastening and fell upon plaintiff. Unlike the case at bar, defendant was not seated in the car at the time the door fell on the plaintiff. But while this was one of the circumstances held by the court to be controlling in its determination that the guest-host relationship had not begun, the court put stress on a second and independent ground. Upon this second ground the court reasoned that the plaintiff was not "riding" in the car at the time of receiving her injuries, and held that because the plaintiff had not entered the car the guest statute did not apply. It said: "Moreover, the one who is called a 'passenger' must be riding in the car. To place emphasis upon this interpretation, the Legislature confined the passenger or person named in the section [5026–b1] to one who is 'riding in a motor vehicle 'as a guest or by invitation, and not for hire.' Then if such 'guest or person' is not 'riding,' the statute under consideration has no application. 'Riding modifies both passenger and person."

[5-7] The reasoning of the Iowa court in the Puckett case applied to the facts of the case at bar would place Mrs. Smith definitely outside the purview of the statute. Prior to the enactment of any "guest statute" in California, the driver of an automobile was liable to his guest for acts of ordinary negligence. This was the common law rule. Callet v. Alioto, 210 Cal. 65, 290 P. 438. The overwhelming weight of authority in this country is to the effect that in the absence of statute, under the common law, a guest may recover for failure of the driver to use ordinary care. It has consequently been held that section 403 of the Vehicle Code (the guest statute) was but a restriction on a common law right, and being in derogation of a common law right, such a statute may be extended only so far as a strict construction of the language of the statute makes it imperative. McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal.2d 279, 70 P.2d 909; Callet v. Alioto, supra. Therefore, only those persons who were guests within the definition adopted by the Legislature may be considered to have been deprived of the right to recover except for injuries due to the wilful misconduct or intoxication of the driver. The common law right of having redress for injuries wrongfully inflicted being lessened by such statute, necessitates a strict construction of the statute. The rule adopted in Prager v. Isreal, supra, to the effect that "cases be not held within the provisions of such statutes unless it clearly appears that it should be so determined" must here apply.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff and defendant intermarried on September 29, 1936, and separated on or about June 28, 1940, there being no children of the union.

On July 22, 1940, plaintiff husband filed his complaint for divorce alleging extreme cruelty as the ground therefor, to which defendant wife's demurrer was sustained, and on August 16, 1940, husband filed his amended complaint in which he more specifically alleged the acts of cruelty on the part of defendant wife. On February 4, 1941, defendant filed her cross-complaint and on March 14, 1941, her supplemental cross-complaint for divorce both of which alleged cruelty on the part of the plaintiff and cross-defendant husband.

The cause came on for trial on August 1, 2 and 4, 1941, and upon the conclusion of the introduction of evidence, plaintiff husband made a motion in open court for leave to file a supplemental amended complaint to conform to proof, alleging a cause of action for divorce on the ground of wilful desertion of defendant wife. This motion was granted, service of a copy of said supplemental amended complaint was made in open court, the original supplemental amended complaint was filed on August 4, 1941, and it was announced by the court that the allegations thereof would be deemed denied. "The parties introduced evidence in support of the allegations of their respective pleadings"; the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law to the effect that "the plaintiff is entitled to a divorce from the defendant on the ground of wilful desertion," and on August 26, 1941, an interlocutory decree of divorce was accordingly entered, specifically dividing certain personal property between the parties; ordering the cancellation of a homestead selected by defendant wife from the separate property of plaintiff husband, and ordering plaintiff husband to pay to defendant wife $650 for her support and maintenance in monthly installments of $50 each beginning August 19, 1941. Thereafter, defendant made her motion for a new trial which was by the court denied.

This appeal is prosecuted by defendant wife from that portion of the judgment which grants to plaintiff husband "an interlocutory decree of divorce on the ground of desertion, as well as that part thereof purporting to cancel the homestead and set aside the same to the plaintiff above named."

Appellant urges that the supplemental amended complaint to conform to proof was simply an amended complaint referring back to the commencement of the original action; that "wilful desertion as a cause of action for divorce in this state is a separation by one of the parties, against the will and without the consent of the other, for a period of one year"; and that "By the filing of his several complaints and answers his (husband's record 'affirmatively' shows that his wife's absence was not without his consent"; but that "after his commencement of the action the separation was with his consent." (Italics included.) In support of this position appellant cites the case of Ewing v. Ewing, 16 Cal.2d 208, 105 P.2d 586.

Said cited case "came on for trial upon pleadings by which each of the parties charged the other with cruelty. The appellant [husband] then filed an amended complaint alleging a cause of action for wilful desertion and the respondent [wife] filed an amended cross-complaint upon the same ground. At the time the suit was brought they had been separated less than three months, but more than one year had elapsed between the date of separation and the filing of the amended pleadings. An interlocutory decree granted the respondent upon her cross-complaint is challenged by the appellant upon two grounds. He asserts that the time during which an action for divorce is pending may not be included in computing the one-year period during which wilful desertion must continue if it is to be the basis for divorce, and that if such period may properly be included, the evidence does not support a finding that his desertion continued for one year prior to the filing of the amended cross-complaint." Ewing v. Ewing, supra.

It was there held at page 209 of 16 Cal.2d, at page 586 of 105 P.2d: "To sustain the decree in this case, the evidence must show that the appellant left his wife with the intention to desert her, and that his desertion continued for one year. Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467; Strupelle v. Strupelle, 59 Cal. App. 526, 211 P. 248. Also, Mrs. Ewing must have been willing to have her husband return and resume marital relations during that period. This court has repeatedly held that to constitute a cause of action for divorce, absence must continue for one year without the consent of the spouse seeking the decree." The court then continues that the action of Mrs. Ewing in filing a cross-complaint less than ten months after the parties separated in which she charged her husband with numerous acts of cruelty and prayed for an absolute divorce "was in effect an assent to the separation and an expression of her desire to terminate the marriage as of that date. From that time until the complaint and cross-complaint were amended, neither party could justly claim that the necessary elements for desertion were present. Even had the trial court found that in October, 1935, the appellant left his wife against her wishes and that his desertion continued although she was willing that he return to her, that attitude certainly did not continue after August 4, 1936, when she asked the court to grant her a divorce upon the ground that her husband's conduct had been such 'as to render the continuance of their present relationship intolerable'. Silva v. Silva, 32 Cal.App. 115, 116, 162 P. 142."

Whether the supplemental amended complaint was merely an amendment to the original complaint or was "in reality a substituted pleading, complete in itself," as is contended by respondent, it is not necessary to decide in view of the conclusion heretofore reached.

[3] With respect to the appeal from that portion of the decree which cancelled and assigned to respondent husband the homestead selected by appellant wife from the separate property of said husband, section 146 of the Civil Code provides: "If a homestead has been selected from the separate property of either [husband or wife], in cases in which the decree is rendered upon any ground other than incurable insanity, it shall be assigned to the former owner of such property, subject to the power of the court to assign it for a limited period to the party to whom the divorce is granted * * *." See, also, Glass v. Glass, 4 Cal. App. 604, 88 P. 734; Greenlee v. Greenlee, 7 Cal.2d 579, 61 P.2d 1157.

Because of the conclusion reached upon the principal point presented by this appeal, this question as to the homestead has become moot, therefore the appeal from that portion of the interlocutory decree with reference thereto is dismissed. That portion of the interlocutory decree granting to respondent husband a divorce on the ground of desertion is reversed.

Action for divorce by James Robert Brooks against Bessie Marie Brooks, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From that portion of an interlocutory decree for plaintiff ordering plaintiff to pay $650 for defendant's support and maintenance, plaintiff appeals.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from that portion of an interlocutory decree (granting to appellant a divorce on the ground of desertion) by which he was ordered to pay $650 for the support and maintenance of respondent wife, in monthly installments of $50 each, beginning August 19, 1941.

Appellant urges that it is only when the divorce is granted for the offense of the husband that such support may be awarded to the wife.

The parties hereto intermarried on September 29, 1936, and separated on or about June 28, 1940, there being no children of the union. On July 22, 1940, appellant husband filed an action for divorce on the ground of cruelty; thereafter respondent wife filed a cross-complaint alleging cruelty on the part of appellant husband. At the conclusion of the trial on August 4, 1941, appellant was permitted to file a supplemental amended complaint to conform to proof setting up a cause of action against respondent wife for desertion. Thereafter the trial court made its interlocutory decree granting a divorce to appellant husband for the desertion of respondent wife, divided certain personal property between them pursuant to a stipulation theretofore entered into by them, cancelled and awarded to appellant a homestead which had been selected by respondent from the separate property of appellant, and ordered appellant to pay $650 to respondent for her support and maintenance in monthly installments of $50 each beginning August 19, 1941.

[1] The court found that "plaintiff has expended since his said marriage, for necessary living and other expenses, more than he has earned"; that husband owns separate property of the value of $15,000 and defendant and cross-complainant owns separate property of the approximate value of $2,500. It was also found that the only articles of community property of the parties were an overstuffed davenport and chair of the value of $60 located in the home of appellant.

In view of these findings of fact made upon issues presented by the pleadings with respect to the character of the property owned by the parties hereto, it is obvious that the allowance to the wife for her support and maintenance was made from the separate property of the husband.

[2] In the case of Fox v. Fox, 18 Cal.2d 645, 646, 117 P.2d 325, 326, the husband was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce from the wife on the ground of extreme cruelty. The court ordered him to pay her $840. It was there held: "In an action for divorce, only the community property and the homestead may be awarded; the court is not authorized to assign the separate property of one of the spouses to the other, nor to require one to pay to the other any amount in lieu of an assignment or division of it. Conard v. Conard, 5 Cal.App.2d 91, 41 P.2d 968. The decree in the present case violates this rule and must be modified by striking therefrom the provisions relating to the payment of $840."

[3] In Harwell v. Harwell, 26 Cal.App.2d 143, 144, 78 P.2d 1167, it was held: "* * * an innocent husband, who is given a divorce from a guilty wife because of her desertion, cannot be compelled to pay her permanent support money after the divorce. If the interlocutory decree attempts to award the guilty wife support money, that portion of it is void. Lampson v. Lampson, 171 Cal. 332, 153 P. 238; Johnson v. Johnson, 104 Cal.App. 283, 285 P. 902; Johnson v. Superior Court, 128 Cal.App. 584, 17 P.2d 1055; Schluter v. Schluter, 130 Cal.App. 780, 20 P.2d 723; Gaudio v. Gaudio, 138 Cal.App. 289, 32 P.2d 156."

For the reasons stated, that portion of the interlocutory decree awarding the sum of $650 to respondent for support and maintenance is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George A. Dockweiler, Judge.

Action by Elma I. Moore against E. F. Stella, individually and as trustee, etc., and others, for recovery of sums paid by plaintiff for conveyances of mineral rights in prospective oil lands, and the purchase of stock of three corporations, from all of which transactions plaintiff had withdrawn by notice of rescission. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Modified and affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 124 P.2d 167.

Chas. I. Rosin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Maurice Gordon, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae, for appellants.

Joseph N. Owen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant E. F. Stella upon thirteen causes of action in the sum of $9,775; upon one cause of action Stella-Harold Development Company, a corporation, was held jointly liable with Stella in the sum of $2,000, and upon three of the causes of action defendant Dallas M. Steele was held jointly liable with Stella in the sum of $1,200. The action is one for the recovery of sums paid by plaintiff for conveyances of mineral rights in prospective oil land in Glenn and Tehama counties, California, which were the subject of nine of the causes of action, and the purchase of stock of three corporations from defendant Steele, an agent of defendant Stella, from all of which transactions plaintiff had withdrawn by notice of rescission. The thirteenth cause of action was for money had and received and encompassed the matters covered by the other twelve causes of action. The basis of the judgment was that the instruments involved were securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814, and were sold without a permit of that Department and with intent upon the part of the sellers to violate and evade the provisions of the act.

Defendant Stella was a licensed real estate broker but held no broker's license from the Department of Corporations. Defendant Steele was employed by Stella as a member of his sales organization and received a commission of 25 per cent on sales made by her.

Stella acquired the mineral rights, but not surface rights, in some 1,546 acres in Tehama County and 5,760 acres in Glenn County. The Tehama County land was divided in parcels of two and one-half acres each, and the Glenn County land into one-acre parcels, and these were offered for sale and were sold and deeds were given to the public without any permit from the Department of Corporations. The subdivision plan had been submitted to the office of the Real Estate Commissioner and, except as hereinafter noted, the provisions of the California Real Estate Act, Stats. 1919, p. 1252, as amended, Deering's Gen. Laws,1937, Act 112, appear to have been complied with.

The sales of mineral rights were initiated by written agreement between Stella and the purchaser one of them with plaintiff and which was typical of all of them, reading as follows:

"By this agreement, E. F. Stella agrees to sell and assign, and Mrs. Elma I. Moore agrees to buy, all of the mineral rights in and to 2 acre ½ to be selected by E. F. Stella, out of the acreage contained in Section 24, T. 23 N., R. 4 West, Tehama County, California, for the full purchase price of five hundred Dollars ($500.00) payable in the following manner: $500.00 cash, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged and the balance of $ cash in full.

"Upon receipt of said payment at the time and in the manner agreed, the party of the first part agrees to deliver to the party of the second part, heirs or assigns, a good and sufficient assignment of said 2½ acre parcel, on or before thirty (30) days from the date of last payment.

"Time is of the essence of this agreement and in the event of a failure to comply with the terms hereof by the said party of the second part, the said party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to deed said parcel, and the said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto, and the right of possession thereof and to any money paid thereon.

"Notice: E. F. Stella will not be responsible for payments made with currency unless said currency has actually been received by him."

Pursuant to the agreements of sale conveyances were made in the following form:

"Reference is made to the fact that the undersigned, by a grant deed dated January 25, 1938, and recorded on the 26th day of January, 1938, in the office of the County Recorder of Tehama County, California, in Liber. 94 of Offical Records, page 406, Records of Tehama County, became the owner of the mineral rights on the acreage therein described.

"The undersigned hereby sells, assigns, transfer... and conveys to Elma I. Moore of 420 South Oxford Ave., Los Angeles, California any and all mineral rights in and to the following described parcel of property. The Northeast ¼ of the Northeast ¼ of the Southeast ¼ of the Northeast ¼ of Section 24, Township 23 North, Range 4 West, M. D. B. & M., and containing 2½ acres.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 24th day of March, 1938.

"E. F. Stella"

It is to be noted that by the agreement Stella had the right to select the particular parcel to be conveyed from a described section of land, which, after being selected by him, was particularly described in a later instrument designated "Assignment." These conveyances transferred no surface rights to the respective purchasers. So-called assignments, which were in reality deeds of mineral rights, were made of all the interests purchased by plaintiff of land in Tehama County. She purchased twenty acres of land in Glenn County from Stella under the same form of agreement, which gave Stella the right to select the parcel or parcels he might choose to convey, but no deed was ever delivered to plaintiff on this purchase, although she paid Stella $1,200 as the full purchase price.

The court found that the transfers of mineral rights constituted securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act; that the sales were made without a permit and in violation of sections 3, 4, 6, 7 and 9 of that Act. It was further found that four of said parcels lying in Tehama County were sold in violation of a permit issued by the Real Estate Commissioner, in that by the terms of the permit the same were not to be sold until the land had been surveyed and a map thereof filed and recorded with the county recorder of Tehama County, which survey was never made.

Before discussing questions as to the applicability of the Corporate Securities Act to the conveyances of mineral rights, it should be mentioned that the complaint was also based upon charges of actual fraud. It was alleged that false statements were made to plaintiff concerning the value of said mineral rights and with respect to operations that were represented as being under way for the drilling of oil wells close to the lands sold to plaintiff and which were represented as about to be brought in as productive wells; that plaintiff was nearly eighty years of age, inexperienced in business, had no knowledge and received no independent advice concerning the matters as to which the representations were made; that the representations were wholly false, and that plaintiff was deceived thereby. The case was tried upon the issues relating to the alleged violations of the Corporate Securities Act by the defendants and not upon the issue of actual fraud, although the court made findings in plaintiff's favor upon the latter issue. Plaintiff does not contend that these findings are supported by the evidence, which on this phase of the case was quite incomplete, and they will be disregarded in our discussion.

Stella had been sales manager of El Claro Oil and Gas Company, a corporation which in 1932 was engaged in selling oil investments in Glenn County under a scheme which was denounced in a decision of the District Court of Appeal in El Claro Oil, etc., Co. v. Daugherty, 1936, 11 Cal. App.2d 274, 53 P.2d 1028, 55 P.2d 488 as in violation of the Corporate Securities Act. The operations which are involved in the instant case were a continuation of the same general promotional activities in different property under a slightly different scheme. However the one here under review, we think, failed, as the one denounced in the El Claro case did, to successfully circumvent the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. The property which was acquired by the investors consisted of a right to extract oil, gas and other mineral substances from the parcels of land conveyed and, it may be assumed for the purposes of this decision, such surface rights as would have been necessary in order to carry on proper exploratory and development work. The question before the trial court, which is determinative of the question of legality, was whether, in practical effect, the scheme under which the deeds were given contemplated and involved investment by the purchasers in an enterprise or venture conducted by others for earnings and profits or, more specifically, whether investors were led to part with their money upon the promise and in the expectation that they would be able at some future time to lease their interests to some oil company upon a royalty basis and whether this inducement, though not expressed in writing, was the sum and substance of the entire scheme of investment. If the correct answer to this question is in the affirmative, then the deeds partook of the very essence of those types of investment contracts which throughout the history of legislation on the subject in this state have been deemed to be proper subjects for regulatory supervision. It is not necessary to assume, and it is not assumed, that every conveyance of mineral rights in a parcel of land comprising one acre or two and one-half acres is necessarily a security within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act, Stats.1917, p. 673, as amended, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 3814.

Section 2(a) 7 of the Act includes in the definition of the word "security" "any * * * certificate of interest in an oil, gas or mining title or lease," and the decisive question is whether the deeds issued to plaintiff fall within that definition. A deed to mineral rights may or may not be a security. The determination of its true character requires an inquiry which goes beyond the mere name of the instrument or the nature of the interest conveyed.

[2] We are of the opinion that the evidence fully supports the finding that the mineral deeds were "certificates of interest" in an oil, gas or mining title and were therefore "securities" which could not be sold without a permit. In considering the nature of the instruments it is necessary to have an understanding of the mutual purposes and expectations of the parties and of the potentialities of the rights acquired by the grantees as investments. Whether the transactions were clean-cut transfers of interests in real estate to be held, used, or sold by the grantees without participation with others in a profit-sharing venture on the one hand, or whether upon the other hand, while they were conveyances of definite interests in real property, they were intended by both seller and buyer to transfer rights to participate in earnings or profits in the nature of landowner's oil royalties that might inure to the benefit of numerous landowner lessors under community leases, was necessarily a question of fact for the trial court. Ther was evidence, both direct and circumstantial, which tended strongly to support the implied finding that the transactions were essentially of the latter class. For the following discussion we accept certain deductions of fact which we believe necessarily led the trial court to the ultimate finding of fact that the mineral deeds were securities. We regard the latter as a finding of fact rather than as a conclusion of law because it encompasses determinations of certain evidentiary facts relating to the nature of the rights acquired by the purchasers of "mineral rights," to the reasonable probabilities of the realization of returns in the way of oil or gas production, and to the practical and not merely the theoretical positions the purchasers occupied as owners of mineral rights in small parcels of land in a wilderness of undeveloped and unproven acreage. We believe that the trial court must have been satisfied from the evidence that it was highly improbable that these parcels could have been developed for oil by the owners or that either the defendants or the purchasers expected that they would be developed at all unless they should be grouped into tracts of sufficient size to justify expensive exploratory drilling. Our conclusions are to be understood as being predicated substantially upon the deductions mentioned.

In the El Claro Company case sales and assignments had been made by the corporation of interests in oil leases which it held as lessee, the lessee's rights being assigned to buyers as to certain specific parcels of the total acreage under lease. The purchasers then by separate instruments assigned their holdings to another corporation which was to drill and divide proceeds from production among the investors upon a pro rata basis. The interests sold by the corporation were held to be securities for the reason that the scheme, viewed in its entirety, contemplated participation by the investors in returns from oil development to be conducted by the operating company. The fundamental facts and principles of the El Claro case cannot be distinguished from those of the instant case. To be sure, the investors here were not offered the opportunity to join in community leases or subleases, as they were in the El Claro case, but from the nature of the transactions and the surrounding circumstances it is clear that such leases were contemplated and in a practical sense that they were necessary in order to accomplish the exploration and development of the land for oil. The lands were located in unproven territory. There was a well producing gas which was under the control of Stella, who was financing the drilling of another well in the same locality. The cost of the latter well, if it should be drilled without mechanical trouble, was estimated by Stella at $75,000. There was no pretense at the trial and nothing in the evidence to suggest that any of the investors would ever have been able to drill oil wells themselves or that they had any intention of doing so. In a letter to the Real Estate Commissioner dated June 21, 1937, Stella said in part, referring to the well he was drilling: "I should complete it within a short period of time providing I am able to meet the financial requirements for the carrying on of the uninterrupted drilling. I find however that since the permit was granted my volume of sales has been very disappointing due to the fact that I am compelled to sell two and a half acre drill sites and must require down payments of not less than $25 and $25 monthly payments thereafter. I know of a good many worthy people who hold fairly good positions and have been steadily employed for many years and have been steadily employed by the same people for whom they are working who are really desirous of acquiring one of these drill sites, but the payment of $25 per month is more than they can possibly stand, and therefore they have to forego the opportunity of purchasing same." The letter was written as a request that the sale of drill sites of one acre each without change of existing prices might be authorized.

[3] The court asked defendant Stella the following question: "Do you think it was within the contemplation of the parties that the plaintiff was going to go in there and put an oil well up?" to which Stella replied, "She can lease it to some one else" and further, "The court: Just like when you are selling these fractional interests or anything else. For instance, these people certainly could not go in and drill this property when they haven't right of ingress or egress. The Witness: Oh, they can lease it, your Honor." Defendant Steele had acquired from Stella from time to time certain of the same type of mineral rights as those sold to plaintiff. She had been employed by El Claro Company as a member of its sales force. She testified with relation to her holdings in the present venture as follows: "Q. Well, this oil purchase was really your first venture in oil, wasn't it? A. No, I lost this old syndicate, this old stock that you read in the law books, I lost in that, but I thought when I could buy my own deed and own the land myself and let the major companies do the drilling of the wells, I would have something worth holding for." Nowhere in the record is there to be found any testimony which even suggests a possibility of exploitation or development of an oil field in the lands in question other than through the medium of community leases. Of course each owner of a drill site would have the right to drill a well on it or to lease it separately for the drilling of a well (assuming that he also held the necessary surface rights), but the scheme of the promotion cannot be given a pattern drawn on this fantastic possibility. In his testimony defendant Stella frequently referred to sales and leases of small tracts of land in proven oil fields as justifying the prices he was receiving from investors in his own promotional schemes, and the inference is inescapable that these same arguments must have been a part of the stock in trade of the defendants and their salesmen. In theory an oil field might have been developed of such great value that each investor would have been able to lease each drill site he owned separately and without joining with other owners in a community lease. From a practical viewpoint this possibility was so remote as to be nonexistent for the simple reason that under the only feasible plan of development through the blocking up of large acreage in a common lease the several owners would have had no drill sites left upon which to give separate leases. It is a matter of common knowledge that exploration for new oil fields is carried on under leases embracing large areas and that it is only in proven oil fields which have first been developed by those holding large acreage that further development is carried on under leases of smaller tracts, that the instances are yet more rare in which the development goes into closely subdivided areas under community leases, and that in yet rarer instances so-called "drill sites" in well proven fields become the subject of independent development.

The deviations of the scheme from the one denounced in the El Claro case were of form and not substance, the only difference being that under the scheme used by the El Claro Company community leases were executed in connection with the original sale of mineral rights, whereas under the scheme involved in the instant case the actual execution of community leases, while essential to the exploration of the lands of the investors, was deferred to some indefinite future time when conditions might warrant the leasing of the land by oil-producing companies financially able to conduct oil development in a normal and businesslike manner. These are the principal reasons why we believe the trial court was justified in concluding that the mineral rights involved would be, in a practical sense, incapable of development except in the event and by means of operations conducted by others in which the several investors, as lessors, would be given the right to share ratably in landowners' royalties. The significance of this conclusion is obvious.

There have been frequent changes in the definition of the word "security" as used in the Corporate Securities Act in the interest of clarity and precision, but they have denoted no changes in the essential policy of the law. Apparently the amendments with respect to phraseology have been considered necessary in order to keep pace with the ingenuity of those promoters who persist in hunting for some hole in the law that is not plugged with a word. Deeds to interests in real property may be "certificates of interest" and hence "securities" although the word "deed" is not used in the definition.

In situations in which the facts were not different in fundamental respects from those disclosed in the instant case, the courts have held that conveyances in the form of deeds, employed as instruments for the transfer of interests in oil production, were in reality certificates of interest in oil and gas titles. People v. Jackson, 1937, 24 Cal.App.2d 182, 188, 74 P.2d 1085; People v. Daniels, 1938, 25 Cal.App.2d 64, 66, 67, 76 P.2d 556. Repetition of the reasoning which the courts followed in reaching this conclusion is wholly unnecessary, as is also citation of the authorities discussed and followed therein. It is true that the conveyances involved in those cases were of small interests in the fee title, or title to mineral rights, in land which was already under lease for oil development, whereas, as we have pointed out, the several parcels of land in which plaintiff invested were not subject to an oil lease or leases. The parcels involved in the Daniels case were described by the court as being "infinitesimal" in area and those considered in the Jackson case were referred to as "exceedingly small" but these were only evidentiary facts mentioned by the court as bearing upon the essential features of the promotional plans under which the small participating interests were sold. It is not the area of the land sold that determines the question of validity of the deed; it is the nature of the rights acquired by the purchaser, considered as an investment. We have stated at length reasons why the circumstance that the land was not already under lease is not determinative as to the essential nature of the transactions in question. Plaintiff and others who invested in the enterprises of the defendants would have been in a better position had the land been under lease to a responsible oil company; at least they would have had the assurance that the exploration of the oil possibilities of their holdings would be conducted by a competent operator and in a manner and under a plan of development that would be fair to the lessors.

It is contended by defendants and in a brief of amicus curiae which we have allowed to be filed, that to require a permit for the sale of mineral rights under such schemes as defendants were using would infringe upon the rights of owners of land which may be oil-bearing to dispose of the same in small parcels, as owners of other lands have the unquestioned right to do without regulation under the Corporate Securities Act, and that the Act does not provide for such regulation. The proposition suggests a non sequitur. In holding that the deeds to mineral rights issued by the defendants without a permit were invalid, we of course do not hold that every conveyance of a fractional interest in prospective oil land or of a segregated parcel thereof is a security or, more specifically, that it is a certificate of interest in an oil title. What we do decide is that the deeds issued by defendants under the circumstances related in this opinion and in light of the intentions and purposes of the parties with respect to possible returns to the investors as we understand them to have been, were certificates of interest in an oil title which could not lawfully be sold except under a permit of the Commissioner of Corporations. If we were to hold otherwise the bars would be thrown down for promoters of oil ventures to go to the public with deeds to mineral rights instead of corporate stock, withholding the actual giving of oil leases until the land had been unloaded or perhaps not leasing the land at all, and the law as to such operations would be completely nullified. The Legislature has not either intentionally or inadvertently allowed a means of escape from regulation through such devices.

The brief of amicus curiae quotes at length from People v. Anderson, 1939, 35 Cal.App.2d 23, 94 P.2d 627, a case in which it was held that sales of ore yet to be mined with a guarantee of a return of double the money invested were not sales of securities. That is not at all like our case. Had the sales in the Anderson case been of square-foot areas of a mining claim, with knowledge of the sellers and the purchasers that the latter did not intend to and could not work their several interests, but intended to lease them for a common operation under which they would be entitled to royalties, the facts would compare with those in our case, but we think the holding in the Anderson case would then have been different.

[4] It has been the consistent policy of the state, as reflected in the various definitions of "security," to subject to regulation all schemes for investment, regardless of the forms of procedure employed which are designed to lead investors into enterprises where the earnings and profits of business or speculative ventures must come through the management, control, and operations of others and which, regardless of form, have the characteristics of operations by corporations, trusts or similar business structures. The plan of operations followed by defendants comes within this classification.

Before leaving this phase of the case it may be worthwhile to again mention that the case before us is one in which plaintiff has chosen to disaffirm all of her transactions with the defendants and to renounce all claim of interest in or to rights accruing to her under the conveyances and has elected to demand the return of her money. The decision naturally is not determinative of the rights of other investors who have received similar deeds and who have elected or may elect to retain such interests as may have passed to them under their respective conveyances.

The court found as to certain of the sales of mineral rights that the same had been made in violation of a "permit" of the Real Estate Commissioner and found as a conclusion of law that they were made in violation of law. The record fails to show that any order was made by the Real Estate Commissioner prohibiting the sale of any of the mineral rights which plaintiff purchased, under section 20e of the California Real Estate Act, Stats.1919, p. 1252, as amended, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 112, although it does appear that the report of the department contained a recital that the subdivider, Stella, agreed not to sell certain acreage, including that now under discussion, until a survey had been made and a map placed of record. The findings establish these facts and the further facts that the survey was not made and the map was not recorded. We find it unnecessary to consider the bearing, if any, which these facts would have upon the validity of the transfers, as the judgment finds support in the other facts found.

[5] In one of the transactions plaintiff received an agreement for the sale of the mineral rights involved in the seventh cause of action, which was signed, "E. F. Stella by Dallas M. Steele" and the "assignment" that followed was signed "Stella-Harold Development Company by E. F. Stella, President." This is the cause of action upon which the Stella-Harold Development Company was held jointly liable with Stella and it is contended that there is no evidence of liability on the part of the corporation. There is no merit in this contention. In plaintiff's opening brief it is said, "In proximity to the development work that he was doing he [Stella] acquired, by mineral deed, considerable acreage, taken in the name of Stella-Harold Development Company, giving him the right to explore, for oil or gas, with right of ingress and egress to the property. * * * Appellant Stella divided this acreage in parcels of two and a half acres each and sold the same to the public, giving an assignment of all his right, title and interest in and to the mineral rights in and to the said property."

The evidence fully supports this statement of the relationship between Stella and the corporation. Whether the corporation was a principal in the transaction and profited thereby or acted only as the agent of Stella, it participated in the illegal sale and issuance of the security and was properly held to a joint liability with Stella. The court found that the corporation was the alter ego of Stella but it is not necessary to review the evidence upon which that finding rests. The finding was not necessary to establish liability on the part of the corporation.

The absence of findings on the eighth cause of action does not weaken the judgment; the all-inclusive findings on the thirteenth cause of action are sufficient.

Under proceedings for attachment a writ was issued against all of the defendants and was executed by levy upon property of Stella and Stella-Harold Development Company. All of the defendants joined in a motion to discharge the attachment upon the ground, among others, that plaintiff held security that was not without value, consisting of the properties which she had purchased; their motion was denied; they gave notice of appeal but their attempted appeal was dismissed because of their failure to perfect it. In deciding the motion to dissolve the attachment, after an extended hearing the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law upon substantially all of the facts in issue, finding particularly that the mineral deeds and stocks were securities, that they were sold without any permit or broker's license, that the stock was sold with intent to violate and evade the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act, and that the debts for which plaintiff sued were not secured. Upon the trial plaintiff contended that the findings and conclusions upon the motion constituted a final determination of the facts in issue in the case under the doctrine of res judicata; the finding of the court was contrary to this contention and it is now put forward again as an independent ground for affirmance of the judgment.

In view of our conclusion that the judgment should be affirmed on the merits it is unnecessary to decide the point now urged by respondent, in further support of the judgment, namely, that findings and conclusions upon all of the issues in the case, made in plaintiff's favor upon a ruling by the trial court denying defendants' motion to discharge an attachment, which ruling became final upon dismissal of defendants' attempted appeal therefrom, constituted a final adjudication in plaintiff's favor upon all of the facts and points of law decided upon the motion, under the doctrine of res judicata.

The issues which involved sales of stock to plaintiff in three corporations were also correctly decided. The purchases were of stock of Fortuna Holding Corporation, K. B. P. Holding Corporation, and Summit Holding Corporation. The first named was originally the R. B. Knitting Mills, Inc. The second had been named Montroy Electric Co. Stella acquired the outstanding stock of these corporations which had been issued under permit of the Corporation Department. After acquiring the stock he caused the names of two of the corporations to be changed and altered their corporate structures, in one case increasing the authorized number of capital shares and in the other case decreasing them. He surrendered the old shares of stock and caused to be issued shares under the changed capital structures; no permit was obtained for these issuances of stock. In some fashion or other defendant Dallas M. Steele acquired from Stella shares in each of the corporations and she made the sales to plaintiff from stock which stood in her name. All of the sums she received were immediately paid over to Stella and they were credited by the latter upon alleged purchases by Mrs. Steele from Stella of the same type of mineral rights as those sold to plaintiff. Both Mrs. Steele and Stella testified that Mrs. Steele owned the stock and that she had acquired some of it for a cash consideration, some of it in exchange for interests which she held in the El Claro Oil and Gas Company and other shares as bonuses in connection with the promotional enterprises in which she was engaged with Stella. The inquiry into the transactions between Mrs. Steele and Stella relating to her alleged purchases of mineral rights and her acquisition of the stocks was exhaustive but as an effort to learn the truth of the situation, was far from fruitful. The testimony of both defendants on these subjects was contradictory, evasive in the extreme, and disclosed an intention to conceal important facts. Mrs. Steele was utterly unable to tell when she had purchased mineral rights, how many parcels she had purchased, what acreage was embraced in the purchases, how much she had ever owned at any one time, how much she owned at the time of trial, how much she ever agreed to pay Stella for the conveyances, how much she had paid him, or how much she owed him, if anything. Defendant Stella produced some cards which purported to record purchases of mineral rights by Mrs. Steele, but the latter had no knowledge of these records and no records of her own. Equally unsatisfactory was the testimony of these witnesses with reference to the shares of stock supposedly acquired by Mrs. Steele, portions of which were later sold to plaintiff. No records of these transactions were kept by either party, there was no tangible or satisfactory evidence that Mrs. Steele had acquired any of the stock in bona fide business transactions, and the trial court was fully justified in concluding that the shares standing in the name of Mrs. Steele were held for defendant Stella and were to be disposed of for his benefit. It was reasonably to be inferred that the stock was actually sold to plaintiff for the benefit of defendant Stella and that the alleged sales of mineral rights by the latter to Mrs. Steele were but a device set up to justify the payment to Stella of the proceeds from the stock sales. The three corporations whose stock was sold to plaintiff held mineral rights or leases or interests in production under oil leases and part of the stock of some of the corporations was owned by the other corporations. Stella was financing the drilling of oil wells on lands and under leases in which the three corporations were interested and in the returns from which they would share in the event of successful development. He was using the money derived from the sale of mineral rights to finance these oil drilling operations and, as we have seen, he realized cash from the sales of stock made by Mrs. Steele through the medium of transfers to her of mineral rights. The corporations appear to have been merely instrumentalities used by Stella to raise money for the purpose of acquiring mineral rights in land and for the purpose of drilling oil wells as a part of one comprehensive promotional scheme. It was largely for the use and benefit of the three corporations that defendant Stella was financing and drilling the several oil wells. It was only through the oil development program that the corporations could hope to profit, for they were engaged in no business or operations of their own and were possessed of no assets other than their oil interests which were intermingled with those of the defendants. One of the alluring inducements held out to investors was the fact that Stella was drilling the oil wells at his own expense. This was an important part of the scheme and the evidence was quite sufficient to warrant the trial court in believing that the sales of stock in the corporations by Stella for the purpose of raising money to be used in drilling the wells was also a part of the promotional scheme. The trial court also was justified in drawing an inference that the stock transactions between Stella and Steele and the later sales made to plaintiff were none of them bona fide deals in personally owned stock but were mere devices for financing the scheme; that they were made indirectly for the use and benefit of the corporations whose stock was sold, which benefit was received through the use of the proceeds from stock sales to finance the oil drilling operations on behalf and in the interests of the corporations.

The plan of the defendants in the larger view was to carry on oil development to attract purchasers of the mineral rights, and to use the money received on sales of mineral rights to carry on the development work and for the purchase of additional mineral rights. By devious means defendants sought to accomplish the same purposes that would have been accomplished in a lawful and legitimate manner by the authorized sale of stock of a corporation holding title to the mineral rights and engaged in developing them with the proceeds of stock sold to investors and for the benefit of stockholders. In other words, defendants had a purpose which may have been entirely lawful but which, for reasons which we do not know and which are unimportant, they chose to accomplish in an illegal manner.

[6] It is insisted by appellants that although the stocks were securities they were lawfully sold as securities which were exempted from the provisions of section 2 (c) 3 of the Corporate Securities Act, which provides that the act is not applicable to "The sale of securities when made by or on behalf of a vendor not the issuer or underwriter thereof who, being a bona fide owner of such securities, disposes of his own property for his own account, and such sale is not made, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of the issuer or an underwriter of such security, or for the direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with the intent of violating or evading any provision of this act." In view of the purposes of defendants Stella and Steele in making the stock sales it is apparent that they were not disposing of their own property for their own account as bona fide owners of the securities, which would have been permissible under the foregoing provisions, but were making sales for the benefit of the issuing corporations and in the promotion of the scheme or enterprise of the defendants and, as found by the trial court, with the intent of violating and evading the provisions of the act, all of which rendered such sales unlawful when made without a permit.

There is likewise no merit in the criticism of the joint judgment against defendants Stella and Steele in the stock transactions. Upon the facts found Stella was equally liable with Mrs. Steele.

[7] The point is made that plaintiff is not entitled to the return of the sums she invested with defendants except on condition that she restore to them the interests in real property and the stock which she received in the transactions which she has rescinded. This point seems to be well taken. While in a technical sense no title passed to plaintiff, her mineral deeds were placed of record and constitute a cloud upon titles of her grantors, and presumably she is still in possession of the certificates of stock. Accordingly, the judgment is modified by adding thereto a provision reading as follows:

"That plaintiff, or if she fails to do so, the clerk of the court in her name, shall transfer all of plaintiff's right, title, and interest in stocks of Fortuna Holding Corporation, K. B. P. Holding Corporation, and Summit Holding Corporation, described in plaintiff's complaint, to Dallas M. Steele upon payment of plaintiff's costs of suit and the share of the judgment representing the sums (including interest thereon) paid by plaintiff for said stocks, and shall transfer by quitclaim deed to either E. F. Stella or Stella-Harold Development Company, respectively (whichever one may have been the grantor), the mineral rights as described in their respective conveyances that have heretofore been delivered to plaintiff, upon payment of her costs of suit (if the same shall not already have been paid) and the share or shares of the judgment representing the sums (including interest thereon) paid by plaintiff to defendant Stella for the several deeds to mineral rights as set forth in the findings of fact herein."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COLEMAN.

Cr. 2202.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied July 24, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⚷1159(1)

It is not the province of an appellate court to retry a criminal case and to draw inferences from the facts proved.

2. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

The province of an appellate court is to decide only whether on the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts would not have been found to warrant inference of guilt.

3. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

To warrant reversal of a conviction on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, it must be found that on no hypothesis is there sufficient evidence to support the jury's conclusion.

4. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

Unless an appellate court can say that testimony is so inherently improbable as to leave the court no recourse without self-stultification, except to reverse conviction, the court should not interfere with the verdict and the trial court's judgment on that ground.

5. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

In considering the question of the sufficiency of evidence to sustain a conviction, all intendments favor upholding the judgment and the trial court's action, and the evidence is to be viewed in the light most favorable to the prosecution.

6. Sodomy ⚷6

Evidence sustained conviction for sex perversion. Pen.Code, § 288a.

7. Rape ⚷51(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for rape.

8. Robbery ⚷24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for first degree robbery.

9. Rape ⚷7

The crime of rape was complete the moment that penetration of prosecutrix' private parts by defendant's private parts occurred.

10. Rape ⚿51(4)

In rape prosecution, testimony of prosecutrix that the reason that she did not offer greater resistance to defendant was that she believed that toy pistol which defendant had was a real pistol, and that she was afraid of being shot, was sufficient to establish the element of "violence".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Violence".

11. Criminal law ⚿824(3)

In rape prosecution, wherein defendant denied positively any assault or attempt to rape, trial court's failure to instruct jury on attempted rape was not error, in absence of a request by defendant for such an instruction.

12. Sodomy ⚿1

The crime of "sex perversion," as denounced by the statute declaring the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another constitutes the crime, can be committed by two persons of the opposite sex. Pen.Code, § 288a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sex Perversion".

13. Sodomy ⚿6

In prosecution for violation of statute denouncing the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another, there is no requirement that the testimony of a complaining party should be corroborated, except where the complaining party is an "accomplice," that is, one liable for prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1111.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Accomplice".

14. Criminal law ⚿507(7)

In prosecution of negro for sex perversion committed on white woman, evidence was insufficient to establish that the woman was an "accomplice" and did not require corroboration of her testimony, where the evidence showed that she submitted under threats and menace, and under belief that toy pistol was a real pistol, and that negro stated that he had confederates lurking in shrubbery. Pen.Code, §§ 26, 288a, 1111.

15. Criminal law ⚿511(1)

In prosecution for sex perversion, evidence was sufficient to corroborate defendant's alleged accomplice. Pen.Code, § 288a.

16. Robbery ⚿6

The fact that one accused of robbery was unarmed, or, being armed, made no use of the weapon, does not establish that personalty was not taken from the person of another without the use of force or fear. Pen. Code, § 211.

17. Robbery ⚿11

In robbery prosecution, proof that defendant was armed is required only to fix the degree of the crime.

18. Robbery ⚿11

To fix robbery as "robbery of the first degree" it is not necessary that weapon used should be a deadly weapon, if, in fact, it is a dangerous weapon. Pen.Code, § 211a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Robbery in the First Degree."

19. Robbery ⚿11

Robbery committed with an unloaded pistol may be "robbery in the first degree," since the pistol need not be used or be intended to be used as a firearm, and if it is capable of use as a club or an instrument to produce bodily harm, it may be classified as a "dangerous weapon." Pen.Code, § 211a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Dangerous Weapon".

20. Robbery ⚿26

In first degree robbery prosecution, whether toy pistol, which resembled in size, shape and general appearance a real pistol, was a "dangerous weapon" was a fact question to be decided by the jury. Pen.Code, §§ 1126, 1127, 1439.

21. Witnesses ⚿282¾

A trial judge is authorized on cross-examination of a defendant to call defendant's attention to apparently conflicting statements which the defendant has made, so as to give the defendant an opportunity to explain or reconcile them if possible.

22. Criminal law ⚿1166½(12)

Questions propounded by trial judge to defendant were not prejudicial to defendant, where questions propounded were judicial in purpose, related to matters on which defendant had been interrogated by his counsel, and were questions that would have been proper if asked by either defendant's counsel or the district attorney.

23. Criminal law 🔑1166½(12)

Trial court's remark to army officer who testified for the prosecution, that officer might go on his trip in the military service, and that the court wished that the officer should have good luck, was not prejudicial to defendant's rights.

24. Witnesses 🔑277(1)

Assistant district attorney, while cross-examining defendant, was entitled to use a statement, notes, or memoranda.

25. Criminal law 🔑1165(1)

In the determination of the guilt or innocence of an accused, it is not the question whether technical privileges have been accorded one side or the other in the trial of the case, but rather, whether accused has been afforded a fair trial.

26. Criminal law 🔑1171(1)

Where defendant denied that he went home and changed his boots prior to commission of the crime, conduct of assistant district attorney, when defendant's attorney asked what paper assistant district attorney had in his hand, in replying that the paper was a statement of defendant's wife that when he came home before commission of the crime he took off his boots, was not reversible error, where credibility of defendant as a witness had been and was thereafter in a large measure impeached.

27. Amicus curiae 🔑3

Generally, it is not within the province of those specially permitted to appear as amicus curiae to raise new objections.

28. Criminal law 🔑562

Evidence which seems unusual is not necessarily "improbable" and insufficient to sustain conviction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Improbable".

29. Criminal law 🔑1159(2)

In reviewing facts, an appellate court is limited to a determination of the question whether there is substantial evidence to support conviction.

30. Criminal law 🔑737(1), 742(1)

Discrepancies in testimony, the uncertainty of witnesses in giving the result of their observations or their recollections of oral statements, and the nature and character of an exhibit introduced in evidence, are questions solely for the jury's determination.

31. Criminal law 🔑723(5)

District attorney's reference to the fact that only when mask came off of defendant's face during scuffle was it discovered that defendant was a negro, did not establish that prejudice existed by reason of defendant's color, where that was the only instance in which the district attorney referred to the defendant's color.

Festus L. Coleman was convicted of sex perversion, rape, and first degree robbery, and he appeals.

Convictions affirmed.

WARD, Justice.

The defendant, Festus L. Coleman, was found guilty by a jury in the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco of the following crimes: sex perversion (Pen.Code, § 288a), rape, and first degree robbery; and he has appealed from the judgments of conviction and the orders denying his motions for new trial. The grounds urged for reversal are insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the convictions; that the trial court and the district attorney committed misconduct prejudicial to defendant's rights; and failure to instruct the jury on attempted rape.

The evidence presented shows that the sex crimes were committed on a high school student (hereinafter referred to as Miss C) and that the victim of the robbery was a young army lieutenant (hereinafter referred to as Lieutenant A), attached to the United States Air Corps and stationed at Hamilton Field. It was mainly on their testimony defendant was convicted. Miss C's home was in central California. She came to San Francisco with a girl friend and the latter's parents to spend the Easter vacation at the home of the girl's aunt. She had become acquainted with Lieutenant A some time previously while he was training at the army air field near her home. The crimes were committed on Friday night, April 11, 1941, between 11:30 and 12 o'clock near the 43rd Avenue-Fulton Street entrance to Golden Gate Park, a few blocks distant from the home where Miss C was visiting. The defendant, who is a negro, testifying in his own behalf, admitted being at the scene of the crimes at the time they were alleged to have been committed and that he had engaged in a fight with Lieutenant A, but he denied having molested the girl in any manner or having attempted to rob Lieutenant A.

[1-8] On this appeal one of the points urged against the sufficiency of the evidence is that the testimony given by the prosecution's witnesses concerning the commission of the crimes is inherently improbable and therefore that it should be disbelieved. It is not the province of an appellate court, however, to retry a case and to draw inferences from the facts proved. That is the function of the jury. The province of the appellate court is to decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts would not have been found to warrant the inference of guilt. To warrant a reversal on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence it must be found that upon no hypothesis is there sufficient evidence to support the conclusion reached by the jury. People v. Kabakoff, 45 Cal.App.2d 170, 113 P.2d 760. In other words, unless the appellate court can say that the testimony is so inherently improbable as to leave the court no recourse without self-stultification except to reverse the judgment, the reviewing court should not interfere with the verdict and the judgment of the trial court on that ground. People v. Moreno, 26 Cal.App.2d 334, 79 P.2d 390; People v. Antunez, 28 Cal.App. 740, 153 P. 963; People v. Becker, 140 Cal.App. 162, 35 P.2d 196. Furthermore, in considering the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, all intendments favor upholding the judgment and the action of the trial court, and the evidence is to be viewed in the light most favorable to the prosecution. People v. Dukes, 90 Cal.App. 657, 266 P. 558. The record in the present case discloses an abundance of evidence to sustain the jury's finding upon the question of defendant's guilt. The following are among the facts established thereby: Earlier on the evening of the commission of the crimes Lieutenant A and another young army lieutenant, stationed also at Hamilton Field (hereinafter referred to as Lieutenant B), called at the home where Miss C was visiting, to spend the evening with her and her girl companion, and later all drove down to the ocean beach nearby and spent some time patronizing the amusement enterprises. While riding in a boat in the "chute the chutes" concession Lieutenant B and his girl companion were splashed with water, so the party returned to the home of the girls to change and dry their clothes, after which they drove back to the amusement center at the beach, remained there for some time and then started to drive back through the park. It was a warm, bright moonlight night, and when they reached a point near the 43rd Avenue-Fulton Street entrance they stopped, listened to the radio for a while, and then Lieutenant A and Miss C said they wanted to talk alone; they took a robe, walked about a hundred feet from the roadway and sat down. They had been there but a few minutes when they heard and saw a man (the defendant) prowling about the shrubs close to them. Becoming alarmed, they got up at once, intending to return to the automobile, but as they arose the defendant suddenly emerged through the shrubs, wearing a paper mask, with his hat pulled down over his eyes, and carrying a pistol. Lieutenant A said to him: "What can I do for you, fellow?" and the defendant, pointing the pistol at Lieutenant A said, "This is a stick-up. Don't say a word." "I don't want any funny business or I'll blow you to pieces." He then ordered Lieutenant A to turn around, and placing the muzzle of the pistol at his back said, "I want your money. Where is it?" The lieutenant replied that it was in his back pocket. Thereupon the defendant removed the lieutenant's wallet from his pocket and also some loose change and a bunch of keys from another pocket. He offered the keys to the girl, saying, "Here, sister, you can have the keys as a souvenir of your boy friend"; but when she started to take the keys he said, "No, I think I'll keep them." He then ordered the lieutenant to walk about five feet into the bushes, and to kneel down and keep facing the bushes, saying that "there were some other fellows waiting around the bushes for him and that they would get him if either of us tried to make a move." He then ordered the girl to take off her pants and lie down. Lieutenant A spoke up, saying: "What are you going to do?," and the defendant replied that "he was going to French my girl friend." The lieutenant asked him "what it meant," and he replied, "I am going to kiss her between the legs." The lieutenant pleaded with him to let the girl alone, and he replied that "that was all he was going to do," and defendant told the girl not to be afraid. After he had forced the girl to lie down he told her to put her blouse over her head. She testified that he then put his mouth against her private parts and kept his mouth there for five or ten minutes, following which he began raping her. Before defendant started raping the girl Lieutenant A several times attempted to turn around and say something, but each time defendant threatened him with the pistol and warned him to keep facing the bushes. But when defendant began raping the girl she cried out and the lieutenant immediately sprang upon the defendant as he lay on top of the girl, and a desperate struggle ensued, during which the lieutenant's hand was badly cut in several places, partially disabling him. As the struggle began the mask fell from the defendant's face, and the girl and her companion then observed for the first time that he was a negro. Being freed from the defendant the girl ran screaming for Lieutenant B and the two young men finally subdued the defendant and started to walk him to the police station; but after proceeding a short distance defendant put up a fight in an attempt to escape, whereupon Lieutenant B returned for the automobile, and placing appellant between them in the front seat and the two girls in the back seat they drove defendant to the police station and turned him over to the police. Thereupon a police officer accompanied the two young men back to the scene of the crimes and there they found defendant's hat, the pistol, the paper mask, and Lieutenant A's wallet; also a piece of glass smeared with moist blood, with which Lieutenant A's hand evidently had been cut. Several times during the struggle defendant warned that he had a knife, but no knife was found. Upon finding the articles mentioned the police returned to the police station and about 2:30 a. m. that morning the defendant was questioned concerning the crimes of which he was accused and he did not deny having committed them. Two police officers so testified. His response was that he did not remember—that he had been drinking. The conversation had with him at that time, as repeated by Inspector McMahon in his testimony was as follows: "I asked him—that was a preliminary question—I asked him when he was brought in to identify his hat, which had been brought in separately. It wasn't on the defendant. And he identified it as his hat. I asked him what he had been doing out there, and he told me that he had been out there walking through the park. And I asked him what his reason for walking through the park was. And he said that he had no particular reason. I asked him how it was that he happened to hold up this soldier and had raped this girl and committed the other acts that have been testified to here. And he said 'If I done anything like that, I don't remember, I must have been drunk.' I asked him 'If you don't remember holding up this man, what were you doing out there with a gun?' And he said 'I just carried that gun, I bought it Wednesday night.' And I said 'Where?' He said 'At Woolworth's on Fillmore street.' I asked him what his reason was for packing it out there. And he stated he could give no reason for having it there. I asked him why he bought the gun, and he said he bought the gun for his babies, that they usually celebrated the Easter holidays on a Saturday, and he was going to give the gun to his babies." It was ascertained afterwards that his two children were aged respectively about eight months and a year and a half. The defendant refused to give a written statement.

At the trial, however, defendant denied ownership or any knowledge of the pistol, and denied having made the above statements to the police. He claimed that the first time he ever saw the pistol was at his hearing before the municipal court; furthermore, as stated, he denied having committed any of the criminal acts about which the girl and Lieutenant A had testified. His version in substance was as follows: He stated that he lived on Webster Street and for about two years had worked on WPA jobs as tree topper in the Presidio. On the day in question he quit work at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, went home, got $10 and started drinking. After visiting several drinking places around Fillmore Street he bought a half pint of liquor and went to the Uptown Theater on the corner of Sutter and Steiner Streets; and after the show he bought and drank another half pint of liquor. He then went on to say that he was "feeling kind of bad" and took a street car to the beach; that he walked around for awhile and then sat down at a place near the tunnel; that after smoking a few cigarettes he decided to take a walk through the tunnel. He was wearing two pairs of pants, laced boots and rubbers. Continuing his testimony, he stated that after going through the tunnel he proceeded along a bridle trail and across a football field, then decided to walk "up the trail to go over to 43rd, to walk over to Geary Street and take a car"; that while walking along that trail he ran across Lieutenant A and Miss C engaged in an act of sexual intercourse; that Lieutenant A jumped up, began berating him and attempted to strike him; that he knocked the officer down several times, whereupon the officer summoned Lieutenant B, and that after the two had given him a severe beating, they took him to the police station.

On cross-examination he was asked when for the first time he ever told this story about having found this couple in a compromising position and he answered "In this court. * * * To-day," and the cross-examination on that point continued as follows:

"Q. You never told anyone before? A. No.

"Q. Never? A. No.

"Q. You didn't tell your attorney? A. Anymore than my attorney.

"Q. Then you did tell somebody before to-day? A. Previous to that.

"Q. When? A. When he came up to see me.

"Q. When? A. I don't remember the date, when he came up to see me, I told him then.

"Q. When? A. I don't remember the date.

"Q. You have no idea? A. When he came to see me.

"Q. A week ago or a month ago or what? A. I imagine it was a couple of weeks ago.

"Q. Well, did you talk to Inspector McMahon on that following Saturday and tell him about it? A. I didn't talk to him."

Furthermore, in contradiction of other portions of his story, Inspector McMahon testified that there were no trails or paths of any kind within a radius of 100 feet or more of the spot where the defendant claimed he came upon the couple; and testimony was given that on the night in question there was no odor of "alcohol or anything like that" on his breath. From the foregoing narration it will be seen that the record contains an overwhelming amount of substantial evidence establishing defendant's guilt.

The defendant contends, however, that in any event none of the particular acts he is accused of having committed upon the person of the girl constituted rape or the crime of sex perversion as denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code. There is no merit in the contention.

[9-11] As to the crime of rape the girl testified that she felt his private parts in her private parts. The crime was complete, therefore, the moment penetration occurred. 22 Cal.Jur. 361, § 6. As to the element of violence, the girl, testified in effect that the reason she did not offer greater resistance was that she believed he had a "real gun"; that she was afraid, and fearful of being shot, which was sufficient to establish the element of violence (People v. Bouquet, 30 Cal.App.2d 264, 86 P.2d 145); and in view of the positive denial of defendant of any assault or attempted rape, the failure to instruct the jury on attempted rape, a lesser offense, in the absence of a request by the defendant for such an instruction, was not error. People v. Louviere, 34 Cal.App.2d 62, 93 P.2d 179; People v. Welsh, 7 Cal.2d 209, 60 P.2d 124; People v. Dozier, 35 Cal.App.2d 49, 94 P.2d 598.

Regarding the crime of sex perversion, the provisions of said section 288a declare that "* * * the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another * * *" constitutes the crime. In thus defining the crime it was obviously the intention of the Legislature to include therein loathsome sexual acts of the kind here committed. Defendant argues, and in the brief of amicus curiae (which was filed herein after oral argument and subsequent to the original submission of the cause) it is contended, that in view of the decision rendered in People v. Angier, 44 Cal.App.2d 417, 112 P.2d 659, the crime of sex perversion as defined by said section 288a was not here committed. A mere glance at the facts of that case clearly shows, however, that there is no comparison whatever between the single act there committed on the seven-year-old girl, and the continuous act committed on the young lady here assaulted, for while the defendant in this case said he was merely going "to kiss" the girl between the legs he went far beyond doing so. As stated, he placed his mouth against her sexual organ and kept it there for five or ten minutes. Therefore the jury was fully justified in finding therefrom, as a fact, that the crime of sex perversion as defined by the Code section had been committed. Furthermore one of the two determining factors in the Angier case upon which the reversal therein was based was the absence of evidence to establish that the defendant's mouth touched "the sexual organ" of the child, while here there is positive evidence that such was the case.

[12] Defendant seems to contend also that the crime of sex perversion as denounced by said section 288a cannot be committed by two persons of the opposite sex. The following decisions answer this contention: People v. Briley, 9 Cal.App. 2d 84, 48 P.2d 734; People v. Roveano, 130 Cal.App. 222, 19 P.2d 506; People v. Miller, 27 Cal.App.2d 722, 81 P.2d 567; People v. Avanzi, 25 Cal.App.2d 301, 77 P.2d 237; People v. Ralls, 21 Cal.App.2d 674, 70 P.2d 265. These cases do not relate the details in the manner outlined in People v. Angier, supra, but the Angier case did not suggest that the crime could not be committed between a male and a female. The court there said, 44 Cal.App.2d page 419, 112 P.2d page 660: "* * * the legislature, in framing section 288a of the Penal Code, must have intended to punish only those who participate in an act whereby they are united or joined by the perverted act of one's holding in his mouth the sexual organ of another for the purpose of gratifying their sexual desires." Without analyzing all that was said in People v. Angier, supra, we have concluded that, assuming the correctness of the decision, the facts are so dissimilar as to be of no assistance to appellant. In People v. Avanzi, supra, 25 Cal.App.2d page 302, 77 P.2d page 238, the court said: "It is clear that no particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element of the crime described."

[13-15] In a prosecution for violation of section 288a, there is no requirement that the testimony of a complaining party should be corroborated except where the complainant is an accomplice; that is, one liable for prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant. Pen. Code, § 1111. The evidence in the present case does not even suggest that the young woman was an accomplice. There is evidence to show that she submitted to defendant's acts under threats and menace; that she had reasonable cause to and did believe that her life would be endangered if she resisted. Under such circumstances she was not a participant in the crime. Pen.Code, § 26; People v. Solano, 48 Cal. App.2d 126, 119 P.2d 381. There is evidence showing not only fear of the defendant, but of possible confederates, as the defendant warned, lurking in the shrubbery. Assuming the testimony of the young woman required corroboration, it appears in the testimony of Lieutenant A heretofore given.

[16-19] On the charge of robbery, the facts that the perpetrator was unarmed, or, being armed, made no use of the weapon, do not necessarily establish that personal property was taken from the person of another without the use of force or fear. Pen.Code, § 211. The evidence in the present case is amply sufficient to uphold a conviction of robbery. Proof that a defendant was armed is required only to fix the degree of the crime. To fix it as of the first degree, it is not necessary that the weapon should be a deadly weapon, if, in fact, it is a "dangerous" weapon. Pen.Code, § 211 a. Robbery committed with an unloaded pistol may be robbery of the first degree. The pistol need not be used or intended to be used as a firearm. If it is capable of use as a club or as an instrument to produce bodily harm it may be classified as a "dangerous" weapon. In People v. Egan, 77 Cal.App. 279, 284, 246 P. 337, 338, the court said: "Appellant urges also that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of first degree robbery because it did not appear that the revolver used in the perpetration of the crime was loaded. In support of this point appellant cites the case of People v. Sylva, 143 Cal. 62, 76 P. 814. That case is not in point, however, because it involved the construction of the term 'deadly weapon' as used in the Code section defining the crime of assault with a deadly weapon (Pen.Code, § 245), which is a different term from the one employed in the Code section defining first degree robbery. The latter section declares that: 'All robbery * * * perpetrated * * * by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree.' Pen.Code § 211a. (Italics ours.) It is a matter of common knowledge that in committing robbery pistols are frequently used as bludgeons rather than as firearms. The fact, therefore, that a person perpetrating such crime is armed with a pistol is enough to justify the conclusion that the pistol used by him is a 'dangerous' weapon within the meaning of said section 211a of the Penal Code, even though it be not loaded." It is immaterial whether such weapon is actually used. People v. Raleigh, 128 Cal.App. 105, 16 P.2d 752; People v. Hall, 105 Cal.App. 359, 287 P. 533.

[20] The pistol was introduced in evidence and exhibited to the jury. The officer who found it referred to it as "a nickel plated revolver"; and in asking Lieutenant A to identify it at the trial the prosecutor's question was: "Now, I will call your attention here to what I will refer to as an automatic pistol, that is to say I believe it is referred to as a toy pistol, it is marked 'Army 45,' and I ask you if that resembles in size, shape and general appearance the gun that this man who came toward you had upon that particular night?" and the witness replied: "It does." If it was capable of being used as a deadly weapon "and it may be fairly inferred from the evidence that its possessor intended on a particular occasion to use it as a weapon should the circumstances require, we believe that its character as a 'dangerous or deadly weapon' may be thus established, at least for the purposes of that occasion." People v. Raleigh, supra, 128 Cal.App. pages 108, 109, 16 P.2d page 753. Whether or not the pistol was a dangerous weapon is a question of fact to be decided exclusively by the jury. Pen.Code, §§ 1126, 1127, 1439; People v. Raleigh, supra. In People v. Cook, 15 Cal.2d 507, at page 517, 102 P.2d 752, 757, in discussing a certain weapon instrument "a piece of two-by-four about 2 feet long," the court said: "Therefore, under all the facts and circumstances of the instant case the questions of the nature of the weapon and the manner of its use in their relation to the crime committed were for the determination of the jury."

[21, 22] Appellant specifies several instances wherein he claims the trial judge questioned him to his prejudice. These instances occurred during either the direct or cross-examination of the defendant and related primarily to the latter's explanation of his admitted presence here and there in the park, wandering around for several hours preceding the occurrences herein, wearing rubbers and a pair of jeans over his trousers, when, as stated in his opening brief, after walking along the beach he decided to go home by taking "a short cut through the park to the street car." In one instance the trial judge used the word "sneaking," but upon objection struck the word from the record and reframed the question. All questions propounded were judicial in purpose (People v. Patubo, 9 Cal. 2d 537, 71 P.2d 270, 113 A.L.R. 1303) and related to matters upon which defendant had been interrogated by his counsel; they were questions that would have been proper if asked by either defendant's counsel or the district attorney. People v. Ramos, 3 Cal.2d 269, 44 P.2d 301. "A trial judge certainly is authorized on cross-examination of a defendant to call his attention to apparent conflicting statements which he has made so as to give him an opportunity to explain or reconcile them if possible." People v. Butterfield, 40 Cal.App.2d 725, 731, 105 P.2d 628, 631.

[23] Lieutenant B was called out of order by stipulation because he was "due to fly to-morrow." Upon completion of his testimony the court said: "Yes, he may go on his trip and good luck to you." The conduct of the court is not comparable to that related in People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607 and other cases cited by appellant. The conduct of the court in propounding questions or in his remark to the army officer was not prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. People v. Briley, supra. Moreover, at no time during the course of the trial did defendant assign as misconduct any question propounded or statement made by the court.

The second specification of misconduct is directed against the district attorney and grows out of the following incident, which took place shortly after beginning the defendant's cross-examination:

"Mr. Skillin [assistant district attorney]: Q. Now, you are quite certain you didn't have on when you came home from work that afternoon, an old rusty looking pair of boots?

"Mr. Young: If the court please, I am going to object to the manner of examining this witness, holding a paper up in front of the jury. If he is going to do that, let's find out what the paper is.

"Mr. Skillin: Of course you know as well as I do I can't call his wife as a witness against him.

"Mr. Young: I don't know anything about that. I didn't even know you had a statement from the wife.

"Mr. Skillin: I have got a statement from the wife, where she said he had an old rusty pair of boots on that laced up the front, when he came home, and he took them off and put * * *

"Mr. Young: Just a moment. I object to that and I assign it as prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney. He knows that he can't prove indirectly what he can't do directly."

[24, 25] It is suggested in one of the briefs that the district attorney was "waving" the paper in front of the jury. From the above-quoted statement of defendant's counsel the record shows that the district attorney was "holding" the paper. It is proper to use a statement, notes or memoranda while examining a witness and, under the circumstances of this case, the district attorney would have been justified in refusing to show or to accede to defendant's counsel's request: "* * * let's find out what the paper is." People v. Bermijo, 2 Cal.2d 270, 40 P.2d 823; People v. Singh, 136 Cal.App. 233, 28 P.2d 416. The reply of the district attorney was invited and to that extent justifiable, but in the determination of the guilt or innocence of an accused it is not the technical privileges accorded one side or the other in the trial of the case, but rather, whether an accused has been afforded a fair trial. The statement of the district attorney related to the clothing worn by defendant at the time he returned home from work in the late afternoon preceding the evening during which the crime was committed. It was not vital to the establishment of the guilt of the defendant to show any particular pair of shoes he wore at the time of the commission of the offense. There is no question here of a case of mistaken identity. On the contrary, the defendant admits his presence at the scene and his meeting with Lieutenant A and the girl, Miss C. Whether he wore new or old boots is of no consequence in view of the uncontroverted testimony that he wore rubbers. There is no denial that he wore extra trousers, which would act as a protection to inner garments in passing through the shrubbery, and rubbers, which would tend to conceal his approach. It is true that defendant explained he was a "tree topper" and that the clothes were those usually worn by one of his calling, but the use of the clothing was nevertheless a settled matter. The "jeans" and the "black rubbers" were admittedly worn by defendant. Any inference that might be drawn from the fact of the appearance of a "tree topper" just before midnight in this particular spot in the park under all the circumstances of this case was a matter entirely within the province of the jury. The changing of the boots, if it did occur, would play little if any part in the determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. The effect of the remark of the district attorney, considered in the aspect most favorable to defendant, would simply be that defendant's wife at some time, after the occurrences of the evening in question, had stated, not under oath, that the defendant had changed his shoes in the early part of the evening. The jury was instructed: "* * * that you and you alone determine the facts of the case, and determine the facts from the testimony of the witnesses here on the witness stand * * " " * * please bear in mind that statements of counsel in this case are not evidence in the case."

The suggestion is made by amicus curiae that the incident mentioned operated to defendant's prejudice in that the statement of defendant's wife to which the prosecutor referred was one tending to impeach the defendant's testimony. However, as pointed out in the brief filed by respondent in reply to amicus curiae, the credibility of the defendant as a witness already had been and was thereafter in a large measure impeached by much competent evidence including his own cross-examination and the testimony of at least four other witnesses on material points. Such being the case, and keeping in mind that it was quite immaterial so far as the question of defendant's guilt was concerned whether he was wearing old or new boots, there can be no force whatever in the contention that had it not been for the disclosure by the prosecutor of the contents of said paper the jury might not have found the defendant guilty.

[26] Throughout this appeal respondent has contended that the incident above mentioned did not constitute prejudicial misconduct. At the time of oral argument in response to questions propounded to him, counsel for respondent stated in effect that although counsel for defendant had invited the prosecutor to divulge the contents of the paper he was then holding, it was improper for the prosecutor so to do because the paper was not in evidence. However, respondent has consistently maintained that the incident complained of falls far short of calling for a reversal of the judgment of conviction; and we are in complete accord with that view.

[27] Some questions not suggested by appellant relative to other instructions is raised by amicus curiae. Ignoring the general rule that it is not within the province of those specially permitted to appear to raise new objections, in the interest of justice the instructions have been examined and it is sufficient to say that when read together they stated the law correctly and, as applied to the facts of this case, contained no statement that was legally unjust or unfair.

Appellant's contention that the evidence of the state is "inherently improbable" is not based upon the fact that the designated crimes could not have been committed at the time and place alleged, but that the witnesses for the People have been guilty of a complete fabrication. Appellant does not stop at the suggestion of a "seduction," but boldly states that there was a "voluntary intercourse" between Lieutenant A and Miss C. All the evidence is directly to the contrary. Lieutenant A testified that he did not have, nor did he attempt to have, sexual intercourse with the young girl at the time in question. It was stipulated that Miss C if called would testify to the same effect. In this connection, there is, as already mentioned, testimony by the appellant that he never made such an accusation against the young couple following his arrest; that he told it for the first time "when he [his attorney] came to see me." Appellant's opinion as expressed in one of his briefs of the "usual * * * occurrence when a young army officer * * * and a comely young lady" are together in "a secluded spot. If the intercourse did not follow, that would be improbable" is a forced argument that might perhaps mislead a jury but not a reviewing court. Appellant proceeds further and argues, that Lieutenant A was guilty of a statutory rape and that to protect his reputation the witnesses concocted the story related under oath. We need not return to the unsavory and nauseating story of the evening's events, but simply call attention to the articles found at the scene of the crime by the civil authorities, and the statement of the defendant on the day following the commission of the offense, when accused of the crimes: "If I done anything like that, I don't remember, I must have been drunk." People v. Russell, 34 Cal.App.2d 665, 94 P.2d 400. It is noteworthy that the record does not disclose that defendant ever emphatically denied the commission of these offenses until after he had talked with his attorney.

Nowhere throughout the case is there any evidence even suggesting that these young people could have been actuated by some wrongful, hidden motive in accusing a man they had never seen before, of loathsome, heinous crimes he did not commit. Certainly there was nothing to be gained by their so doing; and it is utterly unbelievable that, if the defendant were innocent, they would think of subjecting this young lady, not yet out of high school and against whose character not a word of disparaging testimony was offered, to the humiliating ordeal of a public trial as the victim of sex crimes of a perverted nature, and of perjuring themselves to obtain a conviction.

[28-30] Evidence which seems unusual is not necessarily improbable. People v. Headlee, 18 Cal.2d 266, 115 P.2d 427. In reviewing facts an appellate court is limited to the determination of the question —is there substantial evidence to support the judgment? People v. Braun, 14 Cal. 2d 1, 92 P.2d 402. Discrepancies in testimony, if any there be, the uncertainty of witnesses in giving the result of their observations or their recollection of oral statements, and the nature and character of an exhibit introduced in evidence are questions solely for the determination of the jury. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 2 P.2d 814; People v. Mitchell, 61 Cal.App. 569, 215 P. 117; People v. Collier, 111 Cal.App. 215, 295 P. 898; People v. Raleigh, supra; People v. Cook, supra.

[31] One further contention should be mentioned. Throughout the briefs the fact that appellant is a negro is stressed. In only one instance did the district attorney refer to the color of the defendant and that in reference to the exact period when it was discovered during the events of the evening that appellant was a colored man. The record does not disclose that any prejudice existed by reason of defendant's color. All citizens should be treated equally, but the briefs filed by appellant indicate a claim that by reason of his color appellant should receive more favorable consideration than should a white person. The colored race—as a body, however, seeks only a fair and impartial trial for any accused, and this was in fact accorded appellant.

The judgments and the orders denying the motions for a new trial in the three convictions are and each of them is affirmed.

KNIGHT, J., concurred.

PETERS, Presiding Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. This is a case where defendant was charged and convicted, on evidence properly described in the majority opinion, as "unsavory and nauseating," of three most serious crimes. It is also a case in which the attorney general at the time of oral argument, and in a brief filed since, very properly concedes that the prosecuting attorney committed error in summarizing in the presence of the jury the contents of a statement supposedly given by defendant's wife. The attorney general argues, and the majority opinion holds, that such error was not prejudicial. With this conclusion I cannot agree.

Before directly stating my reasons for believing that the admitted error was prejudicial, a brief reference to the state of the evidence should be made. The evidence of the prosecutrix, while not as clear as might be desired, and which, in some respects, is contradictory on whether penetration occurred, is legally sufficient, in my opinion, to support the conviction of rape. I also believe that her testimony, and that of her companion, is legally sufficient to sustain the conviction of first degree robbery. The majority opinion, however, fails to properly state appellant's main contention as to this charge. He contends that the evidence shows that he was armed with a "toy pistol," and contends that such a weapon is neither "deadly" nor "dangerous" as those terms are used in section 211a of the Penal Code in defining first degree robbery. It will be noted that no description of the "toy pistol" is set forth in the majority opinion, it being there held that "whether or not the pistol was a dangerous weapon is a question of fact to be decided exclusively by the jury." That is not the law. Certainly the appellate court may, and should, in reference to that or any other implied finding of the jury, determine whether that implied finding is supported by the evidence. In the present case, no description of the "toy pistol" appears in the evidence, although the weapon was introduced into evidence. The attorney general, prior to oral argument, secured an order requiring the exhibit to be delivered to this court, and on the oral argument asked the members of this court to examine the weapon to determine whether the implied finding of the jury that it is a "dangerous" weapon is supported. My associates have refused to examine the exhibit on the ground that it was "exclusively" a jury question as to whether the instrument was dangerous, and take the position that the appellate court has no power to examine the exhibit. Thus, in this respect, my associates contend that the sufficiency of the evidence cannot be passed on by the appellate court. To state the contention is to refute it. I have examined the exhibit. It is a metal toy pistol intended to shoot caps, has bakelite hand grips, and weights a little over one pound. It is 6¼ inches long, and from the bottom of the hand grips to the top of the barrel is 4¼ inches. The exterior dimensions of the barrel are 1⅜ inches by ¾ inch. In raised letters along each side of the barrel over the trigger appears "Army 45." From this brief description it is apparent that the weapon in size, weight and appearance approximates that of a real automatic pistol. If an unloaded pistol can be considered a "dangerous" weapon, because it could be used as a bludgeon, and that is the law—People v. Egan, 77 Cal.App. 279, 246 P. 337; People v. Shaffer, 81 Cal.App. 752, 254 P. 666; People v. Freeman, 86 Cal.App. 374, 260 P. 826; People v. Hall, 87 Cal.App. 634, 262 P. 50; People v. Seaman, 101 Cal.App. 302, 281 P. 660; People v. Raleigh, 128 Cal. App. 105, 16 P.2d 752—obviously this "toy" pistol of the same size and weight could likewise be so used. Where reasonable minds can differ on whether the instrument used is "dangerous," the question is one of fact for the jury. The jury having viewed the weapon, its determination, under these circumstances, but only under these circumstances, is conclusive.

In reference to the charge of violation of section 288a of the Penal Code, it is also my opinion that the evidence is sufficient to support the judgment of conviction, although this conclusion is clearly contrary to the law announced in People v. Angier, 44 Cal.App.2d 417, 112 P.2d 659. The majority opinion attempts to distinguish the Angier case on its facts. Quite significantly the majority opinion is silent as to the law stated in that opinion. If section 288a requires copulation as defined in the Angier case, there is no evidence of such copulation as thus defined in the instant case. While I disagree with the holding and reasoning in the Angier case, I think, in fairness to defendant, it should be noted that the Supreme Court less than a year ago denied a hearing in that case and that the law stated in the majority opinion, and in this dissent, on this issue, is clearly contrary to the holding in the Angier case.

From the foregoing it is apparent that it is my view that the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain all three convictions, although I recognize that as to the charge involving the alleged violation of section 288a, this conclusion (as well as the identical conclusion in the majority opinion), is contrary to the holding in the Angier case, supra. The conclusion that the evidence is sufficient, however, does not necessarily mean that the judgments should be affirmed. It is my view that it is the function and duty of an appellate court, after having determined that the evidence is legally sufficient, to then determine two other problems—viz., was error committed, and, if so, was such error prejudicial? As to the first of these questions—i.e., was error committed—it is conceded by the attorney general that error was committed. This concession undoubtedly is in accordance with the fact. The prosecuting attorney, while cross-examining the defendant, read from a document in his hand. When the attorney for defendant fell into the trap, and demanded to know what the document was, the prosecuting attorney stated that the document was a statement given by the wife of defendant. When the defendant's counsel stated that he did not know such a statement existed the prosecuting attorney not only declared that such a statement existed but gratuitously added that in that statement the wife had declared that defendant had come home from work and changed his clothes to those he was wearing when arrested. Although the statement was objected to and assigned as prejudicial misconduct, the court made no ruling on the objection or assignment. The majority opinion holds that such error was not prejudicial because the question of "how" the defendant was dressed was immaterial. While it is true that "how" the defendant was dressed had no relevancy on the issue of identity, inasmuch as the defendant admitted he was present at the scene of the crime, that evidence was introduced for an entirely different purpose. The prosecuting attorney was trying to show that defendant came home from work with an old pair of boots on, changed them and put on rubbers over the boots, and went out and committed these crimes. If this were true, in view of the type of clothing he was wearing when arrested, it would go far in proving that defendant had started out that evening with a deliberate and premeditated criminal purpose. The prosecuting attorney asked all the witnesses produced by him how the defendant was dressed at the time of the crime. These witnesses testified as to the wearing by defendant of boots and rubbers. On direct examination of defendant his counsel also asked questions concerning how defendant was dressed the day and night of the crime. He testified that when he came home from work that day he had on the boots that had been introduced into evidence by the prosecution and which the witnesses had identified as the boots he wore later that night when arrested. He also testified that he worked as a tree topper on the day in question and while doing such work was dressed as he was when arrested. On cross-examination the prosecuting attorney immediately challenged defendant's testimony in reference to the matter of dress. Almost the first question he asked defendant was: "When you came home that day you didn't have these boots on at all, did you (indicating)?" Defendant answered: "Oh yes I did." The testimony continued as follows:

"Q. Oh no you didn't, did you? A. I certainly did.

"Q. As a matter of fact you had on another pair of boots that were old and rusty looking, laced clear up to the top of the boots, which almost reached your knees, didn't you? A. No, I did not.

"Q. When you came home you changed from the old rusty looking boots to these here (indicating), didn't you? A. No, I did not.

"Q. You are quite sure about that? A. I am positive."

A few questions on another subject were then asked and then the prosecuting attorney renewed his interrogation concerning the boots, asking: "Q. Now, you are quite certain you didn't have on when you came home from work that afternoon, an old rusty looking pair of boots?" There then followed the occurrence quoted in the majority opinion culminating in the statement that the wife had told the district attorney that when defendant came home from work he had an old pair of rusty boots on that laced up the front. Immediately thereafter the trial judge interrogated the defendant at length about how he was dressed, sarcastically referring to defendant's testimony as to how he was dressed and as to what he was doing at that time of night in the park.

A reading of the record demonstrates that what the prosecutor was attempting to show was that defendant had come home from work and changed his clothes for the express purpose of going out and committing some crime. The defendant was vigorously contending that the costume he was wearing when arrested was the same costume worn by him that day at work and the same type of costume worn by all tree toppers. That was an important issue, because, if defendant's testimony as to how he was dressed was believed, it supported the balance of his story as to what he was doing that night. If he did come home and change his clothes, and if the costume he was wearing when arrested was not his regular work costume, then great weight was given to the prosecution theory that defendant had deliberately started out to rob "petting parties." The prosecution was unable to prove that defendant had changed his clothes after coming home from work. Under such circumstances, for the prosecuting attorney to "testify" that defendant's wife had told him defendant had changed his clothes, was to attack, improperly, the whole basis of defendant's defense. It is no answer to say, as does the majority opinion, that the defendant's counsel invited the error. While defendant's counsel demanded to know the nature of the paper the prosecutor was using in his cross-examination, that query was completely answered by the prosecutor's reply that it was a statement of defendant's wife. But for the prosecutor to then add what that statement purportedly contained, was clearly error of a most serious nature.

There is still another reason why the admitted error was prejudicial. The jury was called upon to determine whether the prosecutrix and her supporting witnesses were telling the truth, or whether defendant was telling the truth. The prosecutrix and her escort had told a story about riding out to the park late at night with another couple, and getting out of the car with a blanket and sitting down in the bushes to talk. That portion of their story is characterized as "inherently improbable" by appellant. It can at least be said that it is a reasonable argument to make that this portion of their story was open to doubt. The whole case turned upon the credibility of the respective witnesses. If defendant's story was believed, he was innocent. He was the only witness in his own behalf. For the prosecutor to tell the jury that, according to defendant's own wife, defendant was lying about how he was dressed, was to attack defendant's credibility in a most improper fashion. The obvious reaction would be that if defendant was lying as to that fact, his whole story was false. That was error of a most prejudicial character.

After reading the record I cannot say that the jury would have reached the same conclusions it did had the error not been committed. For that reason article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution, cannot operate to cure the error. It may be that defendant is guilty. If so, he has committed several crimes of a particularly abhorrent character. But the fact that the prosecuting attorney may have honestly believed defendant guilty does not excuse the means adopted by him to secure a conviction. The doctrine that the end justifies the means has no application to the trial of one accused of crime. As important as it is to society to see that those guilty of criminal activity should be punished, it is far more important to society as a whole that the fundamental principle that every defendant is entitled to a fair trial should be preserved. The law prescribes the methods to be used in a criminal case. If defendant is guilty, should this case be reversed and remanded for a new trial, then no doubt the prosecution can prove that fact in a proper manner. If it cannot secure a conviction without resort to illegal means, then defendant should not be convicted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the City of Los Angeles and others against Katherina Greve, wherein defendant filed a counterclaim. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Charles A. Sunderlin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an action to quiet title. Plaintiffs obtained judgment and defendant appeals.

The facts briefly are as follows: On the 31st day of March, 1925, the council of the city of Los Angeles adopted an ordinance declaring its intention to widen Washington Boulevard in the city of Los Angeles between Alameda and Figueroa Streets, under and according to the Street Opening Act of 1903, St.1903, p. 376, as amended. Bonds were issued to represent unpaid assessments levied pursuant to the proceedings under the Street Opening Bond Act of 1911 (Improvement Bond Law of 1911, St.1911, c. 630, p. 1192, Act 855, Deerings General Laws). The bond representing the unpaid assessments against the property of defendant was foreclosed by the owner of said bond, to-wit, the Board of Pension Commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, the property sold and a treasurer's deed issued on the 27th day of May, 1937. The bond was in the principal sum of $3,119.96. The balance due at the time of sale was $2,807.96.

The complaint set up all of the proceedings had and taken by the several officers, agents and employees of the city council for the widening of Washington Boulevard from the time of the adoption of the ordinance of intention to the issuance of a treasurer's deed upon the foreclosure of the bond issued to represent the assessment as aforesaid. The defendant property owner by way of "answer and counterclaim" alleged that the city council, in adopting the ordinance of intention, wrongfully, unlawfully and illegally determined that the public interest, etc., required the improvement, and wrongfully, unlawfully and illegally fixed the boundaries of the assessment district. It was further alleged that the improvement did not benefit the parcels of land in the district, but was primarily for the benefit of other lands, etc.; that the council created the district for the purpose of making Washington Boulevard a major street artery and not for the benefit of the property owners within the district.

The questions involved in the within appeal, quoting from appellant's brief, are as follows: "1. Is the 'Improvement Act of 1911', Act 8199, Deering's Gen. Laws, conclusive as to the matters which are essential to due process of law? 2. Has a special assessment taxpayer, under the 'Improvement Act of 1911' recourse to the courts for the purpose of raising fundamental questions involving the purposes of the so-called improvement and the character of its benefits? 3. Has the taxpayer a right to prove that it was a plain abuse of discretion, as a matter of law, in effect, a fraud upon the taxpayer, for the city council to create the special assessment district and issue the bonds?"

As pointed out by respondent, however, the first two questions may be disregarded, as the "Improvement Act of 1911", St.1911, p. 730, as amended, is not involved. The proceedings for the widening of the street in question were, as the complaint alleges, taken under the Street Opening Act of 1903 and the bonds were issued under the Improvement Bond Law of 1911.

[1] It is contended by appellant that the trial court erred in refusing to permit the defendant property owner to reply to the following questions: "Were you living on this property at the time of this tax, Mrs. Greve? Were you familiar with conditions as they existed on the boulevard at the time of this assessment? Did this tax assessment benefit your property in any way? What was the reasonable value of your property at the time of this assessment? Is it not a fact, Mrs. Greve, that the widening of the boulevard was simply for the development of a major industrial traffic boulevard through the city of Los Angeles, out on East Washington? As a matter of fact, was there not a detriment to your property by the widening of the boulevard? Did the widening of this boulevard by reason of this special assessment, in fact, make of East Washington Boulevard a truck highway? How did the creation of this assessment district and the widening of the boulevard affect rental values in that section?" It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to permit the witness to testify that the widening of the boulevard in question was not for the benefit of the individual taxpayers who were assessed with the tax, but was for the general public purpose of the creation of a major highway for industrial traffic through the city of Los Angeles, that the widening project converted the street into a truck highway through what theretofore had been a residential district. The findings also are challenged, but inasmuch as this contention is not developed in the brief it must be assumed that it is abandoned.

The Street Opening Act of 1903 contains full provision for the filing of objections and the settlement of such disputes as the foregoing questions at the trial of the within action sought to revive. It is noteworthy, also, that the Street Opening Bond Act of 1911, as amended, provides that: "Improvement bonds issued hereunder shall by their issuance be conclusive evidence of the regularity and validity of all proceedings thereto." Stats.1911, ch. 630, p. 1192, Act 855, Deering's General Laws.

The complaint herein alleges that on August 27, 1929, the city council proceeded to and did then and there and thereafter until the 26th day of November, 1929, hear and pass upon all objections filed, and at the conclusion of said hearing, to-wit, the 26th day of November, 1929, after considering and examining said assessments, confirmed and adopted the same. It should be noted that at the time the foregoing proceedings were adopted and the bond in question was issued, the statute provided that the election by the property owner to pay the assessments in installments and to have an improvement bond issued should be made in writing filed with the superintendent of streets accompanied by an affidavit that "he or his principal, as the case may be, is the owner of the lot or parcel of land in question," etc., and also "by filing with such officer a written agreement upon the form hereinafter provided, waiving all objections of whatsoever kind or nature against the assessment and all proceedings thereto and undertaking to pay the amount of such assessment in either ten, twenty or thirty installments." Stats. 1927, p. 387.

[2, 3] That the ruling of the trial court in sustaining the objections to the questions asked was proper, there can be no question. In the action to quiet title they were immaterial. The statutes of 1903, heretofore referred to, make ample provision for the filing of objections and protests, for hearings thereon and the determination thereof before the city council. In the street widening proceedings the city council was the proper and the legal tribunal to determine such questions; and the complaint herein in fact alleges that such questions were so determined. Moreover, it is well settled that such procedure complies with the due process clause of the Constitution. With regard to this principle of law the Supreme Court has declared in Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, at page 690, 76 P. 661, at page 662:

"The plaintiffs, in this action in equity to enjoin the execution of the deed, claim the right to impeach the validity of the assessment by evidence to the effect that the part of the costs of the improvement apportioned and assessed against their lots exceeds the benefits to those lots arising from the improvement. Stated in different language, the contention is that the validity of such an exercise of the taxing power of the state is not settled by compliance with the constitutional proceedings prescribed by law, but may be questioned by a jury, or court, in any subsequent collateral attack, upon the inquiry whether or not the land of the particular individual who sees fit to attack its validity was benefited to the extent of the costs apportioned against his land by the assessment. The statement of the proposition is almost sufficient to refute any argument in favor of it. It is manifest that, if the taxing power is subject to review in this collateral manner any exercise of it would generally be declared invalid." Also in Beale v. City of Santa Barbara, 32 Cal. App. 235, at page 242, 162 P. 657, at page 660, appears the following: "Of course, the theory upon which the district is established, upon which the cost of the work shall be apportioned, is that it will derive special benefits from the improvement. But someone must determine that question, and, as stated, the Legislature has seen fit to delegate such power to the city council. From this conclusion it follows that the allegations of the complaint to the effect that plaintiffs' property will not be benefited by the proposed improvement, cannot be considered in aid of the statement of a cause of action, since as to such question no evidence in support thereof would be admissible upon the trial. Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 130 P. 723; Duncan v. Ramish, supra [142 Cal. 686, 76 P. 661]." And in Rutledge v. City of Eureka, 195 Cal. 404, at pages 425, 426, 234 P. 82, at page 91, with regard to a similar situation the Supreme Court made the following observation. "Evidence was tendered by the appellants as to the assessed value of certain of their properties and properties in the business district claimed to have been favored, for the declared purpose of proving inequality and discrimination in the assessments. In so far as such evidence might have a bearing on the question of benefits, the determination of the council was conclusive. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 P. 661; Cutting v. Vaughn [182 Cal. 151, 187 P. 19], supra. In so far as it related to the charge of constructive fraud, the conditions shown by the record or coming within judicial knowledge must furnish the basis of interference by the courts. Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles [170 Cal. 24, 31, 148 P. 217, L.R.A.1918E, 197], supra; Larsen v. San Francisco, 182 Cal. 1, 186 P. 757; Swall v. County of Los Angeles, 42 Cal.App. 758, 184 P. 406. There was no error in sustaining the objections to the proffered evidence."

The judgment quieting title in plaintiffs is sustained by the record, and for the foregoing reasons it is affirmed.

SKERNSWELL v. SCHONFELD, Judge et al.

S. F. 16673.

Supreme Court of California.

July 2, 1942.

1. Exceptions, bill of 🔑53(4)

If trial court improperly refuses to settle a bill of exceptions, mandamus is an appropriate remedy. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 650, 651, 953d.

2. Exceptions, bill of 🔑41(5)

A bill of exceptions must be presented within 20 days after written notice of entry of the judgment or order appealed from and notice of a judgment or order does not constitute notice of entry of judgment or order. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 650, 651, 953d.

3. Exceptions, bill of 🔑41(5)

Under statutes requiring a bill of exceptions to be presented within 20 days after service of written notice of entry of orders appealed from, where orders appealed from had been signed July 28, and no notice of entry thereof had been served, proposed bill was timely presented on September 20. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 650, 651, 953d.

4. Exceptions, bill of 🔑51

Trial court was not justified in refusing to settle a proposed bill of exceptions on ground that orders with which bill was concerned were not appealable. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 649–651.

5. Exceptions, bill of 🔑51

It is not the trial court's function to pass upon appealability of an order in settling a bill of exceptions, but it is trial court's duty to prepare a record accurately indicating what happened in the trial court and if the particular order is not appealable, the bill may be used upon appeal from some later judgment or order when correctness of the order in question will be reviewed. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 649–651.

6. Appeal and error 🔑775

If an appeal is taken from a particular order, question of appealability should be presented to the appellate court by motion to dismiss after the record has been completed and placed before that court.

7. Exceptions, bill of 🔑45

Where respondent made no showing of fraud or lack of good faith by petitioner in presenting a proposed bill of exceptions, and draft of proposed bill was incomplete only as referring to documents which were to be copied at length into the final engrossed bill, which is established procedure, trial court was not justified in refusing to settle proposed bill as incomplete. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 649–651.

Original petition for a writ of mandate by Joseph Skernswell against George W. Schonfeld, as Judge etc., and others to compel respondent as judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco to settle and certify a bill of exceptions.

Writ issued.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland and Henry Robinson, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

This case raises a problem of procedure upon which the parties have presented a stipulation of facts. In March, 1940, Julius Neustadt brought an action in the superior court against Joseph Skernswell, and on May 26, 1941, that court gave judgment in favor of Neustadt. On May 29th findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment were filed with the county clerk. On July 10th a motion for a new trial was denied, and on July 18th defendant filed notice of appeal. The appeal is now pending in this court. On July 28th the trial judge, at plaintiff's request, signed an order setting time of hearing the accounting by the referee, an order directing the referee to take possession of real property and to collect all rents and income, and an order directing the referee in partition to sell real property. Copies of the orders were served on defendant's attorney the same day but the orders were not filed with the clerk of the court until the following day. On August 1st the trial judge, at plaintiff's request, signed a written order requiring a bond on appeal. This order was filed with the clerk of the court on the same day after a copy had been served on defendant's attorney. None of the copies served on defendant's attorney contained any statement indicating that the orders had been filed with the clerk. The parties agree that no written notice of the filing or entry of any of these orders was given defendant before the filing of the bill of exceptions. On September 10th defendant filed notice of appeal from these orders, and on September 19th served and on September 20th filed a proposed bill of exceptions to be used on the appeal. Plaintiff moved to strike the bill of exceptions from the record, and after a hearing the trial court made an order granting the motion. Defendant has petitioned this court for a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to settle and certify the bill of exceptions.

[1-3] If a trial court improperly refuses to settle a bill of exceptions, mandamus is an appropriate remedy. See cases cited in 2 Cal.Jur. 567. A bill of exceptions must be presented within twenty days after written notice of entry of the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 650, 651, 953d. Notice of a judgment or order does not constitute notice of entry of the judgment or order. Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 621, 29 P. 235; Tobin Grocery Co. v. Spry, 201 Cal. 152, 255 P. 791. Since petitioner received no notice of the entry of the orders before the filing of the proposed bill of exceptions, the latter was presented in time.

[4-6] Respondents contend that the trial court was justified in refusing to settle the proposed bill of exceptions, on the ground that the orders with which it is concerned are not appealable. Sections 649, 650, and 651 of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, contain no requirement that an order must be appealable before a bill of exceptions can be settled with respect to it. It is not the function of the trial court to pass upon the appealability of an order in settling a bill of exceptions. Gutierrez v. Hebbard, 106 Cal. 167, 170, 39 P. 529, 935; Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 38, 52 P. 122, 65 Am.St.Rep. 147. It is the trial court's duty to prepare a record that accurately indicates what happened in that court. If the particular order is not appealable, the bill of exceptions may be used upon appeal from some later judgment or order when the correctness of the order in question will be reviewed. Foley v. Foley, supra. If an appeal is taken from the particular order, the question of appealability should be presented to the appellate court by a motion to dismiss after the record has been completed and placed before that court. Gutierrez v. Hebbard, supra.

[7] Respondents contend finally that the proposed bill of exceptions is a skeleton bill, so incomplete as to justify the trial court in refusing to settle it. Respondents, however, make no showing of fraud or lack of good faith on the part of petitioner in presenting the bill. See Dainty Pretzel Co. v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.App.2d 437, 45 P.2d 817; Nichols v. Smith, 25 Cal.App.2d 94, 76 P.2d 525; Ambrose v. American Toll Bridge Co., 12 Cal.2d 276, 279, 83 P.2d 499; Walkerley v. Greene, 104 Cal. 208, 212, 37 P. 890. It appears that the draft of the bill is incomplete only to the extent that it merely makes reference to certain documents that are to be copied at length into the final engrossed bill. This is an established procedure. St. Clair v. Bullock, 12 Cal.2d 450, 454, 85 P.2d 867; Lake Shore Cattle Co. v. Modoc Land & L. Co., 127 Cal. 37, 39, 59 P. 206; Houghton v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 352, 354, 60 P. 972; Reclamation District v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 44 P. 1074.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

Action by Mrs. Ben Whitlow, as executrix of the estate of Charles Durst, deceased, against Carrie E. Carter, Barrett & Carlton, Oliver J. Carter, and Daniel S. Carlton, all of Redding, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

In July, 1938, Charles and Carrie Durst separated and executed a property settlement under which she transferred to him her interest in two insurance policies upon his life. He died a month later leaving a will bequeathing the proceeds of the policies to his sister and executrix in trust for his mother.

Two actions were brought on the policies. In the first the executrix seeks to recover from Mrs. Durst the proceeds of one policy paid to her by the insurer. The second is brought by the other insurer in interpleader, who paid the amount of the policy into court. In both actions the executrix claims the proceeds under the property settlement and decedent's will. Mrs. Durst claims that the agreement was revoked by a reconciliation with her husband on July 16, 1938, and that decedent made a gift of the policies to her. While several witnesses corroborated her testimony that there had been a reconciliation, several other witnesses gave testimony indicating that there had been no reconciliation, and her testimony was the only evidence of a gift. The trial court resolved the conflict in the evidence and found that there had been no gift or reconciliation and entered judgment for the executrix. Mrs. Durst appeals.

There is ample evidence to support the findings of the trial court, but appellant urges that the court erroneously admitted testimony that shortly after the alleged reconciliation decedent declared that he and his wife were still separated and would never be reconciled. It is argued that these statements were hearsay, self-serving because they were made after the alleged reconciliation, and therefor incompetent as evidence, and that their admission constituted prejudicial error.

[1] When intent is a material element of a disputed fact, declarations of a decedent made after as well as before an alleged act that indicate the intent with which he performed the act are admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule, and it is immaterial that such declarations are self-serving. Thus, in cases involving the delivery of deeds, declarations of the alleged grantor made before and after the making of the deed are admissible upon the issue of delivery, and it is immaterial that such declarations are in the interest of the party producing them. Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann.Cas.1916E, 703; Donahue v. Sweeney, 171 Cal. 388, 153 P. 708; DeCou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 214 P. 444; see 19 Calif.L.Rev. 231, 251. Likewise, in gift cases declarations made by the grantor before, contemporaneously, and subsequent to the alleged gift are admissible though the statements be self-serving. Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 228, 78 P. 645. In alienation of affections cases declarations of an alienated spouse subsequent to the defendant's alleged tortious acts are admissible as evidence of the spouse's state of mind. Adkins v. Brett, 184 Cal. 252, 193 P. 251; Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 148 P. 520.

[2] The intention of the parties is a material element in determining whether there has been a reconciliation between husband and wife. Estate of Boeson, 201 Cal. 36, 255 P. 800; Estate of Clover, 179 Cal. 313, 176 P. 452; Ruggles v. Bailey, 15 Cal.App.2d 555, 59 P.2d 837; Gump v. Gump, 42 Cal.App.2d 64, 108 P.2d 21. Declarations made by a husband before an alleged date of reconciliation are admissible as bearing upon his state of mind and the probability of such reconciliation. Estate of Clover, supra. In accordance with the principles set forth in the foregoing cases, declarations made by him a few days after the alleged reconciliation has taken place are likewise admissible.

The case of Carter v. Younger, 123 Ark. 266, 185 S.W. 435, which is contrary to the position here taken, was not approved in Estate of Clover, supra, as appellant contends. The Clover case involved declarations made before and not after an alleged date of reconciliation and the Carter case was simply distinguished on that ground.

The judgment is affirmed.

JACKS v. MONTEREY COUNTY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK.

S. F. 16431.

Supreme Court of California.

July 2, 1942.

1. Trusts 🔑280, 281

The statute providing that legacies for maintenance bear interest from testator's death, and that annuities commence at testator's death, applies only to testamentary provisions, and hence is not applicable to inter vivos trust. Probate Code, § 162.

2. Trusts 🔑112

The intention of a trustor, as expressed in a declaration of trust, governs.

3. Trusts 🔑281

An inter vivos trust instrument which required trustee on death of trustor to liquidate trust estate, convert all of estate into cash, as soon as practicable in trustee's absolute discretion, and set aside a trust fund of $25,000 from which trustee was to pay $500 per month to trustor's brother, who had not been dependent on trustor, and which contained elaborate spendthrift trust provisions, provided for an "annuity", and did not entitle the brother to monthly payments commencing as of the date of trustor's death, but only from date of setting aside of trust fund of $25,000.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Annuity".

4. Trusts 🔑281

Provision of inter vivos trust instrument authorizing trustee to pay beneficiary sums greater than $500 per month during periods of beneficiary's illness, want, or necessity, was not of controlling importance in determining whether payments commenced at date of trustor's death or at time when trust fund was set aside, where instrument provided that greater payments should be in trustee's discretion.

5. Trusts 🔑280

The word "withhold" within inter vivos spendthrift trust instrument providing that if attempt was made to subject income or property to payment of any of beneficiary's debts, trustee in its sole discretion might withhold any further payments to beneficiary, connoted a permanent retention or refraining from making payments, notwithstanding that the word "withhold" may be used to connote a mere temporary holding back, and hence trustee could withhold payments even after lifting of distraint warrants issued by the United States to enforce beneficiary's debt for unpaid income taxes.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Withhold".

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; James L. Atteridge, Judge.

Action by Romie C. Jacks against the Monterey County Trust and Savings Bank, as trustee, etc., to recover certain sums claimed to have become due to plaintiff as beneficiary under the trust created by plaintiff's brother. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed.

For prior opinion, see 119 P.2d 781.

Rosendale, Thomas & Muller and Edson G. Thomas, all of Salinas, for appellant.

Wyckoff, Gardner & Parker and J. E. Gardner, all of Watsonville, and Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and Lloyd W. Dinkelspiel, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

A petition for hearing after decision of the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two, was granted for the purpose of giving further consideration to the question of the application to trust created inter vivos of the rule applicable to testamentary trusts. See section 160–163 Probate Code. After further consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that the District Court of Appeal correctly disposed of the questions presented. We therefore adopt as our opinion the following portions of the opinion of said court, prepared by Mr. Justice Spence, with additional observations.

"Plaintiff, who was a brother of Will Jacks, deceased, and a beneficiary under a trust created by the latter during his lifetime, brought this action against the defendant, as trustee, to recover certain sums claimed to have become due to said beneficiary under the terms of said trust. Plaintiff had judgment and defendant appeals.

"In 1935, Will Jacks, as trustor, conveyed to defendant in trust a large amount of real and personal property having an approximate value of $500,000. The instrument provided for the payment of the income from the trust estate to Will Jacks during his lifetime and contained further provisions for the subsequent disposition of the trust estate. It was provided that 'Upon the death of the Trustor the Trustee shall proceed to liquidate this trust estate, converting all of said trust estate into cash, as soon as practicable and advantageous in the absolute discretion of the Trustee, and upon such liquidation the Trustee shall distribute whatever there remains of the trust estate in the following manner:' Then followed directions to distribute specific sums totaling about $75,000 to the persons therein named and directions to distribute the residue to the Shrine for the benefit of the Shriners' Hospital for Crippled Children in San Francisco. All of the directions for distribution of specific sums provided for distribution directly to the intended beneficiaries except those creating the trust under consideration here. The last-mentioned provisions read as follows:

" 'To Monterey County Trust & Savings Bank in trust for Romie C. Jacks the sum of Twenty Five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which said Trustee is hereby directed to set aside as a fund to be known as the "Romie C. Jacks' Trust Fund," which fund shall be within the management and control of said Trustee, with the same powers, duties, terms, conditions, and subject to the payment of the same costs, charges, fees, and compensation, that the other portions of the trust property of Trustor is held by Trustee under the provisions hereof.

" 'Said Trustee is directed to pay to said Romie C. Jacks out of said fund the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) per month, which said sum shall be paid for the remainder of the lifetime of said Romie C. Jacks or until said fund is exhausted.

" 'It is herein expressly declared and provided that no interest of whatsoever nature, given to Romie C. Jacks shall be subject to or subject to be taken for the payment of any debts whatsoever contracted by said Romie C. Jacks either before or after the date of this instrument, and for any purpose whatsoever, and that Romie C. Jacks shall have no power or capacity to make any disposition whatsoever of any of said income, by his assignment or by his order, voluntary or involuntary, and whether made by the order or direction of any court or courts, whether of bankruptcy or otherwise; nor shall said interest be subject to any process of attachment issued against said Romie C. Jacks or to be taken in execution under any form of legal process directed against him or against any one connected with the trust estate, the income thereof, or any part of said income. Any interest of Romie C. Jacks in this trust is subject to the condition that he shall be without power to anticipate said income, to assign, convey, pledge, or otherwise encumber or transfer any part of said income, or any interest in said trust, and in the event of his doing any of these inhibited things, or in the event that an attempt is made to subject said income or property, or any part thereof, to the payment of any of his debts or obligations, the trustee in its sole discretion may withhold any further payment or payments to said Romie C. Jacks.

" 'Upon and at the time of the demise of said Romie C. Jacks said Romie C. Jacks trust shall ipso facto cease and determine, and the balance remaining in said Romie C. Jacks' Trust Fund shall go and be, by said Trustee, conveyed, transferred, and delivered to the Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine for North America, to be used for the use and benefit of the Shriners' Hospital for crippled children in San Francisco, California.

" 'If in the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of said Trustee the monthly payment of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) shall not be sufficient to provide for the reasonable needs and comforts of my said brother Romie C. Jacks during any period or periods of his illness, or other want or necessity, said Trustee may, and it is hereby authorized and empowered, but it shall in no event be required so to do, and as often as it shall deem necessary, pay to, or use, apply or expend, for the use and the benefit of said Romie C. Jacks such portions of the principal of the trust fund created for the benefit of Romie C. Jacks up to and including the whole thereof, as said Trustee in its absolute discretion may determine to be adequate to provide for Romie C. Jacks, for the purposes aforesaid.'

"Will Jacks, the trustor, died on January 28, 1937, and the defendant, as trustee, thereafter proceeded to liquidate the trust estate. It does not appear when the liquidation of the entire trust estate was completed but the trial court found that the period from January 28, 1937, to December 20, 1937, was a reasonable time within which defendant could accomplish liquidation. This matter becomes immaterial for the reason that on May 29, 1937, defendant created the 'Romie C. Jacks' Trust Fund' by depositing $500 therein; that in October, 1937, the balance, amounting to $24,500, was deposited therein; and the undisputed evidence shows that said sums were deposited as soon as the money was available and prior to the time found by the trial court to have been a reasonable time. Following the deposit in the trust fund of the abovementioned $500 on May 29, 1937, defendant immediately paid that sum over to plaintiff.

"Prior to that time, the United States Board of Tax Appeals had determined that plaintiff had become indebted to the United States of America in the total sum of approximately $34,000 for unpaid income taxes and said determination had become final and conclusive. On June 5, 1937, being about seven days after the making of the above-mentioned first payment of $500 to plaintiff under the terms of said trust, there were served upon defendant a notice of levy and a distraint warrant and a similar notice was thereafter duly recorded in the office of the county recorder. Again on March 9, 1938, a similar notice of levy and distraint warrant were so served on defendant. It was stipulated and the trial court found that said acts constituted an attempt on the part of the United States of America to subject the trust fund and the interest of plaintiff therein to the payment of plaintiff's debt for unpaid income taxes and that the United States of America claimed a lien upon said fund and said interest at all times from June 5, 1937, to and including June 27, 1938.

"Defendant made no payments to plaintiff during the period last mentioned and on April 22, 1938, and prior to the expiration of said period, plaintiff commenced this action after making demand upon defendant. The United States of America thereupon filed its complaint in intervention asserting its claim of lien. On or about said June 27, 1938, plaintiff paid or caused to be paid to the United States the entire sum due from plaintiff, said payment having been made from funds other than the abovementioned trust fund. The complaint in intervention was thereupon dismissed. Since the time of said payment and dismissal, defendant has regularly made monthly payments to plaintiff in the sum of $500 each.

"This cause proceeded to trial, plaintiff claiming that he was entitled to judgment for all unpaid payments, commencing from the time of the trustor's death, together with interest thereon. The trial court entered its judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in the sum of $8,000, together with interest on the sum of $1,500 from December 20, 1937, at the rate of 4 per cent per annum and with interest on the sum of $6,500 from June 27, 1938, at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. It was provided in the judgment that such interest should be payable from the 'individual funds and property' of defendant and not from the trust fund. It thus appears that the trial court sustained plaintiff's claim (1) that plaintiff was 'entitled to receive monthly payments from the trust commencing as of the date of the death of the trustor' and (2) that plaintiff was further 'entitled to the prescribed monthly payments maturing between the date of the levy of the distraint warrant and the time of its release.'

"It is defendant's main contention on this appeal that the trial court erred in awarding any judgment to plaintiff and our review of the record leads us to the conclusion that this contention must be sustained. A consideration of this contention divides itself logically into a discussion of the two claims of plaintiff as set forth above.

"With respect to the time of commencement, plaintiff argues that the trust instrument created a trust for the maintenance of plaintiff and provided for an annuity. Plaintiff therefore concludes that plaintiff was entitled to monthly payments from the time of the death of the trustor. The trial court so found and concluded.

[1, 2] "The search of able counsel has disclosed no authority directly in point on the subject under discussion. The decided cases which deal with alleged provisions for maintenance and for annuities and which might throw light upon the subject deal exclusively with testamentary provisions rather than with provisions found in instruments creating inter vivos trusts. It is apparently conceded that section 162 of the Probate Code applies only to testamentary provisions and we believe there can be no doubt of its inapplicability here. Not only is that section found in the division of the Probate Code entitled 'Wills' and under the chapter of that division entitled 'Legacies and Interest,' but the very wording of the section shows that its application is limited to testamentary provisions." Whatever may be the rule with reference to the commencement of payments to the beneficiary under a testamentary trust, that rule has no application to a trust inter vivos. The intention of the trustor as expressed in the declaration of trust is of paramount importance.

[3] "Turning to the trust instrument before us, we find that it provided for what may be termed a primary trust and also provided for what may be termed a secondary trust. The primary trust was to terminate following distribution of the trust estate, which distribution was to follow the liquidation of the entire trust estate. The trustor directed that the trust estate be liquidated as soon as 'practicable and advantageous' after his death but left the exact time for liquidation to the 'absolute discretion' of the trustee. The secondary trust did not become effective until after distribution following liquidation of the trust estate in the primary trust and the trustee of the secondary trust was directed to set aside a trust fund with the money so distributed to it as trustee of the secondary trust. Out of said secondary trust fund so set aside the trustee was directed to make the payments of $500 per month to plaintiff as therein provided 'during the lifetime of said Romie C. Jacks or until said fund is exhausted.' The total sum to be so set aside was $25,000 and payments of $500 per month from said fund would normally exhaust the fund in approximately four years and two months from the time of the first payment. * * *

"The trust instrument is entirely devoid of any provision as to the time for the commencement of the payments to plaintiff but the only reasonable construction to be placed upon the language used by the trustor is that he intended such payments to commence after the secondary trust had become effective by the distribution of the secondary trust fund to the trustee of the secondary trust.

"The provisions of the trust agreement above referred to are followed by elaborate spendthrift trust provisions and we believe that the intention of the trustor is made clear by these provisions. It shows that his real intention in creating the secondary trust and providing for payments of $500 each rather than in directing the distribution of the entire $25,000 to plaintiff himself was to protect the gift to plaintiff from the acts of plaintiff's creditors and from the acts of plaintiff himself. To this end the trustor gave broad powers to the trustee in withholding payments but provided for normal monthly payments in the sum of $500 each, which would result in plaintiff's normally receiving the entire gift within a comparatively short period of time but in comparatively small amounts. The intention to protect the gift in this manner was obviously the dominant intention of the trustor in creating the secondary trust.

[4] "Plaintiff calls our attention to the paragraph of the trust instrument which shows that the trustee was authorized to pay over to plaintiff sums greater than $500 per month during periods of illness, want or necessity. We do not believe that said paragraph is of controlling importance. It was expressly provided that this should be in the 'absolute and uncontrolled discretion of the trustee' and that the trustee 'shall in no event be required so to do.' The making of such larger payments would have further shortened the comparatively short time required to exhaust the trust fund. * * *

"While it may be conceded that the trust instrument provided for an 'annuity,' within the broad definition of that term (3 Cyc., p. 200), it does not follow that plaintiff was entitled to monthly payments commencing as of the date of the trustor's death. * * * The time for the commencement of payments upon an annuity created by an instrument setting up an inter vivos trust is ordinarily at the time when such inter vivos trust becomes effective. * * * We believe that the only reasonable construction to place upon the trust instrument here is that the trustor intended that payments should not commence until distribution of the secondary trust fund had been made to the trustee of the secondary trust.

[5] "We turn now to a consideration of the question of whether plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the payments withheld by defendant between the time of the levy of the distraint warrant and the time of the release thereof. The discussion of this subject is simplified by plaintiff's statement that he 'does not dispute the power of the trustee to exercise its discretion to withhold payments during such time as the federal distraint warrants were in effect.' But plaintiff claims that he was entitled as a matter of right to said withheld payments after 'the distraint warrants were lifted.' We are of the opinion that this claim cannot be sustained.

"The trust instrument provided that in the event of the plaintiff's 'doing any of these inhibited things, or in the event that an attempt is made to subject said income or property, or any part thereof, to the payment of any of his debts or obligations, the trustee in its sole discretion may withhold any further payment or payments to said Romie C. Jack.' This language appears to be clear and unambiguous. It was obviously the trustor's intention to protect the gift from either attempts by plaintiff to anticipate the payments or attempts by plaintiff's creditors to subject such payments to the satisfaction of their claims. To that end, the trustor gave to the trustee the sole discretion 'to withhold any further payment or payments' in the event any such attempt might be made. It was stipulated that such an attempt was made.

"While the word 'withhold' may sometimes be used to connote a mere temporary holding back as contended by plaintiff, it is probably more frequently used to connote a permanent retention or refraining 'from granting, giving, allowing, or the like.' See Webster's New Inter. Dict., 2d Ed. A consideration of all of the terms creating the trust here compels the conclusion that the trustor intended to use the word 'withhold' in the latter sense. We are dealing here with a typical spendthrift trust and the obvious purpose of the trustor in creating such a trust would be defeated by a construction which would permit the accumulation of the prescribed payments and the distribution of a large lump sum to the beneficiary at any one time.

"In view of the conclusions which we have reached, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the question of the right of plaintiff to interest as that right, if any would have existed, was dependent upon his right to judgment for some of the payments claimed by him."

The judgment is reversed.

VOYCE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

S. F. 16721.

Supreme Court of California.

June 30, 1942.

1. Wills 🔑432

If a will is found valid or invalid in response to grounds of attack that it is invalid on ground of unsoundness of testatrix' mind, lack of due execution, undue influence, and fraud, it is so in toto, and all interested persons will be affected, either beneficially or adversely, regardless of whether they participate in the contest, excepting those persons who fall within disability class mentioned in statute. Probate Code, §§ 380, 384.

2. Wills 🔑427

If a will is contested within six months on grounds of unsoundness of mind, lack of due execution, undue influence and fraud, the probate of the will is not conclusive. Probate Code, §§ 380, 382, 384.

3. Wills 🔑222

A will contest is in the nature of a "proceeding in rem" although it has some of the aspects of a "proceeding inter partes".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proceeding in Rem" and "Proceeding Inter Partes".

4. Wills 🔑432

If superior court did not lose jurisdiction of will contest by reason of dismissal of the petition to revoke probate of the will, the superior court could proceed under the petition to determine the validity of the will, and any judgment rendered would be binding on defendants and all other persons interested who were properly notified thereof, even though they did not actually participate therein.

5. Wills 🔑256

Where testatrix' cousin filed a petition to revoke probate of will within six months' statutory period after admission of will to probate, and within six months two of the defendants filed an answer to the petition adopting allegations of the petition, and prayed that probate of will be revoked on the same grounds as those named in petition, and after expiration of six months' period such defendants filed a petition in intervention attacking will on same grounds as those alleged in petition, dismissal of petition by testatrix' cousin did not divest court of jurisdiction to hear the contest. Probate Code, §§ 380–382, 384, 1233; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 387, 581.

6. Wills 🔑307

Section of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with dismissals and nonsuits is applicable to will contests, in view of provision of the Probate Code stating that provisions of Part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure constitute rules of practice in probate proceedings, in regard to matters of procedure not otherwise covered by the Probate Code. Probate Code, § 1233; Code Civ. Proc. § 581.

7. Wills 🔑264

The section of the Probate Code authorizing a pleading to a will contest is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize a pleading which adopts the position as taken by the contestant and attacks the validity of a will. Probate Code, § 381.

8. Wills 🔑264

An interested person mentioned in the section of the Probate Code providing that any interested person, with certain exceptions, may contest the validity of a will at any time within six months after the will is admitted to probate, may intervene in a will contest initiated by another interested person within six months after probate, even though the intervention is filed after expiration of the six months' period. Probate Code, § 380.

9. Wills 🔑264

The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with intervention are applicable to will contests. Code Civ.Proc. § 387; Probate Code, § 1233.

10. Wills 🔑264

Testatrix' cousin who contested will within six months after admission of will to probate was an "interested person" within meaning of the section of the Probate Code providing that any interested person may contest the validity of the will at any time within six months after the will is admitted to probate. Probate Code, § 380.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Interested Person".

11. Wills 🔑264

Where defendants, within six months' statutory period after admission of will to probate, filed answer to petition to revoke probate of will, adopting allegations of petition, right of such defendants to file a petition in intervention seeking revocation of probate of will on the same grounds as those contained in the petition was not barred because it was not filed within six months after probate. Probate Code, §§ 380, 382, 384.

12. Wills 🔑256

When once the jurisdiction of a court to determine the validity of a will attaches by the filing of a contest within six months from time of admitting the will to probate, the court does not lose jurisdiction of the proceeding at the end of six months until disposition is made of the matter, in view of the fact that a proceeding to contest the will is in the nature of a "proceeding in rem," the "res" being the subject matter of the action, which is the validity of the will. In Bank.

Original prohibition proceeding by Alfred Voyce, as executor of the will of Elizabeth M. Cox, deceased, and others, petitioners, against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, to prohibit respondent from proceeding with the trial of a will contest.

Alternative writ of prohibition discharged, and petition for peremptory writ of prohibition denied.

John L. McNab and Jackson Maddux, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Devine & Devine and Preston Devine, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Petitioners seek to have respondent superior court prohibited from proceeding with the trial of a will contest.

Elizabeth M. Cox died testate on February 8, 1940. Her will was admitted to probate by respondent superior court, on March 1, 1940, petitioner Voyce being named executor. On August 24, 1940, six days before the expiration of the six months' period in which a contest could be initiated, Iris Taylor, a cousin of the deceased, filed a petition to revoke the probate of the will charging therein unsoundness of mind, lack of due execution, undue influence and fraud. She named as defendants therein executor Voyce, Charles R. Lamb, Arvilla Coons, Rosamond Nelson and several other persons. Defendants Charles R. Lamb, Coons, and others, but not Nelson, filed their answer to Taylor's petition on August 30, 1940, within the six months' period, in which they admitted all of the allegations of the petition, alleged that they were cousins of the deceased, adopted the allegations of the petition, and prayed that the probate of the will be revoked. Defendant Voyce, petitioner herein, filed his answer on March 19, 1941, denying the allegations of the petition. Franklin Chester and other legatees under the will likewise denied the allegations of the petition by their answer filed in December, 1940.

On May 3, 1941, Charles R. Lamb, upon obtaining leave of court therefor, filed a petition in intervention and had a citation issued thereon in the contest proceedings, praying for the revocation of the probate of the will; the petition in intervention attacked the will on the same grounds as alleged in contestant Taylor's petition, and in fact was identical therewith. On May 5, 1941, Taylor filed in the proceedings a voluntary dismissal of her contest. On July 1, 1941, Coons and Nelson, with leave of court, filed a petition in intervention in aid of the intervention of Charles R. Lamb. A motion by Chester made on July 17, 1941, to have Lamb's petition in intervention dismissed was denied by the court.

The trial court has threatened to proceed with the trial of the contest which petitioners assert it is without jurisdiction to do because the petitions in intervention were filed after the expiration of the six months' period since the admission of the will to probate (Prob.Code, §§ 380, 384), and contestant Taylor's contest which was the only one filed in time, has been dismissed.

[1] While petitioners seek to have restrained the trial of the proceeding embraced in the intervention of Lamb, Coons and Nelson, there is no material distinction between that proceeding and the contest of the will filed by Taylor. It is alleged in the petition for prohibition, and not denied, that the grounds of contest set forth in the petitions in intervention are identical with those set forth in Taylor's petition, in fact, that the former are copies of the latter. As heretofore seen, Lamb and Coons in their answer to Taylor's petition which was filed within six months after the admission of the will to probate, admitted the allegations of Taylor's petition, and adopted them, and prayed that the admission of the will to probate be revoked. Therefore, it cannot be said as to those two persons, that they were not active participants in the contest within the six months' period. Their answer having raised the same issues which were raised by Taylor's petition and by their later petitions in intervention, it would appear that these latter petitions added nothing to the subject matter over which the court had already acquired jurisdiction, namely, the validity of the will tested in the light of the specified grounds of attack. If Taylor's purported dismissal did not divest the court of jurisdiction to hear the contest on the grounds specified, then there can be no doubt that the hearing may proceed on those grounds, and, in the ultimate result, it is of small consequence whether such a proceeding would be technically considered as under the petitions in intervention or under the affirmative claims made in the answer. The essential issue for determination in either case is whether or not the will is vulnerable to the attack upon it. If it is found valid or invalid in response to the grounds of attack here advanced, it is so in toto, and all interested persons will be affected either beneficially or adversely as the case may be, regardless of whether they participate in the contest, excepting of course those persons who fall within the disability class.

[2] The foregoing conclusion follows from the statutory provisions on the subject and the nature of the proceeding itself. Section 380 of the Probate Code provides that any interested person (with certain exceptions) may contest the validity of the will at any time within six months after the will is admitted to probate. Under section 382 of that code if a will is found invalid the probate must be revoked and the powers of the executor cease. Section 384 of the Probate Code provides:

"If no person contests the validity of a will or of the probate thereof within the time specified in this article, the probate of the will is conclusive, saving to infants and persons of unsound mind who were not made parties to the proceeding in like period of six months after their respective disabilities are removed." (Italics added.) As to any person failing to contest the will within six months, the "probate of the will is conclusive" (except as to certain persons), then conversely if the will is contested within six months upon the grounds here involved, the probate of the will is not conclusive, and if the probate is revoked it is revoked as to everyone.

[3, 4] A will contest is in the nature of a proceeding in rem although it has some of the aspects of a proceeding inter partes. In re Estate of Golden, 9 Cal.2d 647, 72 P.2d 113; In re Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 150 P. 989; In re Estate of Relph, 192 Cal. 451, 221 P. 361; In re Estate of Sankey, 199 Cal. 391, 249 P. 517. Hence the determination in a will contest on the grounds here involved, that the will is invalid, where the contest has been filed within six months after the admission of the will to probate, and due notice has been given, has the effect of invalidating the will in toto and as to everyone interested therein, regardless of whether they actively participated in the contest. Estate of Freud, 73 Cal. 555, 15 P. 135; Scott v. Superior Court, 125 Cal.App. 513, 14 P.2d 99; In re Estate of Golden, supra; Security T. & S. Bk. v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.App.2d 551, 553, 69 P.2d 921; Clements et al. v. McGinn et al., 4 Cal.Unrep. 163, 33 P. 920; see, also, Fletcher v. Superior Court, 79 Cal.App. 468, 476, 250 P. 195. We are not here concerned with the rights of persons under disability to contest a will after the six months' period, nor the effect of such a contest by them upon the rights of persons under no disability where no contest was initiated within six months. See Samson v. Samson, 64 Cal. 327, 30 P. 979; Security T. & S. Bk. v. Superior Court, supra; and In re Estate of Golden, supra. Thus it appears that, independent of the petitions in intervention, if the court did not lose jurisdiction of the contest by reason of the dismissal, it could proceed under the contest initiated by Taylor to determine the validity of the will, and any judgment rendered would be binding upon Lamb, Coons and Nelson and all the other persons interested who were properly notified thereof, even though they did not actually participate therein. Although as far as appears, Nelson did not answer Taylor's petition as was done by Lamb and Coons, she would nevertheless benefit along with the other heirs if the will were declared invalid.

[5] Turning then to the question of whether the dismissal by Taylor of her petition terminated the contest and divested the court of jurisdiction to hear it, but still considering only the contest as initiated by her and the answer of Lamb and Coons thereto separate from the petitions in intervention, we believe that the dismissal did not accomplish that result.

[6] It is clear that section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for dismissals, is applicable to will contests. See In re Estate of Cook, 205 Cal. 581, 271 P. 1083; In re Estate of Knauft, 59 Cal.App. 536, 211 P. 29; In re Estate of Gurnsey, 61 Cal.App. 178, 214 P. 487; In re Estate of Matthiessen, 10 Cal.App.2d 323, 52 P.2d 248. That rule follows from the provisions of section 1233 of the Probate Code stating that the provisions of part II of the Code of Civil Procedure constitute the rules of practice in probate proceedings in regard to matters of procedure not otherwise covered by the Probate Code. Section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure is in part II thereof. It has recently been held by this court that section 581 is applicable to proceedings to determine heirship, whose nature is quite similar to a will contest. O'Day v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 540, 116 P.2d 621.

[7] The attempted dismissal by Taylor of her contest was under the first subdivision of section 581 which authorizes a plaintiff to dismiss at any time before trial by filing a written request with the clerk "provided that a counterclaim has not been set up, or affirmative relief sought by the cross-complaint or answer of the defendant." Lamb and Coons asked for affirmative relief in their answer. They adopted the allegations of contestant Taylor's petition for revocation of probate and asked that the probate be revoked. Section 381 of the Probate Code authorizes a pleading to the contest stating that the citation in the contest must be directed to the executor, devisees, legatees and heirs "directing them to plead to the contest within thirty days after service of the citation." The authority to plead to the contest is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize a pleading which adopts and agrees with the position taken by the contestant, and attacks the validity of the will. It is contemplated by the Probate Code that those authorized to plead to the contest may be either plaintiffs or defendants.

Therefore, in the instant case Lamb and Coons by their pleading to the contest may be considered either as joining themselves as plaintiffs by answer inasmuch as they aligned themselves on the side of contestant Taylor, or as parties seeking affirmative relief as to the subject matter, the validity of the will, and the rights in the property of the estate as affected thereby, which affirmative relief is in nature similar to that mentioned in section 581, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. In either event the contestant plaintiff cannot deprive them of the right to be heard on those issues by a voluntary dismissal of her contest under section 581, subd. 1. If their pleading is considered a request for affirmative relief under that section the very terms thereof prevent that result. If by their pleading they became joint contestants with Taylor, then they are in a position analogous to that where several plaintiffs join in an action. One of several plaintiffs joined in an action may not dismiss it to the prejudice of his coplaintiffs.

[8] We believe that it is equally clear that an interested person as mentioned in section 380 of the Probate Code may intervene in a will contest initiated by another interested person within six months after probate, even though the intervention is filed after the expiration of the six months' period.

[9] Section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "At any time before trial, any person, who has an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both, may intervene in the action or proceeding. An intervention takes place when a third person is permitted to become a party to an action or proceeding between other persons, either by joining the plaintiff in claiming what is sought by the complaint, or by uniting with the defendant in resisting the claims of the plaintiff, or by demanding anything adversely to both the plaintiff and the defendant * * *." That section is a part of part II of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under Section 1233 of the Probate Code, is a matter of procedure applicable to will contests. (See cases cited supra, with respect to the applicability of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure.) No valid reason has been advanced why the provisions for intervention should not be applicable to will contests. Reasons of policy dictate that they should. Justice may always be better served by the presence before the court of all of the interested parties. It has been held that section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure (appearing in part II, title 3, thereof under the title "Parties to Actions," the same title in which section 387 appears) which deals with abatement of actions and substitution of parties, is applicable to will contests (In re Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 150 P. 989); and that section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with the bringing in of new parties, appearing in the same part and title of that Code is applicable to will contests. San Francisco Protestant Orphan Asylum v. Superior Court, 116 Cal. 443, 48 P. 379.

[10-12] The right to file a petition in intervention under the circumstances present here was not barred by reason of the fact that it was not filed within six months after probate; there was a will contest pending, which was filed in time and no attempt was made to raise new grounds of contest. The contest which was filed within the six months' period inured to the benefit of persons who did not join therein as contestants. In re Estate of Butzow, 21 Cal.App.2d 96, 68 P.2d 374; Weichold v. Day, 118 Kan. 598, 236 P. 649; Buchanan v. Davis, Tex. Civ.App., 43 S.W.2d 279; Maurer v. Miller, 77 Kan. 92, 93 P. 596, 127 Am.St.Rep. 408, 15 Ann.Cas. 663, 28 R.C.L. 390, 394. Petitioners vigorously criticize the Butzow case and assert it cites authorities from other jurisdictions which are not in point. But as will be apparent from the discussion herein, we are convinced that the rule there laid down is sound. They also intimate that it is questioned in Security T. & S. Bk. v. Superior Court, supra, but on the contrary the court in that case approves the rule stating at page 553 of 21 Cal.App.2d, at page 922 of 69 P.2d:

"These sections of the Probate Code [sections 380, 382 and 384] not only provide for a contest, but clearly provide that the probate of a will is not conclusive until six months has expired after the order was entered, and then only if no person has filed a contest. If a contest filed within that time before the probate has become conclusive results in the will being declared invalid, it clearly follows that it is invalid for all purposes. The petitioners cite as controlling here the recent case of In re Estate of Butzow, [21 Cal.App.2d 96], 68 P.2d 374. That case illustrates the point we are now making. A contest was there filed within the six months' period provided by the statute, the order admitting the will to probate never became conclusive, any judgment that might be entered setting aside the will would apply to it in its entirety, and the statute of limitations, by its own terms, had not run against any heir." (Italics ours.) This follows from the statutory provisions. Section 380 of the Probate Code provides that any person (with certain exceptions) may within six months after probate contest the validity of the will. Section 384 provides that if "no person" contests the validity of the will within six months the probate of the will is conclusive except as to certain persons under disability. In the instant case an interested person has contested the will within time, namely, contestant Taylor. It is urged that the six months' period is a limitation on the court's jurisdiction to entertain the contest rather than a statute of limitation (In re Estate of Smith, 214 Cal. 50, 3 P.2d 921; Scott v. Superior Court, supra); but as we have seen, a proceeding to contest a will is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and when once the jurisdiction of the court to determine the validity of the will attaches by the filing of a contest in time, it does not lose jurisdiction thereof until disposition has been made of the matter, or, stating it another way, the order admitting the will to probate does not become final within six months if a contest is filed.

The filing by contestant Taylor of a request for the dismissal of her contest did not oust the court of jurisdiction under the circumstances here presented. Prior to that dismissal the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter; that is, a contest of the will on the grounds stated in the contest, and the intervention was filed prior to the dismissal, claiming the identical relief involved in the contest then before the court. While a will contest may be in some respects adversary as contended by petitioners, it is fundamentally a proceeding in rem. The jurisdiction of the court attaches to the res, the subject matter of the action, to wit, the validity of the will. It is similar to the addition of new parties plaintiffs who seek the identical relief as the original plaintiff. It has been held that additional plaintiffs, heirs of the deceased, may be brought into an action for wrongful death by amendment to the complaint because no new issues are raised or a new cause of action stated. Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co., 198 Cal. 290, 244 P. 1077; Lopez v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 93 Cal.App. 196, 269 P. 685. In the case at bar no new issues, that is, grounds of contest have been raised, and no prejudice has been suffered by petitioners. The case is not like Tubbs v. Delillo, 19 Cal.App. 612, 127 P. 514, or Mars v. McKay, 14 Cal. 127, where the court was considering in an action for the foreclosure a mechanic's lien, the addition of parties with mechanic's liens on the same property. There each lien holder's right was dependent upon his personal lien, and the addition of other parties, each with his independent lien, would require the pleading of new causes of action, as new and distinct issues would be raised. In the case at bar no new issues are raised, the issues are identical, that is, the validity of the will with reference to the specified grounds of attack. It is not the purpose of the contest to determine heirship, or the rights as between the contestants to the assets of the estate, but the validity of the will is the only issue.

Although Taylor could withdraw as a contestant, she could not by a dismissal of her contest deprive the interveners of their right to have the contest heard and determined.

The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged. The petition for a peremptory writ of prohibition is denied.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The plaintiff corporation, which is engaged in operating two bowling alleys in the city of Los Angeles, brought this action against the defendant unions and the officers and members thereof. Plaintiff sought to enjoin defendants from maintaining pickets in front of plaintiff's places of business and to recover damages for the allegedly unlawful picketing previously carried on by defendants. The action was tried without a jury and, by stipulation, was tried solely with reference to the alley located at 1953 S. Vermont Avenue in Los Angeles. The trial court found that prior to the filing of the complaint in this action none of plaintiff's employees was engaged in a labor dispute with his employer and that there was no strike of any nature against plaintiff. It found that Local 214 sought to unionize all of plaintiff's employees who were not members of any union and that Local 214 urged plaintiff to sign a contract providing that it would employ only union members. After repeated refusals on the part of plaintiff to sign such a contract (on the theory that it would not force its employees to become union members), defendants stationed pickets outside the bowling alley who carried signs stating: "This house on strike. A. F. L." At that time, according to the findings of the trial court, none of plaintiff's employees was on strike and no labor dispute existed between employer and employees. Immediately after the establishment of the picket line, however, certain of plaintiff's employees left and remained away from their work. The court found that prior to the establishment of the picket line a ballot was conducted by defendants among those of plaintiff's employees who belonged to the union. The question voted upon was whether a strike should be called against plaintiff but not a single employee (with one possible exception) voted for such a strike. It was found that the sole purpose of the picketing was to compel plaintiff to sign the closed shop agreement and that "the banners and signs carried by said pickets conveyed false and untrue information to the general public insofar as the employees of plaintiff are concerned." The trial court found that the allegations of the complaint charging that the pickets had engaged in acts of force, violence or physical intimidation were untrue. It also found that the allegations of damage in the sum of $25,000 were untrue.

Upon the basis of these findings the trial court rendered a so-called "memorandum for judgment" in which it ordered that the injunction be granted on the ground that picketing was unlawful in the absence of a labor dispute between the employer and its employees. Following the decision of this court in McKay v. Retail Auto S. L. Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373, and companion cases, defendants moved to vacate the order previously made by the trial court. This motion was granted and thereafter judgment was entered for defendants denying the permanent injunction and dissolving the preliminary injunction theretofore granted. Plaintiff brings this appeal from the judgment for defendants.

The question for decision is whether, under the facts found by the trial court, it was error to deny plaintiff's request for injunctive relief. Plaintiff concedes that under controlling decisions no injunction could have been granted based upon the absence of a dispute between the employer and his employees (McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra, 16 Cal.2d at p. 324, 106 P.2d 373; C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Lyons, 16 Cal.2d 389, 394, 106 P.2d 414; American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 312 U.S. 321, 61 S.Ct. 568, 85 L. Ed. 855; Bakery and Pastry Drivers and Helpers, etc., v. Wohl, 62 S.Ct. 816, 86 L.Ed. 1178), or upon the ground that the picketing was being conducted to secure a closed shop contract. McKay v. Retail S. L. Union No. 1067, supra, 16 Cal.2d at pages 322, 323, 106 P.2d 373; Shafer v. Registered Pharmacists Union, 16 Cal.2d 379, 106 P.2d 403. The sole issue, therefore, is whether the trial court erred in denying injunctive relief in a case where it found that the banners and signs carried by the pickets conveyed false and untrue information to the general public.

[1] There can be no doubt that untruthful picketing is unlawful picketing. Cases involving the right of labor to picket peacefully have consistently held that the picketing must also be honest and truthful. McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra, 16 Cal.2d at page 319, 320, 106 P.2d 373; Steiner v. Long Beach Local No. 128, 19 Cal.2d 676, 682, 683, 123 P.2d 20; Euclid Candy Co. v. International Longshoremen, 49 Cal.App.2d 137, 143, 121 P.2d 91; cf. Davitt v. American Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 56 P. 775; Weist v. Dirks, 215 Ind. 568, 20 N.E.2d 969, 971; Wilner v. Bless, 243 N.Y. 544, 154 N.E. 598; Olympia Operating Co. v. Costello, 278 Mass. 125, 179 N. E. 804; 1 Teller, Labor Disputes and Collective Bargaining (1940), §§ 126–128, pp. 388, et seq. In certain cases it has been difficult to determine whether the particular signs used in picketing were actually false (cf. Teller, op. cit. supra; (1941) 29 Cal.L.Rev. 366, 370, n. 12), but since there is no challenge to the trial court's finding upon this point it is unnecessary in the present case to consider the question. Conceding, in effect, that the picketing in the present case conveyed false information to the public, defendants contend that the action of the trial court should be sustained upon the ground that equity will not enjoin picketing under such circumstances because it is so closely identified with the constitutional right of free speech. In support of this proposition defendants rely upon cases which set forth the principle that equity will not grant injunctive relief against the publication of what might be, after publication, a libel or slander. Dailey v. Superior Court, 112 Cal. 94, 44 P. 458, 32 L.R.A. 273, 53 Am.St.Rep. 160; In re Wood, 194 Cal. 49, 60, 227 P. 908; cf. People v. Armentrout, 118 Cal.App.Supp. 761, 769, 1 P.2d 556; Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 434, 86 P. 806, 8 L.R.A.,N.S. 460, 117 Am.St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann.Cas. 1219. Defendants' position in this regard cannot be sustained. If defendants had remained at home and had uttered false statements concerning plaintiff, the rule cited might have been relied upon. Not so in the present case, however, for assuming that the rule is correct, here is not the utterance of false statements which is sought to be enjoined, but the conduct of picketing in an unlawful manner. The rule in this regard is analogous to the principle that while equity will not ordinarily enjoin activity which is criminal in nature, neither will it refuse to act where an independent ground for relief is presented merely because the acts sought to be enjoined are also criminal. See 5 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, Equitable Remedies, 2d Ed., § 2050, p. 4630. Despite theoretical criticism (see 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, p. 404; (1941) 29 Cal.L.Rev. 366, 377, 378) and despite the fact that the publication of false statements alone will not justify equitable relief, it is the nearly unanimous rule throughout the country that equity will intervene where false or fraudulent statements are combined with picketing and where, under local policy, this renders the picketing illegal. Cf. McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra; J. H. & S. Theatres v. Fay, 260 N.Y. 315, 183 N.E. 509, 512; Wilner v. Bless, supra; Wiest v. Dirks, supra; Olympia Operating Co. v. Costello, supra; 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, p. 388, et seq.; (1941) 90 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 201, 211-212; (1941) 41 Columb.L.Rev. 89, 101, n. 79-80; 116 A.L.R. 484, 497; 27 A.L.R. 651, 653.

[2, 3] The basis for equity's intervention in cases such as this rests upon the fact that picketing is one of the forms of collective labor activity which seeks to exert economic pressure upon an employer. See Restatement, Torts, § 796 et seq. As was said in a recent opinion of the United States Supreme Court, "Picketing by an organized group is more than free speech, since it involves patrol of a particular locality and since the very presence of a picket line may induce action of one kind or another, quite irrespective of the nature of the ideas which are being disseminated. Hence those aspects of picketing make it the subject of restrictive regulation." Bakery and Pastry Drivers and Helpers, etc., v. Wohl, supra, 62 S.Ct. at page 819, Douglas, J. concurring. Such collective labor activity is permissible only when conducted according to the requirements imposed by law, and if in violation of such requirements, picketing is subject under ordinary circumstances to the restraint of a court of equity. 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, chap. 8, pp. 319, et seq. The standards imposed for determining whether picketing is lawful and permissible, or unlawful and enjoinable, are matters of state law which have varied from time to time and from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. See (1940) 39 Mich.L.Rev. 110, 111; (1941) 26 Corn.L.Q. 470, 471-472. Thus, at various times in the past picketing has been enjoined on the theory that it is unlawful per se (Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 P. 324; 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, § 112), or on the theory that it is unlawful in the absence of a dispute between employer and employee. See 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, § 117, et seq. Neither of these criteria for determining the legality of picketing has application in California today, but violent picketing and untruthful picketing remain unlawful. See McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra. Unless there is a statutory or constitutional restriction on the power of a court of equity under the circumstances here presented, therefore, it seems clear that plaintiff is entitled to a decree enjoining defendants from picketing falsely and untruthfully. See J. H. & S. Theatres v. Fay, supra; Olympia Operating Co. v. Costello, supra; 1 Teller, op. cit. supra, p. 388, et seq.

[4-6] There is no anti-injunction statute which places a restraint upon the power of courts of equity in this state where labor disputes are involved. Defendants suggest, however, that the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech constitutes a bar to the intervention of equity where untruthful picketing is involved. There is no suggestion in our cases that the provisions of the California Constitution should be so interpreted, but defendants cite certain recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court. These cases, it is true, have held that where individual states set up standards which define picketing as lawful or unlawful and where such standards are sought to be enforced by the power of equity, the state policy is subordinate to the constitutional guarantee of free speech. American Federation of Labor v. Swing, supra; Bakery and Pastry Drivers and Helpers, etc., v. Wohl, supra; see (1941) 90 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 201, 202; (1941) 29 Cal.L.Rev. 366, et seq. Thus, where the state of Illinois sought to enjoin picketing as unlawful because there was no controversy between the employer and his employees, the state policy was overruled because it was held to constitute an unwarranted infringement of the guarantee of free speech. Swing v. American Federation of Labor, 372 Ill. 91, 22 N.E.2d 857, reversed in American Federation of Labor v. Swing, supra; cf. Miller's, Inc., v. Journeymen Tailors Union Local No. 195, N.J. Ch., 15 A.2d 822, reversed in Journeymen Tailors Union Local No. 195 v. Miller's, Inc., 312 U.S. 658, 61 S.Ct. 732, 85 L.Ed. 1106. Similarly where the state of New York sought to enjoin picketing as unlawful in the absence of any labor dispute the state policy was reversed. Wohl v. Bakery & Pastry Drivers & Helpers, etc., 259 App.Div. 868, 19 N.Y.S.2d 811, affirmed 284 N.Y. 788, 31 N.E.2d 765, reversed in Bakery and Pastry Drivers and Helpers, etc., v. Wohl, supra. In the Wohl case, supra, the court made it perfectly clear that the picketing involved was truthful in nature and in the Swing case, supra, where it was charged in the trial court that the placards were false, the Supreme Court specifically indicated that it was forced to reverse the judgment of the highest state court because that court apparently rested the injunction solely upon the absence of a dispute between the employer and his employees. We find no suggestion in these cases, therefore, that a state policy characterizing untruthful picketing as unlawful and enjoinable is in violation of the constitutional provision. Cf. (1940) 39 Mich. L.Rev. 110, 118; (1941) 90 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 201, 211-212. The right to restrain the use of false or untruthful statements made in connection with picketing does not restrict the right to picket peacefully and honestly. It is a familiar doctrine of equity that the scope of the injunction will be limited to the wrongful act sought to be prevented. The effect of the decree is to protect every legitimate right of the defendants and at the same time prevent unlawful interference with the rights of plaintiffs. The policy of this state which characterizes the use of false or fraudulent statements in picketing as unlawful is within the permissible limits which a state may impose upon industrial combatants without impairing the right of free speech. See Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 104, 105, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093. Under the facts set forth in this case, therefore, plaintiffs are entitled to a decree restraining defendants from the use of false or untruthful statements in the exercise of their right to picket.

SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. I do not agree with the proposition that picketing in connection with a labor controversy may be enjoined if any false or untruthful statements are made or displayed on a banner used in connection with such picketing. There is no sound basis for a distinction between the publication by a newspaper of false and untrue statements, and the dissemination of such statements orally or by banners in the process of picketing. If an injunction will not lie in one case it should not in the other. If picketing may be enjoined because false statements are made, then the publication of a newspaper should be for similar reasons enjoined.

It is conceded in the majority opinion that equity will not grant injunctive relief against the publication of libel or slander. The attempted distinction between such a case and false statements in picketing cases begs the question and pursues a course of specious reasoning. It is said in the majority opinion: "Defendants' position in this regard cannot be sustained if defendants had remained at home and had uttered false statements concerning plaintiff, the rule cited [that libel may not be enjoined] might have been relied upon. Not so in the present case, however, for assuming that the rule [no injunction in libel and slander cases] is correct, here is not the utterance of false statements which is sought to be enjoined, but the conduct of picketing in an unlawful manner." It then proceeds to announce that the use of false statements in picketing makes the picketing unlawful, and that unlawful picketing may be enjoined. That argument is tantamount to asserting that the unlawful act of the publication of false statements, standing alone, will not be restrained, but when that act is combined with the performance of admittedly lawful acts, namely, picketing, the latter will be restrained. In other words, the more inexcusable the acts of the wrongdoer, the less the punishment or restraint. If all of his conduct is unlawful, he goes blithely on his way immune from interference by equity, but if he combines proper and improper conduct he is amenable to the equitable processes and his lawful conduct may be restrained as well as his unlawful conduct. Furthermore, returning again to the analogy of the publication of libel by a newspaper, it might be reasoned that, under the rule stated it is not the printing of the libelous matter that may be enjoined, but the publication of a newspaper containing such matter is an unlawful business and may be enjoined. An attempt was made by the Minnesota Legislature upon that precise reasoning by the enactment of a statute authorizing the restraint of one engaging in the business of publishing a malicious, scandalous and defamatory newspaper. And although it was conceded that the newspaper was within the terms of the statute, the Supreme Court of the United States struck the statute down in no uncertain terms in Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 628, 75 L.Ed. 1357. The court would not brook any such preventive measures against the freedom of the press. Freedom of speech is no less sacred than freedom of the press and there is no reason why a newspaper should have special privileges that are not accorded to labor organizations or any other persons. An injunction is as much a preventive measure as a statute. The reasoning in the Near case is particularly applicable to the case at bar. The court there said: " 'The statute,' said the state court, 'is not directed at threatened libel but at an existing business which, generally speaking, involves more than libel'." (Emphasis added.) Then again at page 713 of 283 U.S., at page 630 of 51 S.Ct., 75 L.Ed. 1357:

"If we cut through mere details of procedure, the operation and effect of the statute in substance is that public authorities may bring the owner or publisher of a newspaper or periodical before a judge upon a charge of conducting a business of publishing scandalous and defamatory matter—in particular that the matter consists of charges against public officers of official dereliction—and, unless the owner or publisher is able and disposed to bring competent evidence to satisfy the judge that the charges are true and are published with good motives and for justifiable ends, his newspaper or periodical is suppressed and further publication is made punishable as a contempt. This is of the essence of censorship. [Emphasis added.]

"The question is whether a statute authorizing such proceedings in restraint of publication is consistent with the conception of the liberty of the press as historically conceived and guaranteed. In determining the extent of the constitutional protection, it has been generally, if not universally, considered that it is the chief purpose of the guaranty to prevent previous restraints upon publication. The struggle in England, directed against the legislative power of the licenser, resulted in renunciation of the censorship of the press. The liberty deemed to be established was thus described by Blackstone: 'The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity.' 4 Bl.Com. 151, 152; see Story on the Constitution, §§ 1884, 1889. The distinction was early pointed out between the extent of the freedom with respect to censorship under our constitutional system and that enjoyed in England. Here, as Madison said, 'the great and essential rights of the people are secured against legislative as well as against executive ambition. They are secured, not by laws paramount to prerogative, but by constitutions paramount to laws. This security of the freedom of the press requires that it should be exempt not only from previous restraint by the executive, as in Great Britain, but from legislative restraint also.' Report on the Virginia Resolutions, Madison's Works, vol. IV, p. 543. This Court said, in Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U.S. 454, 462, 27 S.Ct. 556, 558, 51 L.Ed. 879, 10 Ann.Cas. 689: 'In the first place, the main purpose of such constitutional provisions is "to prevent all such previous restraints upon publications as had been practiced by other governments," and they do not prevent the subsequent punishment of such as may be deemed contrary to the public welfare. Commonwealth v. Blanding, 3 Pick.(Mass.) 304, 313, 314 (15 Am.Dec. 214); Respublica v. Oswald, 1 Dall. 319, 325, 1 L.Ed. 155, 158 [1 Am.Dec. 246]. The preliminary freedom extends as well to the false as to the true; the subsequent punishment may extend as well to the true as to the false. This was the law of criminal libel apart from statute in most cases, if not in all. Commonwealth v. Blanding, ubi supra; 4 Bl.Com. 150.'

"The criticism upon Blackstone's statement has not been because immunity from previous restraint upon publication has not been regarded as deserving of special emphasis, but chiefly because that immunity cannot be deemed to exhaust the conception of the liberty guaranteed by State and Federal Constitutions. The point of criticism has been 'that the mere exemption from previous restraints cannot be all that is secured by the constitutional provisions,' and that 'the liberty of the press might be rendered a mockery and a delusion, and the phrase itself a by-word, if, while every man was at liberty to publish what he pleased, the public authorities might nevertheless punish him for harmless publications.' 2 Cooley, Const.Lim. (8th Ed.) p. 885. But it is recognized that punishment for the abuse of the liberty accorded to the press is essential to the protection of the public, and that the common-law rules that subject the libeler to responsibility for the public offense, as well as for the private injury, are not abolished by the protection extended in our Constitutions. Id. pp. 883, 884. The law of criminal libel rests upon that secure foundation. There is also the conceded authority of courts to punish for contempt when publications directly tend to prevent the proper discharge of judicial functions. Patterson v. Colorado, supra; Toledo Newspaper Co. v. United States, 247 U.S. 402, 419, 38 S.Ct. 560, 62 L.Ed. 1186. In the present case, we have no occasion to inquire as to the permissible scope of subsequent punishment. For whatever wrong the appellant has committed or may commit, by his publications, the state appropriately affords both public and private redress by its libel laws. As has been noted, the statute in question does not deal with punishments; it provides for no punishment, except in case of contempt for violation of the court's order, but for suppression and injunction,—that is, for restraint upon publication.

"The objection has also been made that the principle as to immunity from previous restraint is stated too broadly, if every such restraint is deemed to be prohibited. That is undoubtedly true; the protection even as to previous restraint is not absolutely unlimited. But the limitation has been recognized only in exceptional cases. 'When a nation is at war many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterance will not be endured so long as men fight and that no Court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right.' Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470. No one would question but that a government might prevent actual obstruction to its recruiting service or the publication of the sailing dates of transports or the number and location of troops. On similar grounds, the primary requirements of decency may be enforced against obscene publications. The security of the community life may be protected against incitements to acts of violence and the overthrow by force of orderly government. The constitutional guaranty of free speech does not 'protect a man from an injunction against uttering words that may have all the effect of force. * * *'" (Emphasis added.)

"In attempted justification of the statute, it is said that it deals not with publication per se, but with the 'business' of publishing defamation. If, however, the publisher has a constitutional right to publish, without previous restraint, an edition of his newspaper charging official derelictions, it cannot be denied that he may publish subsequent editions for the same purpose. He does not lose his right by exercising it. If his right exists, it may be exercised in publishing nine editions, as in this case, as well as in one edition. If previous restraint is permissible, it may be imposed at once; indeed, the wrong may be as serious in one publication as in several. Characterizing the publication as a business, and the business as a nuisance, does not permit an invasion of the constitutional immunity against restraint. Similarly, it does not matter that the newspaper or periodical is found to be 'largely' or 'chiefly' devoted to the publication of such derelictions. If the publisher has a right, without previous restraint, to publish them, his right cannot be deemed to be dependent upon his publishing something else, more or less, with the matter to which objection is made.

"Nor can it be said that the constitutional freedom from previous restraint is lost because charges are made of derelictions which constitute crimes. With the multiplying provisions of penal codes, and of municipal charters and ordinances carrying penal sanctions, the conduct of public officers is very largely within the purview of criminal statutes. The freedom of the press from previous restraint has never been regarded as limited to such animadversions as lay outside the range of penal enactments. Historically, there is no such limitation; it is inconsistent with the reason which underlies the privilege, as the privilege so limited would be of slight value for the purposes for which it came to be established." (Emphasis added.) In the case at bar the answer to the reasoning that the making of the false statements is not restrained but rather the picketing by false statements and also the reasoning that picketing when accompanied by false bannering is unlawful picketing and unlawful picketing may be enjoined, it may be said paraphrasing the language of the Supreme Court: "Characterizing the publication [the bannering of false statements] as a business [as the combination of the false bannering and picketing], and the business as a nuisance [the picketing as being enjoinable because unlawful], does not permit an invasion of the constitutional immunity against restraint."

No basis is given for the conclusion that the use of banners containing false statements makes picketing unlawful. It is merely a bald assertion of a policy which is antagonistic to picketing generally and which finds an easy method of preventing all picketing along with its correlative rights of freedom of speech, press and assembly when these rights are asserted in connection with labor disputes. If the same antagonism existed against newspapers, the same result would be reached and freedom of the press would be lost. Can it be said that under the Near case the United States Supreme Court would countenance a restraint on the distribution or sale of a libelous newspaper or its display for sale by vendors parading before a place of business? Certainly not. Any one injured may have recourse in an action at law for damages, and the public has its penal statutes against libel. It has never been contemplated that the equity courts should act as censor bureaus with all the multitude of difficult questions arising therefrom. There is no suggestion that the unlawful utterance of false statements in picketing tends to incite breach of the peace, violence, riots and the like. And there is no reason to suppose that such tendency would be any more apt to be present in the case of picketing than in the publication and distribution of a newspaper. In either case adequate civil and criminal penalties exist. If it were proper to restrain picketing where false bannering is used, a necessary requisite would be the occurrence of acts of violence in addition to the false bannering. Under no circumstances could false bannering alone make the picketing unlawful and subject to restraint without infringing upon the right of freedom of speech. As was said by the New York Court of Appeals in Nann v. Raimist, 255 N.Y. 307, 174 N.E. 690, 694, 73 A.L.R. 669: "Equity does not intervene to restrain the publication of words on a mere showing of their falsity. Marlin Firearms Co. v. Shields, 171 N.Y. 384, 64 N.E. 163, 59 L.R.A. 310. It intervenes in those cases where restraint becomes essential to the preservation of a business or of other property interests threatened with impairment by illegal combinations or by other tortious acts, the publication of the words being merely an instrument and incident. Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, supra [118 Mich. 497, 77 N.W. 13, 42 L.R.A. 407, 74 Am.St.Rep. 421]; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 431, 31 S.Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L.R.A.,N.S., 874; Steinert & Sons Co. v. Tagen, 207 Mass. 394, 397, 93 N.E. 584, 32 L.R.A.,N.S., 1013; Hotel & Railroad News Co. v. Clark, 243 Mass, 317, 323, 137 N.E. 534; Allen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 224 App.Div. 187, 191, 229 N.Y. S. 692; Pound, Equitable Relief against Defamation, 29 Harv.L.R. 640, 666; Chafee, Cases on Equitable Relief against Defamation (2d Ed.) 1930, collating the authorities." (Emphasis added.)

It is conceded in the majority opinion that peaceful picketing is a lawful and not a tortious act. In the case at bar there was no tortious conduct of any kind, the picketing being peaceful and orderly. Therefore, there was no business or property "threatened with impairment by illegal combinations or other tortious acts."

The reasons for which equity has refused to enjoin libel and slander are stated in 1 Teller, Labor Disputes & Collective Bargaining, p. 402: "Two reasons have been advanced for equity's refusal to extend injunctive relief to defamation cases. The first proceeds upon the ground that libel and slander affect a personal and not a property right, and are consequently beyond the scope of equity's jurisdiction as historically understood. The second objection is found in the principle of constitutional law guaranteeing the right to free speech. 'Principles of free govern- ment,' says Dean Pound, 'require that preventive justice be in abeyance where the wrongs complained of involve printing, publishing or writing . . . Equity has no jurisdiction as a censor of publications.' The matter has been well expressed in Marx [& Haas] Jeans Clothing [Co.] v. Watson [Infra, 168 Mo. 133, 67 S.W. 393, 56 L.R.A. 951, 90 Am.St.Rep. 440] 'The two ideas—the one of absolute freedom "to say, write or publish whatever he will on any subject," coupled with responsibility therefor, and the other idea of preventing such free speech, free writing, or free publication—cannot coexist'." (Emphasis added.)

The right to picket, (publicize a labor dispute) is now squarely based upon the right of freedom of speech. Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L. Ed. 1093. It necessarily follows therefore that the preventive measures such as injunctions, are not available where the false statements are made in the course of the picketing. All of the cases cited in the majority opinion authorizing injunctive relief were decided before the right to picket was squarely based on that constitutional guarantee or failed to consider the effect thereof. On the other hand respectable authority has held that an injunction against picketing is not proper even though false statements are made. See Truax v. Bisbee Local No. 380, Cooks' & Waiters' Union, 19 Ariz. 379, 171 P. 121; Marx & Haas Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 133, 67 S.W. 391, 56 L.R.A. 951, 90 Am.St.Rep. 440; Ex parte Tucker, 110 Tex. 335, 220 S.W. 75. This court recognized even at a time that all picketing could be enjoined, that the making of false statements while picketing could not be restrained. It is said in Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 434, 86 P. 806, 808, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 460, 117 Am.St.Rep. 145, 9 Ann.Cas. 1219: "Some parts of the judgment seem to enjoin appellants from the mere expression of an opinion at any time or place as to plaintiff and its business, which would, at the worst, consist only of slander, which could not be reached in this form of action and seem to restrain them from doing other things which do not appear to be connected with or incidental to the main acts and threatened acts done at and in front of plaintiff's said places of business as above stated." (Emphasis added.)

It is absurd to say that equity will intervene where false bannering is used in picketing because property damage, as distinguished from personal damage, is suffered. The days have long since passed when the rights of property are more sacred than personal rights. The injury suffered by a person subjected to libel or slander is in most instances far more serious and less susceptible of being repaired by monetary damages than an injury to property. If freedom of speech compels that injunction be not issued in libel and slander cases when the injury suffered is personal, then for even more forceful reasons it should not be enjoined when merely a property right is invaded.

It is stated in the majority opinion that the trial court "found that the allegations of damage in the sum of $25,000 were untrue." If that is the case, then plaintiff has suffered no injury. If it has suffered no injury that alone is a sufficient basis for affirmance of the judgment denying the injunction. Certainly picketing by false statements may not be restrained where there is no showing that injury has resulted from it. Suppose the picket carried a placard upon which was inscribed "My name is John Doe" when in fact his name was Henry Jones. Although such statement would be false, it surely would not be grounds for an injunction restraining such conduct.

The record in the case at bar shows that in paragraph XV of the complaint it was alleged: "That by reason of all the acts and conduct of the defendants, as hereinabove set forth, committed by them in pursuance of said illegal combination, plan, scheme and conspiracy, and as the direct and proximate result thereof, plaintiff has suffered, and will continue to suffer, great and irreparable injury, and damage to its business and to the good will thereof, and the right to carry on its said business and to the business and contractual relationships existing between plaintiff and its customers and between plaintiff and its employees. That by reason of the above mentioned conduct of the defendants, the property right of plaintiff to carry on its business unmolested and the good will of plaintiff's business has been so greatly injured that plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of Twenty-five Thousand ($25,000.00) Dollars." (Emphasis added.) The court found all of those allegations untrue in the following language: "That paragraph XV of said complaint is untrue in the absence of evidence thereunder." It is beyond question therefore that plaintiff did not suffer injury.

If no injury was or will be suffered from the false bannering then there can be no occasion for an injunction. It is stated in Baker v. Retail Clerks' I. Protective Ass'n, etc., 313 Ill.App. 432, 40 N.E.2d 571, 574, involving an injunction in a picketing case: "An injunction will not lie merely to prevent the commission of a tort or crime without a showing of probable irreparable injury from a continuation of the wrongful act or acts sought to be enjoined." A person may not be awarded relief without injury. The judgment of the court for defendants should be affirmed on that ground alone, even if it be assumed that as a general proposition false statements employed in picketing make it unlawful.

No sound reason is given for adopting for the first time as the rule in this state, that the right of the publisher of a newspaper to freedom of the press is more sacred than that of a labor organization to publicize its views concerning a labor dispute. But that is the effect of the majority decision.

The only possible basis for holding that picketing by untruthful bannering is unlawful, is the doctrine of fraud and deceit or libel and slander. It cannot be predicated on the former because the persons relying upon the false representations rather than the person picketed would have to be the ones to complain. If it is based on the latter, then actual damage must be proved before such statements are unlawful unless they were libelous per se.

Turning again to the authorities relied upon by the majority opinion for the proposition that untruthful picketing is unlawful picketing and may be restrained, I find that none of them gave consideration to the basic right upon which picketing rests or gave any sound reason why it was unlawful; or the statements therein are merely dictum. The statement in the cases of McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373; and Steiner v. Long Beach Local No. 128, 19 Cal.2d 676, 123 P.2d 20, that pickets must act honestly is dictum, and no consideration is given therein to the effect of such statement on the right of freedom of speech in relation thereto. The same is true of Euclid Candy Co. v. International Longshoreman, 49 Cal.App.2d 137, 121 P.2d 91; Davitt v. American Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 56 P. 775. The same bald statement alone is made in Weist v. Dirks, 215 Ind. 568, 20 N.E.2d 969; Wilner v. Bless, 243 N.Y. 544, 154 N.E. 598; Olympia Operating Co. v. Costello, 278 Mass. 125, 179 N.E. 804; and no discussion appears with reference to freedom of speech in any of these cases.

Because of my strong conviction that the preservation of the fundamental civil liberties of free speech, free press and free assembly is essential to the perpetuation of our democratic institutions, I view with alarm every encroachment against the exercise of these rights, whether such encroachment is directed against organized labor or other minority groups. If these rights can be abridged under the guise that what is said or published is false, it will just be a matter of time until freedom of expression will be curtailed in accordance with the will of the dominant group, who by providing the standard as to what constitutes truth or falsity can control publications of any character whether they be by word of mouth, placard, banner or what we now designate as a newspaper.

Furthermore, I am positively and unalterably against any form of discrimination in permitting the exercise of the fundamental personal rights guaranteed by our federal and state Constitutions. These rights are not only guaranteed to those who have sufficient power and influence to enforce their recognition, but like the air and the sunshine their beneficient attributes should be shared and enjoyed by the weak and humble and those who are struggling for their very existence.

I can see no reason whatever why publication of a false statement by a labor organization concerning the facts of a labor dispute should be subject to abatement by an injunction while a newspaper is privileged to publish false statements and be subject only to the redress afforded to those who claim that they have been libeled by such publication, namely, an action at law for damages.

In my opinion, the judgment in the case at bar should be affirmed.

JORGENSEN et al. v. DAHLSTROM et al.

Civ. 6688.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 8, 1942.

1. Gifts 🔑49(2)

In administrators' suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account held by decedent and her daughter and to irrigation and improvement district warrants which decedent had given to daughter, evidence warranted judgment for daughter on ground that decedent was of sound mind and free from undue influence or fraud when account was created and warrants were given to daughter. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 652, § 15a.

2. Pleading 🔑36(3)
Trial 🔑396(7)

An unqualified admission in an answer of a clear and unambiguous allegation of a complaint is conclusive of the facts conceded and a contrary finding should be disregarded.

3. Pleading 🔑127(2)

In suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account held by decedent and her daughter, an allegation in answer admitting that prior to her death decedent was owner of account was not an "admission" that decedent was sole owner of account at time of death in view of other allegations of answer.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Admission".

4. Pleading 🔑34(1)

Language of an answer should be construed as a whole to determine intention of pleader.

5. Pleading 🔑259

In suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account, permitting defendants to amend answer by adding the word "tenancy" to statement that a "joint account" was created by written agreement of parties was proper, where addition of "tenancy" merely clarified intended statement of pleader and was proper. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

6. Pleading 🔑229, 230

Reasonable amendments to pleadings should, in the interest of justice, be granted, and the statute concerning amendments to pleadings should be liberally construed to accomplish that purpose. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

7. Evidence 🔑397(3)
Joint Tenancy 🔑6

In absence of fraud, unsound mind, or undue influence, the deposit or transfer of a fund in a bank as a joint tenancy account, payable to either or survivor of parties to agreement, vests title thereto immediately in each of them, and after the death of one of such depositors the fund becomes the absolute property of survivor, and under such circumstances, when written agreement creating joint tenancy account is clear, oral evidence in conflict therewith is incompetent. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 652, § 15a.

8. Joint tenancy 🔑14

In absence of fraud, unsound mind, or undue influence, the deposit of a fund in a bank as a joint tenancy account, payable to either or survivor of parties to agreement, becomes conclusive evidence, in an action in which the bank or survivor is a party, of intention of the owner to vest title in survivor. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 652, § 15a.

9. Gifts 🔑38

A conveyance from a parent to child is not void merely because of the confidential relationship which exists between them, and the relationship of parent and child, in and of itself, does not create an inference of imposition, undue influence, or fraud.

10. Gifts 🔑47(3)

Mere proof that a parent and child relationship exists between parties to a conveyance will not shift burden upon grantee to affirmatively prove that conveyance was voluntarily executed and was free from fraud or undue influence.

11. Gifts 🔑49(2)

Proof of a confidential relationship between parties to a conveyance coupled with activity by grantee in procuring execution of conveyance constitutes merely a "prima facie showing" of undue influence, which requires adequate evidence to rebut the presumption.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Showing".

12. Appeal and error 🔑1056(1)

In administrators' suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account held by decedent and her daughter, sustaining daughter's objection to a question addressed to daughter on cross-examination inquiring whether daughter knew that her brother still acknowledged his debt to estate notwithstanding that decedent told him that she intended to cancel his indebtedness to her was not prejudicial, as against contention that evidence of acknowledgment would have been competent to show unreasonableness of assumption that decedent intended to give savings fund to daughter.

A broad scope of examination of witnesses is allowed with respect to the question of mental competency of a donor.

14. Joint tenancy 🔑14

In administrators' suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account held by decedent and her daughter where case was tried on theory that decedent was of unsound mind and that account was created by decedent as result of undue influence exercised by daughter, testimony of decedent's business adviser that decedent had followed his advice in creating account was competent to show that account was voluntarily created by decedent, upon independent advice.

15. Gifts 🔑48

When mental condition of a donor or a testator is involved in a conveyance or a will, declarations of a decedent with relation thereto are competent, whether they are made before or after the transaction is completed, provided they are not too remote.

16. Evidence 🔑474(4)

Assistant manager of bank where decedent kept her accounts was competent to testify that bank considered decedent as one of very alert mind where witness testified that he knew decedent and had seen her once or twice a month for five years before decedent's death and that decedent was accustomed to talking with witness concerning decedent's business affairs. 18. Appeal and error 🔑533(1), 717

Ordinarily, an opinion of a trial court is no part of the "record" on appeal and may not be considered by a reviewing court, but where a written document which is referred to in the minute order and filed by the trial court specifically determines a motion to strike out evidence, the document becomes a part of the court's order and may be considered in determining what the court decided.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Record".

19. Appeal and error 🔑926(5)

Where that portion of trial court's ruling admitting evidence for certain purposes was not before district court of appeal, the latter court was bound to assume, in support of judgment, that the ruling specifically limited application of evidence to purposes for which it was competent.

20. Evidence 🔑474(4)

Evidence that decedent's business adviser had known decedent for 12 years and that decedent was accustomed to consult with adviser frequently regarding decedent's family affairs and property interests warranted conclusion that adviser was an "intimate acquaintance" of decedent within contemplation of statute and that adviser was qualified to give an opinion regarding decedent's mental condition. 22. Evidence 🔑474(4)

Where case was tried on theory that decedent was of unsound mind, testimony of decedent's business adviser that decedent was a shrewd investor and that her mental condition was good was competent, where adviser was an intimate acquaintance of decedent. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 10.

Where case was tried on theory that account was created by decedent as result of undue influence exercised by daughter, evidence consisting of statements of decedent's bank accounts and notes executed to decedent by one of the administrators, who was decedent's son, and his deceased brother for loans previously secured by them from decedent was competent on issue of undue influence.

In administrators' suit to quiet title to a joint tenancy savings bank account held by decedent and her daughter, testimony of assistant manager of bank where decedent had kept her accounts respecting the accounts and genuineness of decedent's signature on joint tenancy agreement and other documents was competent, where such testimony did not vary terms of written instruments, but was merely explanatory thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; B. C. Hawkins, Judge.

Suit by A. C. Jorgensen and another, as administrators of the estate of Maren K. Jorgensen, deceased, against Alma C. Dahlstrom and others, to quiet title to a bank account and to irrigation and improvement district warrants. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Harold L. Hjelm and Donald B. Fowler, both of Turlock, and C. Ray Robinson and Willard Treadwell, both of Merced, for appellants.

Frank C. Damrell and Thomas C. Boone, both of Modesto, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The plaintiffs, as administrators of the estate of their mother, Maren K. Jorgensen, deceased, have appealed from a judgment quieting title in their married sister Alma C. Dahlstrom, to a $10,000 joint tenancy bank account and to irrigation and improvement district warrants of the face value of $6,411.20, which were given to her by her mother, but which were alleged to belong to the estate. The complaint fails to allege that the deceased was of unsound mind or that the property was procured by means of undue influence exercised by the daughter, but the cause was tried on the theory that those issues were involved. The court adopted findings favorable to the defendants in every respect. Judgment was rendered accordingly. A motion for new trial was denied. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

The appellants contend that the findings do not uphold the judgment; that the judgment is not supported by the evidence, chiefly because the defendant, Mrs. Dahlstrom, failed to sustain the burden imposed upon her on account of the confidential relationship existing between herself and her mother, to prove that the property was not procured by means of undue influence. It is also asserted the court erred in granting defendants' motion to amend their answer, and also erred in receiving and rejecting evidence at the trial, and in denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial.

Maren K. Jorgensen was a widow sixty-eight years of age. Her husband had been dead several years. The plaintiffs are her sons. Alma C. Dahlstrom is her daughter. The children are married and live in their separate homes in or near Turlock. Until a short time before her death Mrs. Jorgensen lived by herself in her own home in that city. She was possessed of real and personal property of considerable value. Her home was worth $3,850. She owned the irrigation and improvement district bonds previously mentioned, which were of uncertain value. She had a savings account in the Bank of America in the sum of $10,000, together with an open bank account, household goods, several promissory notes and other collateral securities. She was apparently on the best of terms with all of her children. She was liberal in aiding them financially in times of need. Over a period of several years she had loaned her son Ansell $3,700, for which she held his unpaid notes, one of which was secured by a chattel mortgage.

Mrs. Jorgensen was an intelligent, active woman who was mentally and physically capable of looking after her own business affairs. After the death of her husband, she was accustomed to consult with Mr. A. C. McPheeters, a prominent local broker, and with the officers of her bank regarding important business transactions. A year and a half before her death she told Mr. McPheeters she intended to convert her $10,000 savings account into a joint tenancy account to the credit of herself and her daughter Alma. July 6, 1937, on the occasion of the birthday of her daughter, she voluntarily gave to her the irrigation ditch and improvement district warrants, saying, "Here, Alma * * * here is a happy birthday to you." Mrs. Jorgensen then said, "There is some there in the package that are defaulted, * * * Whatever you get out of them" is your property. Mrs. Jorgensen held the note of her son, Ansell, for the aggregate sum of $3,700. Sometime prior to her death she gave these notes to him, saying, "Here, Ansell here is all your papers * * * you go out in the kitchen and burn them." He accepted the notes and complied with her request by burning them. She then said to him, "I treat my children the way they treat me." There appears to have been no plan, activity or previous knowledge on the part of any of the children of her intention to give them the property.

Mrs. Jorgensen developed a serious ailment a few months prior to her death. The daughter, Alma, drove her to Modesto daily for six weeks prior to her death, so that she might secure medical treatment. On January 3, 1938, after having advised with Mr. McPheeters and with an officer in her bank, regarding the transfer of funds, Mrs. Jorgensen obtained from the bank a printed form of agreement for the purpose of creating a joint tenancy account of her $10,000 savings fund, with her daughter Alma. The daughter was not present in the bank when she discussed that transaction and procured the form for the agreement; nor had the mother previously discussed that matter with her daughter. That document contains the following significant language:

"(2) That all funds now to the credit of or which may hereafter be placed to the credit of this account are and shall be the property of the undersigned JOINT TENANTS to be withdrawn as follows:

"Upon the signature(s) of either of us, or our survivor(s).

"(3) That in the event of the death of either of us, the survivor(s) will notify the bank at once."

[1] This agreement was taken home and signed by Mrs. Jorgensen. She then handed it to her daughter and told her she intended to create a joint tenancy in that fund, in favor of both of them, and asked the daughter to sign the document and return it to the bank. She said, "Alma * * * I am turning the Bank of America account over to you. * * * There is enough there for both you and Dolores, and I do hope that you see that Dolores goes on with her music." Dolores is the daughter of Alma C. Dahlstrom. The joint tenancy card was not at once signed by Mrs. Dahlstrom. Two or three days later her mother asked her if she had attended to that matter. When she replied that she had not, Mrs. Jorgensen asked her if she did not want that money. The daughter replied, "Why, yes, mother." Mrs. Jorgensen then told her she had better attend to signing and returning the card to the bank at once. Thereupon Mrs. Dahlstrom signed the card and returned it to the bank on January 7, 1938. There is an abundance of evidence indicating that this joint tenancy account was created by Mrs. Jorgensen voluntarily, after consulting with her business advisers, and without any activity or inducement therefor on the part of her daughter. The evidence satisfactorily shows that the mother was of sound mind and free from undue influence.

January 5, 1938, Doctor Eric Julien, of Turlock, diagnosed Mrs. Jorgensen's ailment as arteriosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, causing chronic heart disease. The doctor visited her daily from that time until her death which occurred on January 27, 1938. He testified that she was clear headed, mentally sound, and capable of transacting business affairs to the date of her death.

Upon application therefor, her two living sons, Charles H. and A. C. Jorgensen, were duly appointed administrators of the estate of Mrs. Jorgensen, deceased. This suit to quiet title to the $10,000 bank account and to the irrigation ditch and improvement district warrants was instituted. The complaint fails to charge the defendant, Alma C. Dahlstrom, with securing possession of the property in question by means of fraud or undue influence. The pleading does not intimate that the deceased was of unsound mind. The answer denies that the estate has any right, title or interest in the property, and upon the contrary alleged that the warrants were voluntarily given to Alma C. Dahlstrom by her mother, and that Mrs. Jorgensen created in herself and her daughter, Alma, a "joint account" in said bank fund, by a written agreement signed by both parties and delivered to the Bank of America on January 7, 1938, which fund, upon the death of Mrs. Jorgensen, which occurred January 27, 1938, became the absolute property of the defendant, Mrs. Dahlstrom.

Upon notice and motion of the defendants, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court duly authorized an amendment of the answer alleging that the bank account was, by the written agreement of the deceased and her daughter, Alma, converted into their "joint tenancy account" on said 7th day of January, 1938, and that sole title thereto passed to the daughter upon the death of her mother.

The court adopted findings favorable to the defendant Alma C. Dahlstrom, in every respect. It was determined that the property in question was formerly owned by the deceased, Maren K. Jorgensen; that she gave to her daughter, Alma, the irrigation ditch and improvement district warrants described in the complaint, as a gift, on July 6, 1937; that the daughter thereupon became and now is the owner thereof, and that the estate has no right, title or interest in said warrants; that on January 7, 1938, the deceased voluntarily transferred her $10,000 bank account into a joint tenancy account for herself and her daughter, by their written agreement signed, dated and filed with the Bank of America at Turlock on said last-mentioned date, and that, upon the death of the mother that fund became the absolute property of the surviving daughter; that Maren K. Jorgensen was free from the exercise of fraud, deception, coercion or undue influence on the part of her daughter, Alma, which affected the conveyance of said property, and, on the contrary, that the mother relied on independent advice in doing so; that the defendant Alma C. Dahlstrom is the sole owner of said fund of $10,000, and that the estate of said deceased has no right, title or interest therein. Judgment was thereupon rendered quieting title to the property in question in the defendant, Alma C. Dahlstrom. A motion for new trial was denied. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

[2-4] We are of the opinion the judgment is supported by the findings. It is contended that language in the fifth paragraph of the answer constitutes an admission on the part of the defendants that until the time of her death Maren K. Jorgensen was sole owner of the bank account, which is inconsistent with the finding that she created a joint tenancy account therein in favor of her daughter; that the admission of the pleading is conclusive of that fact, and that the judgment is therefore not supported by the findings in that regard. No authority is cited upon that point. We realize that an unqualified admission in an answer, of a clear and unambiguous allegation of a complaint is deemed to be conclusive of the fact conceded and that a contrary finding should be disregarded. White v. Douglass, 71 Cal. 115, 119, 11 P. 860; In re Doyle's Estate, 73 Cal. 564, 571, 15 P. 125; Stoneman v. Fritz, 34 Cal.App.2d 26, 92 P.2d 1035; 2 Cal.Jur. 818, § 481. In the present case, however, the answer specifically denies every allegation of the complaint to the effect that the estate was the owner or entitled to possession of the bank fund in question. The answer does admit that "prior to the death Maren K. Jorgensen was the owner and entitled to the possession of the sum of $10,000." But, following immediately after that statement in the same paragraph, the answer, as amended, specifically alleges that, "On or about the 7th day of January, 1938, the said money was transferred into a joint tenancy account standing in the names of Maren K. Jorgensen and defendant Alma C. Dahlstrom." The answer elsewhere also specifically alleges the creation of the joint tenancy account and asserts that the sole title thereto vested in the daughter at the time of the death of her mother, and that the estate has no right, title or interest therein. The clear language of the answer, even before it was amended, refutes the appellants' claim that the defendants admitted that the deceased was the sole owner of the bank fund at the time of her death. The answer may be reasonably construed to mean that the defendants conceded that sometime prior to her death the mother was the exclusive owner of that bank account, but that, upon her death it vested absolutely in her daughter, Alma. The language of the answer should be construed as a whole to determine the intention of the pleader. No demurrer to the answer was filed on the ground of uncertainty or otherwise. The judgment is fully supported by the findings in that regard.

[5, 6] The court properly granted defendants' motion to amend the answer, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by adding the word "tenancy" to the statement that a "joint account" was created by the written agreement of the parties. That allegation now reads that the said money was transferred into "a joint tenancy account." The addition of that word did not change the substance of the allegations of that paragraph construed in its entirety. It merely clarified the intended statement of the pleader. It has been uniformly held that reasonable amendments to pleadings should, in the interest of justice, be granted, and that section 473, supra, should be liberally construed to accomplish that purpose. County of Los Angeles v. Lewis, 179 Cal. 398, 177 P. 154; Weck v. Sucher, 96 Cal.App. 422, 274 P. 579; 21 Cal.Jur. 183, § 127.

[7, 8] In the absence of fraud, unsound mind or undue influence, the deposit or transfer of a fund in a bank as a joint tenancy account, payable to either or the survivor of the parties to the agreement, vests the title thereto immediately in each of them and after the death of one of such depositors the fund becomes the absolute property of the survivor. California Bank Act St.1909, p. 87, § 15a, as amended, Stats.1921, p. 1367, 1 Deering's Gen. Laws of 1937, p. 221, Act 652. Under such circumstances, when the written agreement creating the joint tenancy account is clear and unambiguous, oral evidence in conflict therewith is incompetent. In re Kellogg, 41 Cal.App.2d 833, 843, 107 P.2d 964. Moreover, under such circumstances, the deposit becomes conclusive evidence, in an action in which the bank or the survivor is a party, of the intention of the owner to vest the title in the survivor. In the last paragraph of section 15a of the Bank Act, it is said: "The making of the deposit in such form shall, in the absence of fraud or undue influence, be conclusive evidence, in any action or proceeding to which either such bank or the surviving depositor or depositors may be a party, of the intention of such depositors to vest title to such deposit and the additions thereto in such survivor or survivors." (Italics added.)

With respect to the admissibility of oral evidence tending to show an intention of the parties to a joint tenancy account, at variance with the written agreement, a different rule from the one previously announced prevails in an action between the joint tenants during the lifetime of both parties. Hill v. Badeljy, 107 Cal.App. 598, 604, 290 P. 637; Spear v. Farwell, 5 Cal.App.2d 111, 113, 42 P.2d 391; In re Kellogg, supra.

It follows that if the court in this case properly found that Mrs. Jorgensen was of sound mind and free from undue influence, her written agreement created a joint tenancy account which is conclusive evidence of her intention to vest the title thereto in her daughter, absolutely, at the time of the mother's death.

The findings and judgment are adequately supported by the evidence. Indeed, a critical examination of the record discloses the fact that there is no substantial evidence that Alma C. Dahlstrom attempted to exercise undue influence, or even resorted to any activity whatever to obtain from her mother the gift of warrants or the creation of the joint tenancy account in the bank. We are thoroughly convinced from the evidence that Mrs. Jorgensen was intelligent, sound-minded and capable of understanding and transacting her own business affairs at all times to the very date of her death, and that she voluntarily gave to her daughter the warrants in question and created the joint tenancy in the savings bank account of her own free will, without any solicitation or influence, undue or otherwise, exerted upon her by her daughter. It is not seriously contended that Mrs. Jorgensen was of unsound mind. The appellants seem to concede there is no evidence to upset the court's finding that the irrigation ditch and improvement district warrants were presented by the deceased to her daughter as a birthday gift, six months before her death.

With respect to the creation of the joint tenancy account the only serious contention of the appellants is that since a confidential relationship existed between the mother and the daughter, the burden therefore shifted to the defendant Alma C. Dahlstrom to overcome the presumption of law that she procured the creation of the joint tenancy account by means of undue influence, and that she failed to meet that burden.

[9] A conveyance of property from a parent to her child is not deemed to be void merely because of the confidential relationship which exists between them. Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 P. 910; 20 Cal.Jur. 442, §§ 40, 41. In the text last cited it is said: "It certainly is not true that the relationship of parent and child, in and of itself, is creative of any inference of imposition, undue influence or fraud."

In 2 Jones Comm. on Evidence, 2d edition, page 1055, section 552, it is said, regarding a gift of property from a parent to his child: "It cannot be deemed prima facie void; the presumption is in favor of its validity; and, in order to set it aside, the court must be satisfied that it was not the voluntary act of the donor."

[10, 11] Nor is it true that mere proof of the relationship of parent and child which exists between the parties to a conveyance of property, will shift the burden upon the grantee to affirmatively prove that it was voluntarily executed and free from fraud or undue influence. Estate of Hansen, 38 Cal.App.2d 99, 116, 100 P.2d 776 785. The proof of a confidential relationship coupled with activity in procuring the execution of a conveyance or a will is merely deemed to constitute a prima facie showing of undue influence, which requires adequate evidence to rebut the presumption. In the case last cited it is said in that regard: "When a presumption of undue influence is raised by showing the existence of a confidential relationship, coupled with activity * * * a prima facie showing of undue influence is thereby established which in the absence of evidence to the contrary, necessarily has the effect of invalidating the will. * * * To overcome that prima facie showing it becomes necessary for the proponent to rebut the presumption by evidence which, at least, will have the effect of balancing the prima facie showing." (Italics added.)

In the present case there is an abundance of evidence to overcome the bare showing that the relationship of mother and daughter existed between the parties to the joint tenancy bank account agreement which is involved on this appeal. The mother had independent advice regarding that transfer of property. She talked with her business adviser and friend, Mr. McPheeters, about that very transfer to her daughter, after her husband died, and about a year and a half before it was actually done. Mrs. Jorgensen was intelligent, clear-minded and evidently possessed unusual initiative and will-power for a woman of her age. There was no previous conversation between the mother and daughter regarding that transaction. The mother was alone when she visited the bank and talked with a bank employee about the transfer of the fund, and when she procured the form required for creating that joint tenancy account. She took the document home and signed it before she handed it to her daughter and told her to execute and return it to the bank. Apparently that is the first time she told her daughter about her purpose to make the transfer. The daughter exhibited no anxiety or haste in obtaining the agreement. She let the document lay around the house for several days. After two or three days had passed the mother asked her daughter if she had signed and returned the joint tenancy card to the bank. When the daughter replied that she had not done so, the mother urged her to sign and return the agreement at once. At the urgent request of Mrs. Jorgensen, that was done about twenty days before her death. Far from showing activity on the part of the daughter to procure the conveyance of the interest in the joint tenancy account, the evidence shows that Mrs. Jorgensen, after securing independent advice, voluntarily created that joint tenancy account, of her own free will, with full realization that it would have the effect of conveying the absolute title in that fund to her daughter upon her death. The findings of the court and the judgment to the effect that the joint tenancy account was voluntarily transferred to Mrs. Dahlstrom by her mother, entirely free from undue influence or fraud, are adequately supported by the evidence.

There is no substantial evidence that Mrs. Jorgensen was of unsound mind.

[12] It was not prejudicial error for the court to sustain defendants' objection to a question propounded by plaintiffs' attorney to Alma C. Dahlstrom, on cross-examination, inquiring whether she did not know that her brother Ansell still acknowledged his debt of $3,700 to the estate, in spite of the fact that his mother handed him his notes for that amount and told him, in effect, that she intended to cancel the debt and that she wanted him to burn the notes, which he did. It is contended this evidence of his acknowledgment of the debt would have been competent to show the unreasonableness of the assumption that Mrs. Jorgensen intended to give her daughter the savings fund of $10,000 on the theory that she had also made similar "advancements" to her sons, which were to be subsequently charged against them in distribution of the mother's estate.

[13] In view of the broad scope of examination which is allowed in suits in which the question of the mental competency of the donor of a gift of property is involved, that evidence might have been properly received. However, the question of "advancements" to the children, to be charged against the estate, was not involved in this case. It was not contended that the gifts of the bank account and the improvement district warrants to Mrs. Dahlstrom were made as advancements against the estate. Moreover, the subject of the cancellation of those notes of Ansell was fully covered in his subsequent unrestricted examination as a witness. He corroborated in every detail his sister's testimony in that regard. He said that his mother, in the presence of his sister Alma, asked for an envelope upon which his name was written, and that she then opened and carefully examined its contents, saying to him: "Ansell, I have got something I want to give you. * * * I want you to burn those papers. * * * You have paid me a lot on it * * * and I have never kept track of what you have paid me. * * * You burn those papers. * * * They are all here, I guess. * * *" Handing the documents to him, she said: "Now, Ansell, you burn those papers."

He testified that the envelope contained the notes which he had previously given to his mother to represent several loans of money which he had procured from her, together with one chattel mortgage. He said he did not know that his mother had even recorded the chattel mortgage. He admitted that he and his sister then burned the documents in the kitchen stove, as he was requested to do.

In a subsequent lengthy examination of Ansell which was not restricted in any particular, the entire subject-matter appears to have been fully covered. Plaintiffs then had every opportunity to ask him if it was not true that he did not accept the notes from his mother as a gift, and, on the contrary, if he did not still consider himself indebted to the estate. No such question was asked of him. If he had so stated, it would have been inconsistent with his unqualified admissions regarding that transaction. At least the order sustaining the former question was harmless.

[14, 15] The court did not err in permitting Mr. McPheeters to testify that Mrs. Jorgensen consulted him regarding her desire to give some of her property to her children. He said she told him she wanted to give her savings bank account to her daughter. He said she frequently discussed with him her various business transactions. He advised her to procure from the bank a printed form for creating a joint tenancy account, which the bank was accustomed to use, and to execute it herself and have her daughter also sign it, and then file it with the bank. He explained the result of that transaction, saying that the title would then vest in her daughter upon the death of Mrs. Jorgensen. He said that she followed his advice and transferred the account in that manner. That evidence was competent to show that the creation of the joint tenancy account was voluntarily made by the deceased, upon the independent advice of an expert broker and friend whom she was accustomed to consult regarding her business transactions. That evidence was directly addressed to the issue of undue influence. The fact that she acted voluntarily with independent advice in arranging to give that savings fund to her daughter refutes the theory that it was procured by undue influence. When the mental condition of a donor or a testator is involved in a conveyance or a will, the declarations of a decedent with relation thereto are competent, whether they are made before or after the transaction is completed, provided they are not too remote. (4 Jones Comm. on Evidence [2d ed.] 2949, § 1614.)

The court did not err in permitting W. W. Ferguson, the assistant manager of the Bank of America, where Mrs. Jorgensen had kept her accounts for many years, to testify regarding numerous business transactions which he had discussed with her, that: "In all the transactions we had with her, why, we considered her a woman of very alert mind and positive in her manner. * * * I would consider that Mrs. Jorgensen was a very alert business woman."

[16, 17] The witness said that he knew Mrs. Jorgensen well, and that he had seen her at least once or twice a month, or possibly every week for five years before her death, and that she was accustomed to talk with him about her business affairs and property interests. The challenged statements are competent evidence of the characteristics of an individual which may be readily observed by an acquaintance who frequently comes in contact with her, and who is accustomed to discuss with her many business affairs. Such characteristics and traits may be testified to by a non-expert witness, without first qualifying as an intimate acquaintance under the provisions of section 1870, subdivision 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure. People v. Lavelle, 71

Cal. 351, 12 P. 226; People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 P. 177.

[18, 19] The appellants contend that the court erred in permitting Mr. McPheeters to testify regarding Mrs. Jorgensen that she was "a very shrewd investor" and that "her mental condition was good," for the reason that it does not appear he was an intimate acquaintance of the deceased. The plaintiffs also moved to strike those answers from the record on the same ground. That motion was denied, as the minute order shows, "with limitations expressed in the opinion filed herein." We assume that "opinion," to which reference is made in the minute order, contains the decision of the court prescribing the limitation of the application of the evidence, and the purpose and extent for which it is conditionally permitted to remain in the record. That part of the decision is not before us. Ordinarily an opinion of a trial court is no part of the record on appeal, and may not be considered by a reviewing court. But where a written document which is referred to in the minute order and filed by the court specifically determines the motion to strike out evidence, it becomes a part of the court's order and may be considered in determining what the court decided. Since that portion of the ruling is not before us, we must assume, in support of the judgment, that it specifically limited the application of the evidence to the purpose for which it is competent.

[20] Moreover, we are of the opinion the record contains sufficient evidence upon which the court was warranted in holding that the witness was an intimate acquaintance of Mrs. Jorgensen, in contemplation of the provisions of section 1870, subdivision 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that he was therefore qualified to testify to his opinion regarding her mental sanity.

[21] The evidence clearly shows that Mr. McPheeters was an expert broker in Turlock, of wide experience in business affairs; that he had known the deceased for twelve years, and that she was accustomed to consult with him frequently regarding her family affairs and her property interests; that she had often talked with him about rendering financial aid to her children, and had consulted him regarding her desire to give to her daughter the savings account which is involved in this suit, together with the manner of accomplishing that purpose. In a lengthy examination he related many of those transactions. We may not say such evidence fails to show the existence of an intimate acquaintanceship. The question as to whether a witness has been shown to be an intimate acquaintance of one whose mental soundness is challenged is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. Except for an abuse of that discretion, a reviewing court may not interfere with the determination of the trial court in that regard. In the syllabus to the case of People v. Manoogian, supra, it is said: "The question whether a witness is such an 'intimate acquaintance' as to be allowed to give his opinion on the general question of sanity or insanity is from its nature peculiarly addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and the appellate court will not interpose, unless there is a clear abuse of discretion."

[22] The challenged evidence is therefore competent, and the court did not err in receiving it subject to limitation, or otherwise.

[23] The court did not err in receiving in evidence defendants' exhibits A, C, D, E or F, which were statements of Mrs. Jorgensen's bank accounts, including items of deposits therein and withdrawals therefrom, except exhibits E and F, which were promissory notes executed to their mother by the plaintiff C. H. Jorgensen and his deceased brother Ed P. Jorgensen, for previous loans secured by them. Both the bank accounts and the notes were competent as affecting the issue of alleged undue influence. They tended to show that Mrs. Jorgensen had always been on good terms with all of her children and that she had assisted each of them financially, without discrimination, in times of need.

[24] The testimony of Mr. Walter Moline, the assistant manager of the Bank of America, where Mrs. Jorgensen had kept her accounts for several years, was also competent. He had known and dealt with the deceased for many years and was familiar with her signature. He identified and explained the various bank accounts of the deceased and testified to the genuineness of her signature on the joint tenancy agreement and upon other documents. We do not perceive that his testimony tended to vary the terms of any of those written documents. It was merely explanatory of the instruments and the results thereof.

For the reasons heretofore stated, the motion for a new trial was properly denied. The judgment is affirmed.

2. Attorney and client 🔑11

A disbarred lawyer representing his own cause in court, on a claim actually and legally acquired before disbarment, does not hold himself out as "practicing law" or as "entitled to practice law" as forbidden by statute, by a single appearance in court in his own behalf in pressing his own individual claim acquired before disbarment. St. 1939, p. 2732, § 6127(a, b).

3. Attorney and client 🔑60

In certiorari proceeding to review an order holding a disbarred attorney guilty of contempt on ground that he violated the Business and Professions Code by appearing as assignee of judgment assigned only for collection, District Court of Appeal could receive and consider attorney's testimony given before the court, not to impeach the record made in the court below but to supplement and explain it. St.1939, p. 2732, § 6127(a, b), p. 360, § 6130.

4. Attorney and client 🔑60

The statute forbidding a disbarred attorney to appear on his own behalf as plaintiff in prosecution of any action, where the subject of the action has been assigned to him subsequent to disbarment and solely for collection, is violated only if disbarred attorney has received the assignment solely for collection. 5. Certiorari 🔑28(2), 65

A writ of "certiorari" may be used only to review an order or judgment of an inferior court to determine if it acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction and the reviewing court may receive and consider evidence outside of the record to be reviewed.

6. Contempt 🔑54(4)

In cases of contempt committed outside the presence of the court, affidavit charging the contempt must show facts which constitute contempt.

8. Contempt 🔑40

"Contempt" of court is a specific criminal offense and a "contempt proceeding" is not a "civil action", either at law or in equity, but is a separate proceeding of a criminal nature and of summary character in which the court exercises but limited jurisdiction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Civil Action", "Contempt", "Contempt Proceeding".

9. Certiorari 🔑64(1)

Though a writ of "certiorari" is not a writ of error, it nevertheless extends to the whole of the record of the court below, and even to the evidence itself, where necessary to determine jurisdiction.

10. Contempt 🔑67

On certiorari proceeding to review contempt proceeding, the charge, evidence, findings, and judgment are to be strictly construed in accused's favor, and no intendments or presumptions can be indulged in aid of their sufficiency.

11. Contempt ⚿67

On certiorari proceeding, if record of contempt proceeding fails to show affirmatively on its face the existence of all necessary facts on which jurisdiction depended, the contempt order must be annulled.

12. Contempt ⚿44

Jurisdiction of a court in contempt cases depends on the existence of evidence showing that an actual contempt of court has been committed, and in the absence of such evidence, a court pronouncing a judgment of contempt lacks jurisdiction, and its order should be annulled.

Proceeding by W. C. Wilde, petitioner, against the Superior Court of San Diego County and others, respondents, to review an order holding petitioner guilty of contempt of court.

Order annulled.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

Clarence Harden, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Thomas Whelan, Dist. Atty., and Robert E. Jenson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

Jerold E. Weil, amicus curiæ, Los Angeles, on behalf of respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is a proceeding instituted in this court to review an order holding petitioner guilty of contempt of court, and punishing him by the imposition of a fine of $300 to be collected by one day's imprisonment for each $2 of such fine in case it be not paid.

On January 20, 1941, petitioner, who had been an attorney at law, was permanently disbarred from practice in this state.

The material facts recited in the petition filed here should be briefly summarized. It recites that on December 2, 1936, judgment was recovered in the sum of $778.57 by plaintiffs in the Superior Court of San Diego County in an action entitled Union Trust Company of San Diego and Mortimer Rieser, as executors of the last will and testament of William B. Gross, deceased, substituted plaintiffs v. Meryl P. Bennett and Charles F. Naylor, defendants; that $313.50 was paid on the judgment on October 7, 1941; that the balance was unsatisfied; that by a writing dated March 30, 1936, and filed September 30, 1941, plaintiffs' cause of action was assigned to Ethel Eaton who was the secretary of petitioner and who took the assignment in her name for the convenience of petitioner; that she was never the actual or beneficial owner of the cause of action and judgment; that on September 6, 1941 Ethel Reed (formerly Ethel Eaton) in writing assigned the cause of action and judgment to plaintiff; that this assignment was filed September 30, 1941; that both assignments authorized the respective assignees to take any and all steps necessary or desirable to collect and enforce payment of the judgment in the names of the plaintiffs or otherwise; that on October 10, 1941, petitioner, in propria persona, as assignee of the judgment creditor, filed a verified petition and application for an order charging with the lien of the judgment a partnership interest of Meryl P. Bennett in a partnership in which it was alleged he was a member; that an order to show cause was issued and came on for hearing on November 3, 1941; that petitioner, as assignee of the judgment, appearing in propria persona, presented the petition to the judge presiding who found that the "judgment was assigned (to petitioner) solely for collection" and found him guilty of contempt for violating the provisions of section 6130 and of subdivisions a and b of section 6127 of the Business and Professions Code, St.1937, p. 1229, as added and amended St.1939, pp. 360, 2732; that during the presentation of the petition to the court, petitioner stated to the judge presiding that he was the beneficial owner of the cause of action and judgment assigned to Ethel Reed and became the absolute, sole and record owner thereof under the assignment of September 6, 1941, and was presenting the petition as petitioner in propria persona solely in his own interest as such owner for himself and not for or on behalf of anyone else; that he offered to produce Ethel Reed "as a witness who would testify that said W. C. Wilde at all times since said March 30, 1936, has been and now is the absolute, beneficial and sole owner of said cause of action and judgment and that she had never had any personal or beneficial interest therein but that she so took and held the same in her name for the use and benefit of said W. C. Wilde and as his property."

The petition then summarized the various proceedings which resulted in the judgment in question and in the two assignments. On September 2, 1932, William B. Gross, through petitioner, as his attorney, filed an action in the Justices' Court of San Diego Township to recover a money judgment against Bennett and Naylor; that Gross died May 25, 1933, and his executors were substituted as plaintiffs; that on March 3, 1936, judgment was rendered in the justices' court in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $391.45. This is the cause of action and judgment which was assigned to Ethel Eaton.

It is also alleged that claims were presented to the executors of the Gross estate by petitioner and two others totaling $386.40; that suit was filed in the justices' court on these claims in the name of Ethel Eaton; that the executors filed a cross-complaint in this action seeking to recover judgment against Wilde; that another action was pending against Wilde on a claim in favor of Gross; that these cross demands were compromised which compromise was approved by order of the superior court in which the Gross estate was being probated which order authorized the executors to assign the claim and judgment against Bennett and Naylor; that the other actions were dismissed; that Wilde paid the other claimants the full amount of their claims against the estate of Gross; that in accordance with the order of the probate court the claim and judgment against Bennett and Naylor was assigned to Ethel Eaton "solely for the use and benefit and beneficial interest of said W. C. Wilde and as his property."

Respondents maintain that the court cannot base its decision on any of the allegations of the petition. Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal.App. 392, 163 P. 69; Goodrich v. Superior Court, 92 Cal.App. 695, 268 P. 669. Whatever may be the correct rule in cases of this kind we do not need to refer to the allegations of the petition again except to shorten the subsequent summary of the return filed and of testimony taken. However, it was stipulated at the hearing that the petition be considered a traverse to the return. It is unnecessary to determine the propriety of this proceeding.

The return filed by respondents consists of a clerk's transcript of the superior court action, there having been an appeal taken from a justices' court judgment. The documents show the pleadings in the action of Gross v. Bennett and Naylor in the justices' court, the substitution of the executors as plaintiffs, the judgment for plaintiffs dated March 3, 1936, and the assignment to Ethel Eaton, as set forth in the petition. This assignment recites that it was made pursuant to an order of the Superior Court of San Diego County in the Matter of the Estate of William B. Gross, deceased. A copy of this order is not in the record. The record contains a notice of appeal from the judgment of the justices' court, an undertaking on appeal, the judgment of the superior court and other files not necessary to mention. It concludes with the order adjudging Wilde guilty of contempt. In the judgment in the superior court action against Bennett and Naylor, Wilde was allowed $100 attorney's fees.

There is no indication in the record that any testimony was taken at the hearing which resulted in the order holding Wilde in contempt so that order must be supported, if at all, by the record contained in the return.

Over the strenuous objections of respondents, Wilde was called as a witness in his own behalf and was permitted to testify at the hearing before this court. His evidence substantiated the material allegations of his petition already summarized, as well as the part of the return relating to the appeal. He also testified that after he had been held guilty of contempt the balance of the judgment against Bennett and Naylor was paid to him in full; that the money was his; that he divided it with no one and that no other person had any claim upon it or any part of it.

[1, 2] The first important question to be considered is the propriety of the ruling of this court permitting Wilde to testify here, for, if his evidence can be considered, it establishes without dispute that he was the actual bona fide owner of the judgment and that it was not "assigned to him for collection" as found by the trial court. § 6130, Business & Professions Code. Nor was he "Assuming to be an officer or attorney of a court and acting as such, without authority" nor "Advertising or holding oneself out as practicing or as entitled to practice law or otherwise practicing law in any court, without being an active member of the State Bar," Subds. (a) and (b), § 6127, Business & Professions Code, as found by the trial court as the basis of the order of contempt. A disbarred lawyer presenting his own cause in court, on a claim actually and legally acquired before disbarment, does not assume to be an officer or attorney of the court and does not act as such without authority. Nor does he hold himself out as practicing or as entitled to practice law by a single appearance in court in his own behalf in pressing his own individual claim so acquired before disbarment.

Counsel have been diligent in their citations of authorities on all questions argued by them. It would unduly extend this opinion to attempt to review the many cases cited and we will not attempt to do so.

In considering the question of the propriety of the reviewing court receiving evidence not in the return, it must be admitted that there is a general rule, rather firmly supported in the earlier cases, that the review should be confined to the record before the lower court in order to determine if it acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction. However, even in the earlier cases it was suggested that there might be exceptions to this general rule.

In City of Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 295, 50 P. 534, 535, 62 Am.St.Rep. 234, relied upon by respondents, the Supreme Court said: "Upon certiorari, if it becomes necessary for the court of review to be put in possession of the facts upon which the court below acted, and which are not technically of record, it is competent for that court to require the lower court to certify such facts in its return to the writ, and this statement of facts would then be a part of the record. 2 Spell. Extr. Relief, § 2020. Under this principle, it was not perhaps improper for the trial court to admit the evidence of Yonken, not as contradicting the record of the justice, but as supplemental thereto. People [ex rel. Whitney] v. San Francisco Fire Dept., 14 Cal. 479."

In Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal.App. 392, 163 P. 69, 71, also relied on by respondents, the court said: "However, the court to whom the petition is addressed may, it seems, in the exercise of its discretion, and for the purpose of determining whether or not, despite the irregularities complained of, injustice may be done by the issuance of the writ, resort to evidence from without the record sought to be reviewed. [Citing cases.]"

More recent cases in which evidence outside of the record to be reviewed was received before the Supreme Court, are, In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 73 P.2d 554; Ex parte Connor, 16 Cal.2d 701, 108 P.2d 10, and Ex parte Bell, 19 Cal.2d 488, 122 P.2d 22.

In re Mooney was heard by the Supreme Court of this state in response to a suggestion of the Supreme Court of the United States in denying, without prejudice, Mooney's application to file an original petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the latter court seeking his release from confinement on the ground he had been convicted on testimony which, after his conviction, was proved to have been perjured and that evidence favorable to him had been wilfully suppressed by the prosecutors and thus he had been denied the due process guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, Amend. 14. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 55 S.Ct. 340, 79 L.Ed. 791, 98 A.L.R. 406.

A similar petition was filed in the Supreme Court of this state. A writ was issued and a referee was appointed for the purpose of taking evidence. For more than a year the referee took evidence in San Francisco and various cities throughout the United States. His report, says the Supreme Court [10 Cal.2d 1, 73 P.2d 561], consisted of "20 volumes, containing 13,416 pages of evidence or proffered evidence and hundreds of exhibits". This evidence, much of it obviously outside the record of the superior court to be reviewed, was carefully considered by the Supreme Court in reaching its decision. This case is an example of an exception to the earlier general rule prevailing in this state, if it does not establish a new rule to govern later proceedings.

Ex parte Connor, supra, was also heard as the result of a writ of certiorari issued by the Supreme Court of the United States to the Supreme Court of California. A former judgment was vacated and the cause was remanded for further consideration. Connor v. California, 309 U.S. 631, 60 S.Ct. 708, 84 L.Ed. 989. In accordance with this order the Supreme Court of this state issued a writ of habeas corpus and proceeded to review the case. At the hearing before that court a photostatic copy of a letter written by petitioner, not a part of the record of the court below, was offered and received in evidence after objections to its introduction in evidence had been overruled. This letter was considered by the court and furnished a partial basis for one of the conclusions reached. In commenting on the scope of the inquiry in such proceedings it was said [16 Cal.2d 701, 108 P.2d 17]: "The scope of inquiry on habeas corpus in this state may, as above stated, under exceptional circumstances, extend over the entire course of proceedings in the lower courts. In re Lake, 65 Cal.App. 420, 224 P. 126; In re Friday, 138 Cal.App. 660, 32 P.2d 1117; In re Connolly, 16 Cal.App.2d 709, 61 P.2d 490, and cases cited), and may embrace additional evidence received by this court either directly or under an order of reference. In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 73 P.2d 554. * * * In defining the scope of inquiry in the federal courts it is stated in Frank v. Mangum, 237 U.S. 309, 331, 35 S.Ct. 582, 589, 59 L.Ed. 969, that upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus the court has the right 'to look beyond forms and inquire into the very substance of the matter, to the extent of deciding whether the prisoner has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law, and for this purpose to inquire into jurisdictional facts, whether they appear upon the record or not.' "

Ex parte Bell, supra [19 Cal.2d 488, 122 P.2d 30], was also a case in which the Supreme Court had occasion to consider the scope of the inquiry in the reviewing court under a writ of habeas corpus. It was there said: "A petitioner seeking habeas corpus, however, is not confined to the face of the record in attempting to sustain the burden of proving that his conviction was in violation of his constitutional rights. The courts of both the United States and California have declared that the remedy of habeas corpus permits an examination not only of the actual evidence introduced at petitioner's trial but of any necessary additional evidence bearing upon the infringement of petitioner's constitutional rights. [Citing cases.]"

It therefore seems to be settled that now, in habeas corpus proceedings, the reviewing court, in exceptional cases, in order that justice may be done, and in order that the petitioner may not be deprived of his constitutional right to due process, may receive and consider evidence outside of the record to be reviewed. The question arises: Does this rule prevail in proceedings in certiorari?

It has repeatedly been held in this state, as said in Re Lake, 65 Cal.App. 420, 224 P. 126, 127, that: "The scope of the inquiry which the court can make upon either habeas corpus or certiorari is precisely the same. Ex parte Drew, 188 Cal. 717, 207 P. 249, 250; Commercial Bank, etc., v. Superior Court [192 Cal. 395], 220 P. 422, 423."

[3] See, also, In re Wilkins, 66 Cal.App. 754, 226 P. 964; In re Chaus, 92 Cal.App. 384, 268 P. 422; In re Sears, 137 Cal.App. 308, 30 P.2d 571; In re Connolly, 16 Cal. App.2d 709, 61 P.2d 490. We therefore conclude that under the rule already considered, and under the circumstances here, we may receive and consider the evidence of petitioner given before this court, not to impeach the record made in the court below but to supplement and explain it and to develop the true facts upon which must rest the question of the jurisdiction of the superior court to punish petitioner for contempt.

As we have already observed the trial court based its order solely upon violation of the sections of the Business and Professions Code already referred to.

Section 6130 of that code provides as follows: "No person, who has been an attorney, shall while a judgment of disbarment or suspension is in force appear on his own behalf as plaintiff in the prosecution of any action where the subject of the action has been assigned to him subsequent to the entry of the judgment of disbarment or suspension and solely for purpose of collection."

[4] Under this section the disbarred attorney must not only appear in court in his own behalf on a claim assigned to him after disbarment, but the assignment must have been "solely for purpose of collection." Here, while the actual assignment was made after disbarment, it clearly appears that for several years prior to such assignment, petitioner had been the actual owner of the claim and that the assignment was not solely for the purpose of collection, but to complete the record title and vest in him what was already his. Nor do the facts before us bring the case within the provisions of section 6127 of the Business and Professions Code for reasons already noted.

[5-7] It is true that the writ of certiorari may be used only to review an order or a judgment of an inferior court to determine if it acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction. In cases of contempt committed outside the presence of the court it is necessary that the affidavit charging the contempt show facts which actually constitute contempt. Hotaling v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 501, 217 P. 73, 29 A.L.R. 127; Wutchumna Water Co. v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 734, 12 P.2d 1033, 29 A.L.R. 127. In cases of contempt committed in the presence of the court, the order adjudging the contempt must also recite facts which actually constitute contempt. It is also true that as the proceedings are of a criminal nature no presumptions may be indulged in favor of the judgment. These rules were clearly stated in Re Lake, supra, as follows:

[8-11] "The reason for this rule is clearly stated in the Hotaling case, from which we quote ([191 Cal. 501], 217 P. 74 [29 A.L.R. 127]): 'Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense. [Citing cases.] A contempt proceeding is not a civil action, either at law or in equity (herein disagreeing with In re Selowsky [189 Cal. 331], 208 P. 99, 100) * * *, but is a separate proceeding of a criminal nature and summary character (McClatchy v. Superior Court, supra [119 Cal. 413, 51 P. 696, 39 L.R.A. 691]; In re McCarty, 154 Cal. 534, 98 P. 540; Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 P. 580; Selowsky v. Superior Court, 180 Cal. 404, 181 P. 652), in which the court exercises but a limited jurisdiction. * * * The proceeding is of such a distinctly criminal nature that a mere preponderance of evidence is insufficient.' Following this statement of principles the court then announces the rule in such clear and succinct language that we can do no better than quote it in full: 'While the writ of certiorari is not a writ of error, it nevertheless extends to the whole of the record of the court below, and even to the evidence itself where necessary to determine jurisdiction. [Citing cases.] In reviewing this proceeding, the charge, the evidence, the findings and the judgment are all to be strictly construed in favor of the accused (Schwarz v. Superior Court, supra), and no intendments or presumptions can be indulged in aid of their sufficiency (Frowley v. Superior Court, supra [158 Cal. 220, 110 P. 817]). If the record of the proceedings, reviewed in the light of the foregoing rules, fails to show affirmatively upon its face the existence of all the necessary facts upon which jurisdiction depended, the order must be annulled. Frowley v. Superior Court, In re McCarty, and other cases above cited.' (Emphasis ours.)

"The court was there considering a case of constructive contempt. The case before us is one charging a contempt committed in the immediate view and presence of the court. The difference is that in cases of constructive contempt an affidavit must be filed containing a formal charge upon which a hearing must be held while in these cases the court may proceed summarily without a charging affidavit. In the latter case the order of commitment must state the facts constituting the contempt (section 1211, Code Civ. Proc.), and, on review, this order must bear the same scrutiny as is given the affidavit in the former case. * * * There is the same unanimity of opinion supporting the rule that in cases of direct contempt the order of commitment is void, 'unless it shows on its face acts sufficient to constitute a legal contempt. The order must contain a statement of facts equivalent to those which the law says must be incorporated in an affidavit for constructive contempt; and such facts must prove the contempt. Mere conclusions are not sufficient.' 5 Cal.Jur. pp. 950, 951."

[12] Jurisdiction of the court in contempt cases, like those in which reviews of awards of the Industrial Accident Commission are sought, depends on the existence of evidence showing that an actual contempt of court has been committed. In the absence of such evidence a court pronouncing a judgment of contempt lacks jurisdiction and its order should be annulled. In re Lake, supra; In re Chaus, supra; In re Cunha, 123 Cal.App. 625, 11 P.2d 902, 18 P.2d 979; In re Cutler, 1 Cal.App.2d 273, 36 P.2d 441; In re Roberts, 2 Cal.App.2d 70, 37 P. 2d 477; King v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. App.2d 501, 56 P.2d 268; In re Critchlow, 11 Cal.2d 751, 81 P.2d 966.

The reasons for this rule in contempt cases are stated in King v. Superior Court, supra [12 Cal.App.2d 501, 56 P.2d 273], as follows: "When jurisdiction to inquire and act depends upon the existence of certain facts, the absence of proof of such facts limits the power to that of inquiry only, and, if action is attempted it is in excess of jurisdiction. The same reasoning is applied to cases before the Industrial Accident Commission. It is thus stated in Re Lake, 65 Cal.App. 420, 224 P. 126, 127: '* * * This inquiry, of course, cannot go beyond the question of jurisdiction, and the review of the evidence is limited to the sole purpose of determining, first, whether jurisdiction existed; and, second, whether jurisdiction was exceeded. Thus, where the question is whether jurisdictional facts were or were not proved, the review extends, not only to the entire record, but to the evidence itself. [Citing cases.] In Van Hoosear v. Railroad Comm., supra, the Supreme Court, on this point, say (189 Cal. (228), 236, 207 P. (903), 906): "That under a writ of review, the evidence of facts upon which the lower court or tribunal depended for its jurisdiction may be considered, and its judgment set aside if jurisdiction is without support in the evidence, is beyond dispute." In the same case (189 Cal. (228), 236, 207 P. (903), 907) the court quoted with approval the following passage from McClatchy v. Superior Court, supra: "While the writ of certiorari is not a writ of error, 'it is nevertheless,' as suggested in Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. (106), 112, 43 P. 580, 'a means by which the power of the court in the premises can be inquired into; and for this purpose the review extends, not only to the whole of the record of the court below, but even to the evidence itself, when necessary to determine the jurisdictional fact.'"'"

In examining the evidence on which the court below acted (without considering testimony taken here), we find that such evidence consists entirely of the documentary record in the case of Union Trust Co. of San Diego, etc., v. Bennett, et al. This record shows the judgments obtained in the Justices' Court and Superior Court, the pleadings and other formal matters, and the two assignments. The assignment to Ethel Eaton recites that it was made "For Valuable Consideration and pursuant to an order made in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Diego, in the proceedings entitled In the Matter of the Estate of William B. Gross, deceased, No. 20439." The assignment to petitioner recites, "For value received, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned hereby assigns and transfers to W. C. Wilde plaintiff's cause of action and judgment in the above entitled action. * * *"

While the assignment to petitioner was made after his disbarment, and to that extent comes within the prohibitive provisions of section 6130 of the Business and Professions Code, there is nothing in that record to indicate that this assignment was made "solely for purpose of collection" which is an element that must be proved before a violation of that section can be established.

[13, 14] As we have seen, neither the trial court nor this court can indulge in any presumptions against one charged with contempt. It cannot be presumed, without supporting evidence, that the assignment was made "solely for purpose of collection." The assignment was in writing and recited the fact of consideration. There is a presumption "that there was a good and sufficient consideration for a written contract" Subd. 39, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc., and also, what has been characterized as one of the strongest presumptions, "that a person is innocent of crime or wrong". Subd. 1, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc. These presumptions in favor of petitioner were with him in the trial court and should have been invoked in his favor. Certainly in the face of these presumptions and in the total absence of any evidence contradicting them it cannot be said that there was any showing that the assignment to petitioner was made "solely for purpose of collection." In the absence of such showing the evidence in the court below (without reference to the evidence taken in this court) failed to show the fact of contempt and the order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt must be annulled.

The State Bar of California has appeared as amicus curiae and its attorney has filed an able brief in support of the judgment. It states its principal object in appearing is to obtain a ruling on what showing must be made to establish the fact that an attorney has prosecuted a claim assigned to him "solely for the purpose of collection" so as to prevent former attorneys from evading the results of their disbarments and actually engaging in the practice of law through the means of assignments of causes of actions to them.

While this purpose is praiseworthy the determination of that question should wait a proper case in which it is directly involved. It cannot be decided here where there is an entire lack of any evidence in the record to be reviewed even suggesting that the assignment to plaintiff was made solely for collection and strong presumptions are against such a conclusion. However, it might not be out of place to say that we have no sympathy with a disbarred attorney who attempts to evade the consequences of his disbarment by purchasing claims after he is disbarred and prosecuting them in court in his own name and propria persona. Should such a case arise it might be held that the courts have an inherent power regardless of statute, to prevent such a flagrant effort to evade the effect of an order of disbarment.

The order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court is annulled.

Pen.Code, § 288.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Jesse Wilford Grant was convicted of the offense of committing lewd or lascivious acts upon a child under 14 years of age in violation of Penal Code, § 288, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Edward C. Purpus and Lorrin Andrews, both of Los Angeles, for apellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Defendant has appealed from a judgment of conviction of the crime of violation of section 288 of the Penal Code.

Defendant's main contention is that the testimony of the prosecutrix, Mary, is inherently improbable and for this reason the evidence is insufficient to support the conviction. The prosecutrix at the time of the offense was eleven years of age. She clearly related acts of defendant which unquestionably were sufficient to establish guilt of the crime charged but defendant argues that the circumstances surrounding these acts demonstrate that her story is unbelievable. On the evening of March 31, 1941, defendant and his wife were dinner guests at the home of Mary and her mother. Mary's aunt was also present. After dinner as the three women were in the kitchen washing dishes Mary and defendant went into the living room. Mary then said she was going into her bedroom to listen to the Lone Ranger on the radio. Defendant went with her and Mary got into bed while appellant sat on a chair beside the bed. At this time defendant committed the indecent acts which form the basis of the charge against him. During this time defendant's wife came from the kitchen into the bedroom, asked defendant for a cigaret and returned to the kitchen. In arguing that Mary's story is unbelievable defendant refers to the close proximity of his wife and Mary's mother at the time of the acts in question and to the fact that the door of the bedroom was open; also to Mary's testifying that she and defendant on later occasions engaged in similar acts but did not mention them to her mother until she learned that defendant had been spreading untrue stories about her mother and her friends.

[1-3] The credibility of the prosecutrix's story was for the determination of the jury and this court may not disturb the verdict if the jury could reasonably draw the conclusion from the evidence that defendant committed the acts charged. To stamp the story of the prosecutrix as inherently improbable we must conclude that it was so unbelievable as to amount to no evidence at all. People v. Fremont, 47 Cal. App.2d 341, 117 P.2d 891. We find nothing in the testimony of the prosecutrix or in the circumstances surrounding the commission of the offense which would warrant our branding the testimony inherently improbable.

Defendant also contends that the trial court erred in not granting his motion for a mistrial because of an incident which occurred in the presence of the jury. While Mary was giving her testimony and was being cross-examined she burst into tears, whereupon her aunt went to the witness stand and put her arms around the witness. The judge then said to the aunt: "I wish you would go back and sit down and let me handle this trial." At the conclusion of the introduction of the evidence when counsel for defendant moved for a mistrial because of this incident the judge stated: "The motion for a mistrial is denied. The record at that time was this, that that little girl was sobbing and crying on the witness stand. Human nature is the same inside a court room as it is outside a court room, and the aunt merely came up and put her arms around the little girl while the girl was sobbing and crying, and it is true the court did order her to leave the witness stand, and made the remark, 'Let the court or let us handle this situation.' I can't see any prejudice in the record by that occurrence at all. The aunt had been sitting in the court room. That is all I have to say."

[4, 5] A motion for a mistrial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. It may properly be refused where the court is satisfied that no injustice has resulted or will result from the occurrences of which complaint is made. 23 C.J.S. Criminal Law, § 961. We see no abuse of discretion in the action of the court in denying the motion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Prosecutrix, who was born on November 4, 1927, was 14 years old on November 3, 1941, and hence defendant could not be convicted for violation of section 288 of Penal Code based on acts allegedly committed on prosecutrix on such date, in view of provision thereof requiring acts to have been committed on "a child under the age of 14 years". W. C. Dorris, C. Fleharty, Jr., Jackson Mahon, and R. W. Henderson, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of rape in one count of the information and with violating the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code in a second count, both acts alleged to have been committed on the person of the same girl. The jury disagreed on the guilt of the defendant of the alleged crime of rape so no further attention will be given to that phase of the case. He was found guilty of the other crime.

The information charged that the crime of which defendant was convicted was committed on November 3, 1941, and evidence was offered tending to show its occurrence between two and three o'clock on the afternoon of that date. The evidence is sharply conflicting, with much evidence indicating that neither crime had been committed.

Defendant moved for a new trial on all statutory grounds of which three were urged at the hearing of the motion. The trial judge denied the motion on the grounds of improper introduction of evidence over the objection of defendant and an improper instruction, and granted the motion on the ground that the evidence failed to support the verdict, specifying as his reason that the evidence showed the prosecutrix to be fourteen years of age on November 3, 1941, so that the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code had not been violated by the alleged acts of defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from the order granting the motion for new trial.

It is admitted that November 4, 1941, was the fourteenth anniversary of the birth of the prosecutrix. The controlling question submitted by counsel for decision here is the proper construction to be placed on section 26 of the Civil Code, which provides as follows: "The period specified in the preceding section must be calculated from the first minute of the day on which persons are born to the same minute of the corresponding day completing the period of minority."

It is admitted that the common law rule that "Full age in male or female is twenty-one years, which age is completed on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of a person's birth" (1 Black.Com. 497) prevails in many jurisdictions. If that rule has not been abrogated by section 26 of the Civil Code the order must be affirmed because, if the section is merely a reenactment of the common law rule, the minor was fourteen years old at the time the acts were alleged to have been committed. Under section 288 of the Penal Code the acts must have been committeed on "a child under the age of fourteen years" to constitute a crime. If the common law rule is applicable the prosecutrix was fourteen years of age on November 3, 1941, the day before the anniversary of her birth, so that the crime charged could not have been committed against her person under the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code.

We have been cited to but two California cases directly bearing on this question. The first is Ganahl v. Soher, 2 Cal.Unrep. 415, 5 P. 80, decided in 1884, the opinion having been written by Mr. Justice Ross and concurred in by Mr. Justice McKee and Mr. Justice McKinstry. The second is Ex parte Wood, 5 Cal.App. 471, 90 P. 961, decided in 1907, the opinion having been written by Mr. Justice Shaw and concurred in by Mr. Presiding Justice Allen and Mr. Justice Taggart.

In the Ganahl case it appears that Henry Gordon Ganahl was born on April 11, 1855. After quoting sections 25 and 26 of the Civil Code, the opinion proceeds: "Under the rule prescribed by the section last quoted, Henry Gordon Ganahl became of age the first minute of the eleventh day of April, 1876, and by virtue of section 328 of the Code of Civil Procedure he was entitled to commence an action for the recovery of whatever interest he had in the land within the period of five years thereafter, but not after the expiration of that period. In computing the period of five years we must include the eleventh day of April, 1876, because, as the plaintiff in question attained his majority the first minute of that day, he had the whole of the day in which to sue; and computing that as the first day of the five years, the whole period of five years expired with the tenth day of April, 1881, and the action not having been commenced until the eleventh of April, 1881, was barred by the provisions of the statute." (The application of section 10 of the Civil Code to those facts was not considered.)

In weighing the force of this opinion it should be observed that under the reasoning of the court the cause of action was clearly barred by the five year statute of limitations regardless of the question of whether Ganahl reached his majority on April 10, 1881, or on April 11, 1881. Thus the statement in the opinion that he reached his majority on April 11, 1881, is to a certain extent dicta. The result would have been the same had it been concluded that he was 21 years of age on April 10, 1881. No authorities, other than the code sections are cited or considered in the opinion.

Ex parte Wood, supra, was on a writ of habeas corpus directed to the superintendent of the Whittier State School to secure the release of Julia A. Wood who had been committed to that institution on March 16, 1907.

She was committed under an act of the Legislature approved March 11, 1889, entitled "An act to establish a state reform school for juvenile offenders, and to make an appropriation therefor." [5 Cal.App. 471, 90 P. 962.] This act made it lawful to receive into that school minors between the ages of eight and eighteen years. Julia A. Wood was born on March 17, 1889, so that the eighteenth anniversary of her birth fell on March 17, 1907, the day after she was committed to the institution. Thus the precise question we have here was presented to the court in that case.

After quoting sections 25 and 26 of the Civil Code, it was said: "It thus conclusively appears that the said Julia A. Wood completed the period of her minority at the commencement of the 16th day of March, 1907, and that at the time of said adjudication and commitment she was of full adult age."

The only authority cited in support of that conclusion was Ganahl v. Soher, supra, which contains dicta to the contrary.

It should be observed that Oklahoma has a statute practically identical with our section 26 of the Civil Code. The Supreme Court of that State has construed that section to mean "that the statute of this state changes the common law, and a minor becomes of full age on the first minute of the anniversary of his birth." Bynum v. Moore, 101 Okl. 128, 223 P. 687, 691.

We are of the opinion that section 26 of the Civil Code is merely a reenactment of the rule of the common law. The prosecutrix was born on November 4, 1927. The cycle of fourteen years was completed at the end of November 3, 1941. That day was, therefore, "the corresponding day completing the period * * *" of fourteen years. (Emphasis ours.) On November 4, 1941, she started her fifteenth year so her fourteenth year was completed on November 3, 1941, and under the provisions of the section she was fourteen years old on that day and defendant cannot be convicted under the clear provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code.

Having reached this conclusion it is unnecessary to consider the other errors urged by counsel for defendant.

The order granting the new trial is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Upon the application of Frank Linnastruth defendant issued two accident insurance policies each providing for the payment of $1,250 in case of the death of the applicant resulting from bodily injury. The policies were dated August 5, 1940. Plaintiff, the widow of Frank Linnastruth, who died on August 6, 1940, seeks in this action to have the court reform the two policies so as to provide that the terms of the two policies commenced on July 17, 1940, and to have judgment entered for the sum of $2,500. Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment in favor of defendant.

Carl H. Abrams, a soliciting agent of defendant corporation, obtained from Frank Linnastruth on July 17, 1940, applications for the policies in question to be issued by defendant. The applications were completed and signed by Linnastruth and twenty-six dollars, thirteen dollars on each application, was paid to Abraham. Abraham dated the applications July 20, 1940, which was the date he submitted them to the office of Mutual Insurance Agency, a broker, in Los Angeles, California, for transmission to the home office of respondent at Omaha, Nebraska, where all policies of insurance of defendant are issued. The applications reached the home office on or about August 1, 1940, were approved by the underwriting department on August 2, 1940, and the two policies were issued bearing date August 5, 1940. The policies set forth the terms thereof as beginning August 5, 1940, and ending December 1, 1940, at which time the balance of the annual premiums would be due or said policies could be renewed.

Frank Linnastruth received bodily injury on July 26, 1940, as the result of a fall and on July 30, 1940, received further injury in a fall. In one of these falls he suffered a fracture of his elbow joint. Infection followed, resulting in his death on August 6, 1940. The two policies were delivered to Linnastruth on August 6, 1940, just prior to his death and while he was unconscious. On July 30, 1940, plaintiff wrote to defendant that Mr. Linnastruth had had an accident and asked that blanks be sent to her. The blanks were sent to her but she did not use them. Plaintiff promptly notified defendant of the death of her husband and on August 10, 1940, defendant wrote to her denying liability on the ground that the injuries which resulted in Mr. Linnastruth's death were received prior to the date on which the policies were issued.

The two applications for insurance are identical and one of them is attached to each of the policies. Each application contains fourteen questions and answers and at the head of each application there appears the following: "I, the undersigned, hereby make application to the Mutual Benefit Health and Accident Association, for policy form MIA50 on the annual basis. I understand and agree that this application shall not be binding upon the Association until the policy is issued to me." The last question in each application reads as follows: "Do you hereby apply to the Mutual Benefit Health and Accident Association for a policy issued solely and entirely in reliance upon the written answers to the foregoing questions and do you agree that the association is not bound by any statement made by or to any agent unless written herein?" In answer to this question the applicant wrote "Yes." On the reverse side of each application appears the following: "Insurance policy. This policy goes into immediate effect from date of issue on accident, and on sickness as plainly stated in the policy". The signature of Mr. Linnastruth does not appear on this side of the application.

[1-5] The policies and the applications constituted contracts between Mr. Linnastruth and defendant corporation. It is expressly so stated in each policy. The general rules which pertain to contracts are applicable. Parties to insurance contracts may make such agreements as they see fit and the courts will enforce the terms mutually agreed upon, subject to the rule that the contract is not against public policy or in contravention of express provisions of law. Boyer v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 206 Cal. 273, 274 P. 57. But, as is often the case with insurance contracts, a question has arisen as to the terms upon which the parties agreed. In his applications Mr. Linnastruth stated that he understood and agreed that the applications should "not be binding upon the Association until the policy is issued to me." Defendant argues that this language is clear and free from ambiguity and that by the terms of the contracts defendant is not liable for injuries received before the date of the insurance of the policies. In our view the contracts are not free from ambiguity as to the meaning of the word, binding, as here used, and under well established principles the ambiguity must be construed most strongly against the party responsible for the uncertainty. Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 203, 26 P. 872, 23 Am.St.Rep. 460. When Mr. Linnastruth signed the application he made, in legal effect, proposals to defendant which, when accepted by defendant, resulted in valid contracts. But to what extent and in what manner did these valid contracts "bind" defendant? Defendant could accept the proposals as made or reject them and return the premiums which had been paid but it could not retain the premiums and at the same time alter the terms proposed and make the alterations effective without the consent of the applicant. Defendant did not exercise its right to reject the applications but it accepted them and issued the policies. The argument which it now presents is tantamount to a contention that it had the right to postpone the date on which the applicant would be protected by insurance to a date of its own selection. It does not seem reasonable to conclude that the parties to the contract intended such a condition. The more reasonable view appears to be that defendant was not liable in any sense until it accepted the applications and issued the policies; but that when it did in fact issue the policies defendant was obligated to comply with the terms which had been proposed; and that these terms included insurance protection for the period commencing with the date of the applications and extending to the date for which premiums were paid.

The remarks of the court in Beswick v. National Casualty Co., 206 Mo.App. 67, 226 S.W. 1031, 1033, are of especial interest. Although the facts of that case contain elements dissimilar to the facts of the present case in that the agent gave a receipt for the premium bearing a definite date, the reasoning of the court is in line with the reasoning upon which our conclusion is based. The court there said: "But the application contained this clause: 'I agree that this application shall not be binding upon the company until accepted either by the secretary at the home office or by an agent duly authorized to issue policies.' And defendant contends that this entirely defeats any idea or provision that the insurance should begin on the date of the application. We do not think this clause has reference to the time when the insurance, if accepted, is to take effect, but only makes the contract of insurance, which the plaintiff sought subject to defendant's acceptance. If the defendant did not choose to accept the insurance thus proffered, it could decline it and return the premium, and it was agreed in the receipt that if they did not accept it in 20 days they would return the money. They did not decline the insurance. They accepted it, but chose to date the policy November 1, 1917, which made it commence after the accident had occurred. The duty of the defendant, if it chose to accept the insurance at all—and it did choose to accept it—was to issue the policy pursuant to the terms of the contract made by its authorized agent with the applicant."

It is contended by plaintiff that the trial court erred in refusing to permit testimony concerning a conversation between the agent Abraham and Mr. Linnastruth in which Mr. Abraham stated that the applicant would be protected from the date of the application. It is also contended that under the doctrines of waiver and estoppel defendant may not now assert nonliability. The conclusion at which we have arrived, as above set forth, makes it unnecessary to discuss these contentions.

MOORE, Presiding Justice (concurring).

I concur. Decedent signed his applications for the policies on July 17. He knew that before the contracts could be issued the applications must be received and considered by defendant at its office in Omaha. While the application form notified decedent that he should not be protected until the policies were issued, such notice could not reasonably have intended that an application for insurance might be suspended in this way, thereby leaving decedent without insurance for a period to be determined solely by the insurer. The public expects, and it is entitled to expect, generous treatment at the hands of such corporations as are under state regulation. When decedent applied for insurance he paid the designated premiums and supplied the factual data concerning himself as of that date. He bargained for insurance then and there, and it is a reasonable construction of the contracts that he knew upon acceptance of the applications the insurance dated back to July 17, the day on which decedent signed the agreements for the insurance and paid the price demanded.

The premiums were retained not only until the applicant deceased but for more than four months thereafter, and until defendant answered in this action. It had no right or authority arbitrarily to defer the issuance of the policies after accepting decedent as an insurable risk. Decedent was entitled within a reasonable time to action upon his applications. Such time would have required the date and issuance of the policies to be prior to July 26, the day of the first accident. Having prepared the forms for the applications, defendant may not after a loss so construe uncertain phrases of the contract as to defeat it, if by reasonable construction the policy may be made valid. MATTEONI v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

Civ. 6734.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 3, 1942.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1942.

1. Negligence ⚷69

Forgetfulness of a known danger is not "contributory negligence" barring recovery for injuries sustained as result of another's negligence unless such forgetfulness shows want of ordinary care.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contributory negligence".

2. Negligence ⚷136(26)

Whether forgetfulness of a known danger will operate as contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries resulting from negligence of another is ordinarily a question for the jury.

3. Electricity ⚷19(3)

In action against gas and electric company for injuries sustained as the result of electric shock received from defendant's broken live wire, burden of establishing contributory negligence was upon the company.

4. Electricity ⚷19(12)

Where member of volunteer fire department seeking damages for injuries resulting from electric shock received from broken high voltage wire while fighting fire started by broken wire testified that he did not know of presence of broken live wire until he suffered shock, whether his failure to recall that 4 years prior thereto he had participated in fighting a fire in the same vicinity started by live wire broken by falling limb and the precautions then taken to guard against electrocution constituted contributory negligence barring recovery was for jury.

5. Witnesses ⚷260

When a witness fails to testify to matters previously within his recollection, or gives evidence in apparent variance with that formerly given, the party calling him may refresh his recollection by directing his attention to former statements, by reading testimony given upon a former trial or examination, or in some cases by reading of information on file.

6. Appeal and error ⚷926(7)

Where appellant failed to point out just what alleged variance between testimony given by witness and previous written statement of witness consisted of, District Court of Appeal would assume in support of judgment that trial court found no such variance as would warrant permitting witness to refresh her memory from such previous statement.

7. Appeal and error ⚷901, 1032(2)

Appellant seeking reversal on the ground of erroneous refusal to permit witness to refresh his recollection from his previous written statement must not only convince reviewing court that trial court erred, but must go further and snow that the ruling complained of was prejudicial in its effect and result.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; W. D. L. Held, Judge.

Action by Alfredo Matteoni against Pacific Gas and Electric Company for personal injuries suffered as result of electric shock received from broken power line maintained by defendant. From a judgment entered on verdict in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub and J. J. Briare, both of San Francisco, Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, and W. R. Dunn, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Linforth, Cannon & Miller, Jesse H. Miller, and Eugene H. O'Donnell, all of San Francisco, and Geary & Tauzer, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought to recover damages arising out of personal injuries received by plaintiff. The issues were submitted to a jury, which brought in a verdict in the sum of $20,387.25. The appeal is taken from the judgment entered upon said verdict.

The facts of the case are practically without substantial conflict. At the date of the accident (July 12, 1939), and for many years prior thereto, defendant had constructed and maintained a power-line near Agua Caliente, Sonoma County, immediately south of a row of eucalyptus trees, which varied from seventy-five to one hundred feet in height, and were some twenty-eight years old. This type of eucalyptus tree was known as "Red Gum," and is more brittle than the ordinary eucalyptus, the limbs having a tendency to break and fall of their own weight. The powerline consisted of the usual poles, upon which were strung three wires carrying 6,900 volts. Each of said wires carried about 4,000 volts of electricity to ground. This voltage was sufficient to cause the death of a human being. Some of the limbs of said trees overhung the wires. In 1935, a limb from one of these trees had fallen and broken the wires, causing a fire. This incident was called to the attention of the local agent of appellant at that time. Shortly after said fire, the local agent was told that "unless they trim the trees, some day somebody is going to get killed." The local agent said he had reported the situation to appellant. On the afternoon of July 12, 1939, which was a normal summer day with no unusual or high wind blowing, a limb fell from one of the trees, said limb being six or seven inches in diameter and about twenty-five feet in length. This limb appeared to have fallen of its own weight. It remained attached to the trunk of the tree, and fell toward the south, and was found after the fire resting on the two remaining wires of the circuit, the third wire having been broken and fallen to the ground. One end of the broken wire was lying across the roof of a dwelling nearby, the broken end of said wire extending into the field. It is conceded by both parties that the fire started by the contact of a broken end of said wire with some tree or other object on the ground.

Respondent was a volunteer fireman, and when the alarm was given, proceeded to the premises. He reported to the fire chief in charge, who handed him a hose and told him to proceed to fight the fire. What took place thereafter is described by him as follows: "I got the hose in my hand, and that is all I remember; a great big train went by, just boom, like a locomotive going by; that is all. The next thing I remember, I was home in bed." Witness Eastman, who was the agent of the volunteer fire department, testified: "At the time I handed him the hose to play water on the fire, I did not know the wire was down, because the flame and smoke was so bad we could not see anything."

With reference to whether or not respondent had knowledge that there was a live wire in the vicinity of the fire, he testified that he had no such knowledge at the time of the accident. The following excerpts from the record substantiate the foregoing statement: "Question: Now, in 1939, July 12, 1939, when you arrived at the fire, did you see any wire down? Answer: No, sir. * * * Question: At the time chief Eastman handed you the hose, is it not a fact, Mr. Matteoni, that you saw the wire on the ground at that time? Answer: No, sir." Witness Huber, called by appellant, testified that he was within five or six feet of respondent when the latter started to use the hose on the fire. He stated that he was only there a moment when he heard respondent say something, and saw him "straighten up and sort of stiffen up, and just at that time someone called out 'live wire.' Before the cry of 'live wire,' I did not observe an electric wire upon the ground in that vicinity." Immediately thereafter, however, the witness testified that he did see the end of a live wire which was tangled on the ground and sparking. He stated, however, that before the accident he did not know that a live wire was down in the field. Substantially the same testimony was given by witness Delaney, called by appellant. No attack is made upon the amount of the award. Before the accident, respondent was a healthy and robust man, fifty-four years of age. Immediately thereafter he became paralyzed from the waist down. He was still under the care of physicians at the time of the trial, some twenty months after the accident. He has no sensation in either foot, and drags himself around with difficulty on two canes. He has suffered complete loss of his sexual powers. His heart function was impaired, and he will not be able to do any physical labor in the future.

Turning to the contentions of appellant on this appeal, no attack is made upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the charge that appellant was negligent in failing to cut and remove those portions of the eucalyptus trees which overhung its powerlines, or which were likely to have fallen thereon under ordinary circumstances. There are but two grounds urged for a reversal of the judgment. The first is the contributory negligence of appellant as a matter of law; and the second, the ruling of the court whereby defendant was denied the right to show a witness a previous written statement for the purpose of refreshing her recollection.

[1, 2] Taking up the first contention, it is necessary to detail further facts which appear in the record, respecting the first fire in 1935. At that time respondent was called upon to fight a fire in the same vicinity, which was caused by a broken wire. In connection with that incident respondent testified: "Question: In 1935, did you know at the time you arrived at the scene of that fire that an electric wire caused it? Answer: No, sir. Question: How soon after the fire was over did you discover it? Answer: I discovered it right away. We got the people all out of that vicinity and we fought the fire, naturally, at a distance." The position upon this question which is taken by appellant is indicated in the following excerpt from its brief: "With the known dangers accompanying the presence of broken wires covering high electric voltage, is it not reasonable to infer that if respondent even suspected that a live wire caused the fire, he would have taken added and unusual precautions to remain away from the broken wire? This he had previously done when, in 1935, a broken wire had caused a fire in the same field. If respondent had any knowledge of the broken wire being present at the time of the accident, is it not reasonable to assume that he would have followed the same course that he did in 1935 and fight the fire at a disance?" The question is whether or not it was negligence as a matter of law for respondent to have forgotten the former incident and the danger connected with fighting fire under such circumstances. It should first be pointed out that respondent, at the time of the second fire, and before the accident, had no knowledge that the power-line had been broken, or that the second fire was started by an electric current. The jury had a right to believe this testimony as against any inference which might be drawn to the effect that respondent must have known of the presence of a live broken wire, for the reason that he had, four years prior thereto, fought a fire there which had been caused by a broken live wire. Obviously, the jury arrived at the conclusion that respondent was telling the truth, and that he had no knowledge or recollection whatever of the danger arising out of fighting a fire under such circumstances. It is strongly urged by appellant that the previous experience of respondent with respect to the first fire was of such a character that it charged him as a matter of law, with knowledge of the danger which he might incur. It may be reasonably assumed that respondent did not have in mind, or momentarily forgot his previous experience. It is the rule that "Forgetfulness of a known danger will not always operate to prevent recovery of damages by a person who is injured. To forget is not negligence, unless it shows a want of ordinary care." Roseberry v. Edward F. Niehaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481–483, 137 P. 232, 233. It is stated in Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498–504, 205 P. 1078, 1081, where the foregoing holding in the Roseberry case is reiterated, that: "Generally the question is one for the jury." In the case of Gibson v. County of Mendocino, 16 Cal.2d 80, 105 P.2d 105, 109, plaintiff started to enter the outer door of the courthouse, and stood upon a smooth metal plate, in such a position that the door struck her when closing, and threw her down the outer steps to the pavement. The court took the position that while the plaintiff knew of the dangerous condition arising out of the smooth metal plate, and also that the door was operated by a self-closing device, her forgetfulness of such danger was excused by the fact that as she stood on the plate, and in a position of danger, she heard the fire alarm, and turned away in order to listen to a number of blasts, so that she might determine the location of the fire, she having testified that she had been "burned out once." In the instant case the jury might have found from the surrounding facts and circumstances that respondent was excused in failing to recollect his experience with the first fire. It is a matter of common knowledge that there is considerable excitement surrounding the fighting of a fire, and the jury may have found that respondent was not called upon to exercise that degree of deliberation which would be called for under ordinary circumstances. The case comes clearly within the rule laid down in Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 110, 48 Am.St. Rep. 114, 28 L.R.A. 596:

> "It is said that, if one was aware of a fact which should have put him upon his guard, he cannot rebut the presumption of contributory negligence by showing that he momentarily forgot it. This is true as a general proposition, but, like all other rules upon this subject, it must have a reasonable construction."

[3] See, also, Ramos v. Service Bros., 118 Cal.App. 432, 5 P.2d 623. The interval of over four years between the two fires and the emergency character of the act in which appellant was engaged when injured, are potent factors which may well have justified the jury in finding that the failure of respondent to have remembered the hazard connected with the first fire was not such negligence as would bar recovery. Finally, as stated by this court in Langazo v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp., 32 Cal.App.2d 678, 685, 90 P.2d 825, 829:

> "It must be remembered that the burden of establishing a defense of contributory negligence is upon the defendant. Such burden has not been sustained to the degree that 'from the facts, reasonable men can draw but one inference, which inference points unerringly to the negligence of plaintiff proximately contributing to his own injury'. Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., et al., 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183."

[4] The cases relied upon by appellant are not factually comparable. In the first place they involve situations where the danger was admittedly known to the injured party at the time of the accident (Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, 211 Cal. 556, 296 P. 76), or where the danger was clearly apparent. Anderson v. Western Pac. R. Co., 17 Cal.App.2d 244, 61 P.2d 1209. Here, respondent testified that he did not know of the presence of the live broken wire, and the evidence shows that there was practically no visibility at all when he started to use the hose. In other words, the jury may have found that the danger was not obvious or clearly apparent. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that it was.

[5] The second ground urged for reversal is error predicated upon a ruling of the trial court in refusing to permit witness Hickey to refresh her memory from a previous statement which she had made. Appellant sets out the statement and the testimony, and says that there is a variance between them. The latter is spread over some twelve pages of appellant's brief. Nowhere does appellant point out just what the alleged variance consisted of, or what particular facts are involved. It certainly is not the duty of this court to search for any inconsistencies or conflicts between the statement and the testimony. Appellant relies upon the rule stated in 27 Cal.Jur. 86, where it is said:

> "When a witness fails to testify to matters previously within his recollection, or gives evidence in apparent variance with that formerly given, the party calling him may with propriety refresh his recollection by directing his attention to former statements, by reading testimony given upon a former trial or examination, or, in some cases, by reading an information on file. And it has been stated that when attention is being directed to prior statements leading questions may be rightfully resorted to."

[6, 7] As the matter is presented to us, we may, and do assume, in support of the judgment, that the trial court found no such variance, and therefore ruled as stated. "If an appellant seeks a reversal upon such grounds, not only must he convince the reviewing court that the trial court erred, but he must go further, and show that the ruling complained of was prejudicial in its effect and result." Robertson v. Weingart, 91 Cal.App. 715, 267 P. 741, 746. Appellant here has failed to sustain such burden.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Torts 🔑8

In California, the right of privacy is accepted as a right the breach of which gives rise to a cause of action.

2. Torts 🔑8

The "right of privacy" is the right to live one's life in seclusion, without being subjected to unwarranted and undesired publicity, in short, it is the right to be let alone.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Right of Privacy".

3. Constitutional law ⚿86

The constitutional right to pursue and obtain happiness includes right to freedom from unnecessary attacks on one's character, social standing, or reputation.

4. Torts ⚿8

The circulating of a letter bearing plaintiff's name as apparent signer and handwritten in a feminine hand, of a nature which cast doubt on plaintiff's moral character, which letter was circulated for purpose of advertising a moving picture, was actionable as constituting an invasion of plaintiff's "right of privacy".

5. Torts ⚿8

The "right of privacy" includes protection against mortifying notoriety, unless some legal justification for its infliction exists.

6. Evidence ⚿20(1)

It is a matter of judicial knowledge that by use of an engraved plate a print of a longhand letter can be made which, in absence of close inspection, will pass for original handwriting.

7. Torts ⚿8

That letter bearing plaintiff's name as apparent signer, which was of a nature which cast doubt on plaintiff's moral character, was circulated by defendants for purpose of advertising a moving picture, and that defendants had no intent to refer therein to plaintiff and did not know of her existence, tended to show want of "malice" and might have averted an award of punitive damages, but it constituted no defense to action for invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Malice".

8. Libel and slander ⚿2

Inadvertence or mistake affords no defense to a charge of libel, where defamatory publication does, in fact, refer to plaintiff.

9. Libel and slander ⚿19

A "libel" need not be a statement directly referring to a person and stating something defamatory about him, but it may as well be accomplished by falsely putting words into mouth or attaching them to pen of person defamed, thus imputing to such person a willingness to use them, where mere fact of having uttered or used the words would produce any of results enumerated in statute. Civ.Code, § 45.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Libel".

10. Costs ⚿107

If plaintiff's cause of action for damages which allegedly resulted from circulating of a letter bearing her name as apparent signer, which was of a nature which cast doubt on her moral character, was one for libel, plaintiff's action would be subject to dismissal, unless bond for costs as required by statute were filed. Mitchell, Silberberg, Roth & Knupp, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit. No question is raised regarding the sufficiency of the complaint to present her case; hence we do not review its allegations.

The salient facts shown by the evidence are as follows: The plaintiff is an actress, concert singer, and monologist of many years' experience, both in the United States and Europe. For many years she has been and now is engaged in collecting American folk-lore, including legends, stories and songs, and in presenting them to the public on concert programs. Her character is conceded to be good. Defendant corporation is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures and defendant Seltzer is the head of its publicity department. In March, 1939, a motion picture which the corporation had produced was on exhibition in Los Angeles in the theater mentioned in the letter hereinafter set forth. For the purpose of advertising that picture the defendants caused a letter bearing plaintiff's name as apparent signer to be prepared, handwritten in a feminine hand and then reproduced mechanically on pink stationery, and also caused 1,000 copies of the letter so reproduced to be enclosed in pink envelopes, addressed in a feminine hand and sent by mail to 1,000 men householders selected by the mailing agency which addressed the envelopes. The date of mailing was March 8, 1939. All of this was done without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. The letter so sent reads as follows:

"Dearest:

"Don't breathe it to a soul, but I'm back in Los Angeles and more curious than ever to see you. Remember how I cut up about a year ago? Well, I'm raring to go again, and believe me I'm in the mood for fun.

"Let's renew our *aq*uaintanceship and I promise you an evening you won't forget. Meet me in front of Warners Downtown Theatre at 7th and Hill on Thursday. Just look for a girl with a gleam in her eye, a smile on her lips and mischief on her mind!

"Fondly,
"Your ectoplasmic playmate,
"Marion Kerby."

At the time this letter was sent plaintiff was a resident of Los Angeles. At that time and during all of the year 1939 her name and address were listed in the Los Angeles City Directory and in the Los Angeles telephone directory, and she was the only person of that name so listed. The name at the end of this letter, in addition to being that of plaintiff, was also the name of the chief character in two works of fiction previously published and of the chief feminine character in the moving picture above mentioned.

The effects of the sending of this letter in the manner and to the persons above described are not depicted in the record except by an excluded offer of proof and a showing that plaintiff had a large number of telephone calls and a personal visit in regard to it; but no evidence and little imagination and knowledge of human nature are necessary to enable anyone to understand what results should be expected. It could not but lead to misunderstandings between husbands and their wives who saw the letter and put the worst interpretation on it; it would arouse the expectations of lonesome males who were interested in the promised evening; and it must result in telephone calls and other communications from both irate wives and lonesome males and perhaps also from aggrieved but innocent husbands. It would also necessarily affect adversely the reputation of plaintiff with all who might read the letter and suppose her capable of writing and sending it. Apparently the defendants had no foresight in these matters, but they cannot for that reason escape the natural and probable consequences of their acts. The effect of all this on plaintiff does appear; she became terribly excited, nervous, unhappy; she had a feeling of disgrace and anguish; she was heartsick and didn't care what happened, whether she had the rest of a career or not; in the case of a lady caller plaintiff was afraid of being shot. Whereas she had fifteen paid engagements in the twelve months immediately preceding the publication, she had only two in seventeen months thereafter, but the evidence does not certainly show that this was due to the sending of the letter.

[1-3] Does the law refuse all redress to one who has been thus grievously imposed upon and subjected to embarrassment, humiliation and scorn, merely to satisfy the desire of some business concern for publicity? We think not. Plaintiff rests her appeal here for redress upon her right of privacy and we think it may be so supported. The law regarding privacy is of somewhat recent development. In some states the right of privacy is not yet recognized as a justiciable right. But in California it has been accepted as a right the breach of which gives rise to a cause of action. (Melvin v. Reid, 1931, 112 Cal.App. 285, 297 P. 91, 92, where the law on this subject is quite fully discussed.) The case at bar differs in its facts from that just cited and from any other to which our attention has been called in which the right of privacy has been recognized and enforced, but that fact does not necessarily require us to hold that plaintiff has no right of action here. New sets of facts are continually arising to which accepted legal principles must be applied, and the novelty of the factual situation is not an unscalable barrier to such application of the law. As stated in Melvin v. Reid, supra, quoting from another case, "The right of privacy has been defined as the right to live one's life in seclusion, without being subjected to unwarranted and undesired publicity. In short, it is the right to be let alone." The court further said in Melvin v. Reid: "The right to pursue and obtain happiness is guaranteed to all by the fundamental law of our state. This right by its very nature includes the right to live free from the unwarranted attack of others upon one's liberty, property, and reputation. Any person living a life of rectitude has that right to happiness which includes a freedom from unnecessary attacks on his character, social standing, or reputation."

[4, 5] Here the plaintiff was, without her consent, plucked from her regular routine of life and thrust before the world, or at least 1,000 of its persons, as the author of a letter not written by her and of a nature to at least cast doubt on her moral character, and this was done in a manner to call down on her a train of highly undesirable consequences. This constituted as strong an invasion of the right of privacy as any of those described in the cases. As stated in Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 1905, 122 Ga. 190, 50 S.E. 68, 69 L.R.A. 101, 113, 106 Am.St.Rep. 104, 126, 2 Ann.Cas. 561, the right of privacy includes protection against "mortifying notoriety," unless some legal justification for its infliction exists. The desire to advertise a business constitutes no such justification. A similar question was involved in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Vandergriff, 1936, 52 Ga.App. 662, 184 S.E. 452, 454. There the respondent, Vandergriff, who was engaged in the trucking business and seems to have been a large user of tires, sued the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and several of its employees, and the defendants appealed from a judgment against them. One of the individual appellants telephoned to several tire dealers who were competitors of the Goodyear Company, falsely represented to them that the respondent, Vandergriff, was talking and thus obtained from these competitors the confidential prices they would have quoted to Vandergriff. Another of the appellants then telephoned to one of these competitors, objecting to the lowness of the prices so quoted, and falsely informed this competitor that Vandergriff had revealed the prices quoted to him by the competitor. The competitors sent representatives to call on Vandergriff because of the statement that he was in the market for tires, and he was also subjected to embarrassment, chagrin, contempt and ridicule because of this conduct of appellants. On these facts it was held that Vandergriff had a cause of action. While the decision was partly based on a statute forbidding false personation, the court also held that there was an actionable invasion of Vandergriff's right of privacy, citing and following Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., supra, and saying in this connection: "* * * placing the plaintiff in the position of having procured confidential prices on tires, and then betraying the confidence imposed in him by giving the quoted prices to competitors, had 'a tendency to bring the plaintiff into contempt or ridicule,' and 'entitles him to recover, without proof of special damage.'"

In Melvin v. Reid, 1931, supra, 112 Cal. App. 285, 297 P. 91, are listed certain qualifications and limitations of the right of privacy, but the present case does not come within any of them. The plaintiff's position as an actress and concert singer might have afforded justification for some sorts of publicity regarding her greater than that to which persons not so engaged must submit, but it in no wise justified the acts done by the defendants here.

Respondent contends that there is "nothing salacious, suggestive or immoral about the letter." Without going that far, a letter written and circulated as was this one might invade the right of privacy, but we cannot accede to this contention in all respects. To understand the full scope of the imputations made by the sending of the letter we must bear in mind all the circumstances of its sending. Plaintiff's name was signed at the end of it and this constituted an assertion that she had written it. It was handwritten in a feminine hand and on such stationery as women use in private correspondence, thus negativing any idea that it was a matter of business or anything but a personal communication to the addressee. It was sent to 1,000 male householders selected by the mailing agency. It may reasonably be inferred that many of these householders would be married and that few, if any, of them would have a personal acquaintance with plaintiff. The letter itself is of somewhat doubtful implications. While it does not directly assert or invite an improper relation between the writer and the person of the opposite sex to whom it is addressed, no great amount of imagination is necessary to read such a meaning into it, and it is easy to see how the wife of an addressee, if she saw the letter, might have done so. But apart from this, and giving the letter the most innocent meaning its words will reasonably bear, no modest woman of fine feelings and sensibilities would write such a letter as this to men whom she did not know. To suggest that a woman has written such a letter under such circumstances is to impute to her a laxness of character, a coarseness of moral fibre and a willingness to scrape acquaintance for no good purpose; and to spread such imputations abroad, as defendants have done, is as much an invasion of the right of privacy as was the publication of true but derogatory statements in Melvin v. Reid, 1931, supra, 112 Cal.App. 285, 297 P. 91.

[6] Defendants also contend that the letter "is plainly an advertisement and should have been so regarded by any reasonable person," advancing in support of this contention the claim that it was printed and that it fixed no time for the meeting proposed. The exact method by which the letter was reproduced does not appear, but the evidence does show that it was first typewritten, then handwritten by a woman clerk, and that the longhand letter was turned over to an engraving plant by which an engraved plate was made. It is a matter of judicial notice that by such methods prints can be made which, in the absence of close inspection, will pass for original handwriting, and we cannot assume that this letter was obviously a printed one. There is nothing in its words to refer to the motion picture or to warn any reader that it was merely an advertisement or other work of fiction. As to the rendezvous, the letter proposed that it be in the evening "on Thursday." The recipient would easily understand this to mean the next Thursday after receipt of the letter, and this would not be so vague as to make it obvious that frustration would meet any attempt to keep the appointment.

[7,8] As already indicated, the letter was circulated by defendants for the purpose of advertising a moving picture, and as far as appears they had no intent to refer therein to plaintiff and did not know of her existence, although they might easily have discovered it. These facts, which are stressed by defendants, tend to show want of malice and might avert an award of punitive damages, but they constitute no defense to plaintiff's action. The letter did, in fact, refer to plaintiff in clear and definite fashion, and would reasonably have been so understood by anyone who knew of her existence. The wrong complained of is the invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy, and such an invasion is no less real or damaging because the invader supposed he was in other territory. The case bears considerable analogy, both as to the right invaded and the nature of the injury inflicted, to one of libel. It is well established that inadvertence or mistake affords no defense to a charge of libel, where the defamatory publication does, in fact, refer to the plaintiff. Davis v. Hearst, 1911, 160 Cal. 143, 155, 116 P. 530; Taylor v. Hearst, (1895) 107 Cal. 262, 270, 40 P. 392; Restatement, Torts, §§ 564, 579, and comment; Peck v. Tribune Co., 1909, 214 U.S. 185, 29 S.Ct. 554, 53 L.Ed. 960, 16 Ann.Cas. 1075; Corrigan v. Bobbs-Merrill Co., 1920, 228 N.Y. 58, 63, 126 N.E. 260, 262, 10 A.L.R. 662, 666. "The question is not so much who was aimed at as who was hit." Corrigan v. Bobbs-Merrill Co., supra.

[9] The letter complained of here might very well have formed the basis of a charge of libel. It appears to come fully within the definition of libel in section 45 of the Civil Code. A libel need not be a statement directly referring to a person and stating something defamatory about him. It may as well be accomplished by falsely putting words into the mouth or attaching them to the pen of the person defamed and thus imputing to such person a willingness to use them, where the mere fact of having uttered or used the words would produce any of the results enumerated in section 45, supra. Karjavainean v. MacFadden Publications, 1940, 305 Mass. 573, 26 N.E.2d 538; Ben-Oliel v. Press Pub. Co., 1929, 251 N.Y. 250, 167 N.E. 432, 434; Gershwin v. Ethical Pub. Co., 1937, 166 Misc. 39, 1 N.Y.S.2d 904; D'Altomonte v. New York Herald Co., 1913, 154 App.Div. 453, 139 N.Y.S. 200, 202, approved on this point in 208 N.Y. 596, 102 N.E. 1101.

[10] We do not, however, rest our decision on the ground of libel, for several reasons. The appellant has not sought to uphold her action as one for libel, and the complaint, while possibly sufficient to charge a libel, is not so labeled and was obviously not drawn for that purpose. The record does not show whether or not plaintiff complied with the statute (Stats.1871-72 p. 533; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 4317) requiring a bond for costs to be filed in an action for libel or slander, but the facts above recited imbue us with a strong suspicion that she did not; and if such be the case her action, if for libel, would be subject to dismissal on its return to the lower court, unless such bond were filed. Williams v. Superior Court, 1935, 7 Cal.App.2d 436, 45 P.2d 1027; Bried v. Superior Court, 1938, 11 Cal.2d 351, 354, 79 P.2d 1091.

The judgment is reversed.

WILLIAMS v. LAYNE et al.

Civ. 11934.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 29, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑245(83)

Where motorist making a right angle turn at street intersection at night at speed of about 15 miles per hour collided with the rear of an unlighted truck parked on the traveled portion of street about 25 feet from the intersection, whether motorist was guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries sustained was for jury.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)

Jury's finding on the issue of contributory negligence, when supported by substantial evidence, is binding.

3. Automobiles 🔑243(9)

In action for injuries sustained when automobile collided with parked truck, testimony of plaintiff's witness as to whether there were any clearance lights on the truck, as a part of the witness' description of the scene of the accident immediately after it happened, was admissible.

4. Trial 🔑295(1)

Instructions to the jury must be read and considered as a whole.

5. Appeal and error 🔑882(12)
Trial 🔑253(4), 296(4)

An instruction that if defendants' negligence solely and proximately caused collision, plaintiff was entitled to recover for injuries sustained, was not erroneous as eliminating defense of contributory negligence, particularly where such matter was fully covered in other instructions, nor was it erroneous for failure to explain "proximately caused", where such phrase appeared throughout instructions prepared by defendants themselves without any explanation of its meaning.

6. Appeal and error 🔑207

Generally where alleged misconduct is not assigned as error in the trial court at the time the incident occurs, the point is not available on appeal.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1060(4)

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision, an inquiry by plaintiff's attorney on voir dire examination as to whether prospective juror, whose office was in the same building as those of defendants' attorney with whom venireman was well acquainted, was not engaged in the insurance business did not constitute "misconduct" prejudicial to defendants, where damages assessed were not excessive, and defendants' liability under the evidence was not a close question.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

8. Trial 🔑108½

Evidence that defendant is insured against loss is inadmissible and the effort to get such fact before the jury by questions designed for that purpose is improper and may be regarded as prejudicial "misconduct", but such questions may properly be asked as are reasonably necessary to ascertain whether a prospective juror is free from bias or interest, including inquiry as to interest as an agent or stockholder in a specified insurance company or in any company insuring against liability.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1060(4)

A question relating to insurance asked on voir dire, even though improper, cannot be said to have resulted in a "miscarriage of justice" so as to be prejudicial unless amount assessed by jury as damage is disproportionate to that which evidence reasonably shows, or defendant's liability therefor under the evidence is a close question.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Miscarriage of Justice".

10. Appeal and error ⚿1069(1)

"Misconduct" necessitating a new trial could not be predicated on statements made by juror in the presence of two other jurors, the court reporter and the bailiff during a recess in the trial, where no reference was made in the conversation to the case on trial or the facts involved therein.

11. Appeal and error ⚿1069(1)

Where it is shown that jurors have improperly talked to each other about the case before its final submission, a new trial is not justified unless it appears that prejudice to the substantial rights of a party resulted therefrom.

12. Appeal and error ⚿1004(4)

Reviewing court may not set aside jury's award of damages as excessive merely because court's opinion is at variance with that of the jurors, but may do so only where the excess appears as a matter of law or where the recovery is so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it is the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption rather than honest and sober judgment.

13. Damages ⚿131(1)

An award of $2,500 to a woman 64 years of age formerly employed as cook and housekeeper at a salary of $50 per month plus board and room was not excessive where injuries to back, shoulders, neck and right side caused severe pain and had incapacitated her for manual labor of any kind at the time of trial one year after accident and for the four months prior thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Aylett R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by Bessie Williams against Roy Layne and another for personal injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile collided with the parked truck of defendants. From a judgment entered upon a verdict in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

F. E. Hoffmann, of San Mateo, for appellants.

Norman S. Menifee, of Redwood City, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Defendants parked their truck on Waverly Street close to the corner of Dexter Street, just south of Redwood City, and allowed it to remain there after dark without lights. About 9 o'clock that night the plaintiff while driving alone in her automobile collided with the rear end of the truck, and on account of the personal injuries received she brought this action for damages and a jury returned a verdict in her favor for $2,500. From the judgment entered thereon the defendants appeal. They make no claim that they were not negligent, but as first ground of appeal urge that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in failing to observe the presence of the truck before she collided with it, and that therefore their motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. The point is without merit.

It appears from the evidence that on the evening in question plaintiff had been visiting her daughter at the latter's home on the south side of Dexter Street, which runs east and west. She parked her car on the same side of the street about 30 or 40 feet from and facing the corner of Waverly Street, which runs north and south, and about 9 o'clock she started to drive home. In rounding the corner into Waverly Street she ran into the rear end of the truck which was parked about 25 feet from the corner on the west side of Waverly Street parallel with the curb, with all four wheels on the traveled portion of the street and without lights, admittedly in violation of law. The evidence is conflicting as to whether the truck was equipped with a rear end reflector, but in this connection it shows that the back of the truck was so covered with mud that neither glass nor metal of any type were visible. At the time of the impact plaintiff was still driving in low gear, about 15 miles an hour, with her headlights burning, giving visibility for at least 60 feet; but her failure to see the truck can be readily accounted for by the fact that as she rounded the corner the lights of her car did not focus on the truck in time to avoid colliding with it.

[1, 2] Under the foregoing circumstances the question of contributory negligence was one of pure fact for the jury to decide, and the granting of a nonsuit would have been reversible error. Gammon v. Wales, 115 Cal.App. 133, 300 P. 988; Smyth v. Harris & Devine, 3 Cal.App.2d 194, 38 P.2d 862. Furthermore, since it appears that the jury's determination on that issue is supported by substantial evidence, it is binding on appeal. Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., 107 Cal.App. 467, 290 P. 684; Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 265, 36 P.2d 701; Casey v. Gritsch, 1 Cal.App.2d 206, 36 P.2d 696. There is no similarity between the facts of this case and those involved in Pate v. Pickwick Stages System, 125 Cal.App. 670, 14 P.2d 174, cited by defendants; but the decision therein may be taken as supporting plaintiff's position here that when there is substantial evidence supporting the finding of a jury on the issue of negligence, its finding is binding on appeal.

[3] There was no error in overruling defendants' objection to a question propounded to one of plaintiff's witnesses as to whether there were any clearance lights on the truck. The testimony elicited was part of the witness's description of the scene of the accident immediately after it happened, and therefore was clearly admissible.

[4, 5] The Court gave an instruction to the effect that if the jury found that at the time of the collision the defendants were violating any of the provisions of the Vehicle Code referred to in the instructions, then defendants were guilty of negligence as a matter of law, and that if it further found that such negligence "solely and proximately caused the collision" plaintiff was entitled to a verdict in her favor. Defendants contend that the instruction is objectionable for two reasons: That it eliminated from the consideration of the jury the defense of contributory negligence, and that it did not explain the term "proximately caused." Neither point is well taken. The instructions must be read and considered as a whole, and it appears therefrom that at defendants' request the court gave several instructions expounding the law upon the defense of contributory negligence, wherein the jury was definitely and properly instructed that if it found "by a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, proximately contributing to the accident" she was not entitled to damages, and its "verdict must be in favor of the defendants." It must be assumed, therefore, that the jury gave full consideration to the instructions so given. Even standing alone the instruction complained of was not erroneous because as will be noted the jury was in effect told that if the accident was proximately caused by the sole negligence of the defendants plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; and such is doubtless the law. With respect to the second point, the record shows that throughout these same instructions, which defendants themselves proposed, they employed the term "proximately caused." If, therefore, as they now claim, the use of that term required explanation, an appropriate instruction to accomplish that purpose should have been offered by them along with their other instructions.

During the voir dire examination of a prospective juror he stated that his office and those of defendants' attorney were in the same building; that he knew said attorney quite well, and saw him every day. He was then asked this question: "You are also in the insurance business, aren't you, Mr. Signarowitz?" and he replied, "Yes, sir." Defendants' attorney then stated: "I cannot ask Mr. Signarowitz anything. I have known him for ten years." Thereupon the juror was excused peremptorily by counsel for plaintiff. No objection whatever was interposed to the quoted question, nor was any complaint or assignment of misconduct made as to the asking thereof; but defendants now contend that the asking thereof constituted prejudicial misconduct.

[6-9] It is held generally that where alleged misconduct is not assigned as error in the trial court at the time the incident takes place, the point is not available on appeal. Wills v. J. J. Newberry Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 595, 111 P.2d 346, citing numerous authorities; Aydlott v. Key System Transit Co., 104 Cal.App. 621, 286 P. 456. However, regardless of the failure here to make timely complaint, there was no impropriety in asking the question. As said in Coursault v. Schwebel, 118 Cal.App. 259, 5 P.2d 77, 80, "While it has been held that evidence that the defendant is insured against loss is not admissible, and that it would be improper for counsel to endeavor to get such fact before the jury by questions designed for that purpose, and that any unfairness in that respect might be regarded as prejudicial misconduct (Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700), nevertheless, it is entirely proper to ask such questions as may be reasonably necessary to ascertain whether a prospective juror is free from bias or interest, and to this end to ask whether he is interested as an agent or stockholder in a specified insurance company, or the question whether he is interested in any company insuring against liability. Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171." Here the question propounded did not go beyond that legitimate purpose. It implied nothing more than that besides having offices in the same building with counsel for defendant the venireman was engaged in the insurance business and that therefore he was not acceptable to plaintiff as a juror. As said also in Coursault v. Schwebel, supra, it has been held that a question relating to the matter of insurance, even conceding its impropriety, "cannot be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, unless the amount assessed by the jury as damage is disproportionate to that which the evidence reasonably shows, or defendant's liability therefor under the evidence is a close question. Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., supra; Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Const. Co., 75 Cal.App. 516, 243 P. 43." Neither of those conditions is here present.

[10, 11] Entirely without merit is defendants' charge that certain members of the jury were guilty of misconduct during the trial. The charge is based on a statement made by one of the jurors during a conversation which took place on the morning of the second day of the trial, during a court recess, in the hall just outside the court chambers, at which were present two other jurors, the court reporter and the bailiff. The only testimony concerning the conversation was given by the court reporter and the bailiff in chambers soon after the conversation took place, and both testified positively that no reference whatever was made to the present case or to any of the facts involved. Even where it is shown that jurors have improperly talked to each other about the case before its final submission, a new trial is not justified unless it appears that prejudice to the substantial rights of a party resulted therefrom. MacPherson v. West Coast Transit Co., 94 Cal.App. 463, 271 P. 509. Here, however, as stated, no reference whatever was made in the conversation to the present case.

[12, 13] Defendants' final contention is that the amount of damages awarded was grossly excessive. The record suggests no legal reason for so holding. Even though the award could be deemed generous, it is the well settled law that reviewing courts are not authorized to set aside an award of damages made by a jury as excessive merely because the opinion of the court is at variance with that of the jurors. It is only where the excess appears as a matter of law, or where the recovery is so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it is the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, rather than honest and sober judgment, that the court may exercise this power. 8 Cal.Jur. 834, and cases cited. At the time of the accident, which occurred in April, 1940, plaintiff was 64 years of age, and working on a dairy, doing housework and the cooking for several men. She received $50 a month and her board and room. As the result of the accident she suffered no broken bones, but sustained severe and extremely painful injuries to her back, shoulders, neck and right side, which at the time of the trial in April, 1941, and for the preceding four months incapacitated her from accepting any kind of employment. She was in constant pain, unable to bend over or do any lifting, or perform any kind of manual labor. Between the date of the accident and the time of trial she had consulted two doctors, and while her condition was not such as required hospitalization, she suffered constantly from severe pain which she partially relieved by taking opiates. On the second day after the accident she visited her doctor, and while she did not quit her employment at the dairy, she was unable to continue with the housework. With some assistance she carried on the cooking until December, 1940, when the dairy went out of business. Thereafter she tried other jobs, but was unable to work, and as stated, for four months preceding the trial had been unable to follow any gainful occupation and was compelled to make her home with her daughter. If her testimony is true, the jury was justified in concluding therefrom that her injuries were not of a temporary nature, and if not temporary it cannot be said that the amount of the award was excessive. The jury had full opportunity to observe her while she gave her testimony at the trial, and it was properly instructed on the matter of damages. Evidently it believed she was not a malingerer, but on the contrary that she told the truth concerning her physical condition and inability to work. The trial judge was afforded an equal opportunity with the jury to observe plaintiff's physical condition and weigh her testimony; and the fact that in disposing of the motion for new trial the amount of the jury's award was allowed to stand demonstrates that he considered it not excessive; moreover it cannot be said that plaintiff's testimony is inherently improbable. Such being the state of the record, it is not within our province as a reviewing court to disturb the amount of the jury's award.

The judgment is affirmed.

Complaint alleging that all stock of corporate defendant was owned by individual defendant, that corporate board of directors consisted of individual, his wife, and daughter, that individual was sole owner of all of business and assets of corporation and controlled the corporation, its business, property, and affairs, and that corporation was operated by individual to divert profits to his own use and avoid individual obligations, and that plaintiff was hired at an agreed compensation, but was not permitted to continue with work for corporation, stated a cause of action for breach of contract against individual as well as against corporation.

An individual may not hide behind a corporation entity when there is such a community of ownership that the individual is, in fact, the corporation, and when, under such circumstances, to observe the fiction of corporate ownership would work injustice on others.

3. Corporations 🔑1

Before the acts and obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, it must appear that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, of such person and the corporation has ceased, and that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of separate existence of the corporation would sanction a fraud or promote injustice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain and B. Rey Schauer, Judges.

Action by John X. Loughran against James G. Reynolds and another to recover damages for breach of contract. From a judgment in favor of the named defendant after the trial court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint without leave to amend, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Wolfson & Swetow, of Los Angeles, and Abraham Setzer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Stanley M. Arndt, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

In this action for damages for breach of contract, judgment was rendered in favor of a defendant in his individual capacity, after the trial court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint without leave to amend. The effect of the judgment was to leave a corporate defendant in the case and to release an individual sued on the same cause of action.

There is no question but that the complaint states a cause of action as to damages. The only possible contention is whether or not the facts alleged in the complaint apply to the individual defendant and are sufficient as a pleading to establish that the cause of action as against him arose out of his operations through the agency of a corporation as his alter ego.

The complaint alleges that all of the subscribed, issued, and outstanding capital stock of the corporate defendant was three shares and that the individual defendant was the owner of all of it; that the corporate board of directors consisted of three persons, the individual defendant, his wife, and his daughter; that the individual defendant was the sole and exclusive owner of all of the business and assets of the corporate defendant; that he alone controlled the corporation, its business, property and affairs; that the corporation "has been and is now a mere shell and naked corporate framework," which the individual defendant used "for the conduct of his personal business, property, and affairs." It is next alleged that the corporation was created and continued in existence pursuant to a plan on the part of the individual defendant whereby he diverted the income, revenue, and profits thereof to his own use, in order to avoid his individual obligations, and in particular his individual obligation as alleged in the complaint. For cause of action for damages against both defendants, the complaint alleges the hiring of the plaintiff at an agreed compensation, refusal on the part of the defendants to permit him to continue with the work for which he was hired, and damages ex contractu in the sum of $39,264.00.

[1] The complaint states a cause of action as against both the corporate defendant and the individual defendant operating through the agency of the corporation. The general demurrer should have been overruled. If upon the trial of this case, the plaintiff should prevail upon the merits, and if it should then develop that all of the property of the corporation had been diverted to the individual defendant so that the plaintiff could not enforce his judgment against the corporation, it is clear that injustice would result.

[2] No man may hide behind a corporation entity when there is such a community of ownership that he is in fact the corporation, and when under such circumstances to observe the fiction of corporate ownership would work injustice upon other men. Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 155 P. 986; Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918; Continental Securities & Investment Co. v. Rawson, 208 Cal. 228, 280 P. 954; D. N. & E. Walter & Co. v. Zuckerman, 214 Cal. 418, 6 P.2d 251, 79 A.L.R. 329; Watson v. Commonwealth Insurance Co., 8 Cal.2d 61, 63 P.2d 295; Mirabito v. Chanslor, 209 Cal. 241, 286 P. 1001; Hollywood C. & P. Co. v. Hollywood L. Service, Inc., 217 Cal. 124, 17 P.2d 709; Wiseman v. Sierra Highland Min. Co., 17 Cal.2d 690, 111 P.2d 646.

[3] The rule which is determinative in this case is well stated in Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, at page 487, 202 P. 673, at page 676: "Before the acts and obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, the following combination of circumstances must be made to appear: First, that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, or separateness, of the said person and corporation has ceased; second, that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice. [Citing cases.]" This rule is repeated and approved in the later case of Continental Securities, etc., Co. v. Rawson, 208 Cal. 228, at page 238, 280 P. 954. In effect this rule has been applied in every case above cited. Sometimes the facts of a particular case did not establish the alter ego relationship; sometimes they did.

Upon reading the complaint in the present case, it is evident that facts are alleged from which it appears that the corporate defendant was solely influenced and governed by the individual defendant; that there was as between them a unity of interest and ownership; and that under the circumstances particular to this case as pleaded, an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would sanction fraud and promote injustice.

Rehearing denied. For prior opinion see 126 P.2d 911.

Thos. J. Straub, W. H. Spaulding, and John J. Briare, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. H. Werdel, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Defendant has petitioned for a rehearing and has urged rather pointedly that the statement of facts set forth in the opinion filed in this case is not fair to it.

The testimony quoted in the opinion appears in the record exactly as quoted. It is true that in other parts of the testimony of the same witnesses the force of the quoted evidence was weakened.

Another witness testified concerning the soapsuds test as follows:

"Q. All you saw was soapsuds on the pipe and little bubbles on the soap? A. Coming up from the pipe.

"Q. What do you mean by that? A. Where they put it on the pipe there was bubbles.

"Q. Wasn't there bubbles all along the pipe where the soap was applied? A. No sir.

"Q. Did you ever use that method? A. Yes.

"Q. Whenever you apply soapsuds aren't there always bubbles? A. Yes, but they don't come up from the pipe." This witness also testified that he did not know if the bubbles increased in size.

[1, 2] Contradictions and inconsistencies in the testimony of a witness go to the weight of his evidence and to his credibility and are matters settled before the case reaches the appellate court. Here the jury evidently accepted parts of the evidence offered in behalf of plaintiff as true. This was its privilege. Angelo v. Esau, 34 Cal. App.2d 130, 93 P.2d 205. The trial judge evidently agreed with the jury except as to the amount of the damages, because he denied the motion for new trial.

[3] If we are correct in our understanding of the rules to the effect that the credibility of witnesses, the weight to be given to their evidence and conflicts in the evidence are addressed to and settled by the jury and the trial judge, and not on appeal, and that on appeal all reasonable inferences from the evidence must be drawn in favor of the prevailing party, we cannot agree with counsel for defendant that there is no substantial evidence supporting the verdict and judgment. This is true even though we are of the opinion that we would have granted the motion for new trial had we been sitting in the trial court.

Defendant urges that we have overemphasized the testimony of the expert called by plaintiff on the cause of the explosion. It is true that he did not use the expression that "in all probability" the explosion was caused by gas vapors being ignited by the electric spark from the switch. We have reviewed his evidence and it is seemingly apparent from all of it that he believed the explosion to have been caused by gas. He stated several times that, in his opinion, there was the greater probability that the explosion had been caused by the escaping gas rather than by escaping gasoline fumes although he could not eliminate the possibility of the latter having caused it. When all of his testimony is considered as a whole, the statement that it was the opinion of this witness that in all probability the explosion was caused by gas does not seem to be an unfair inference to be drawn.

[4] The questions of the sufficiency of the evidence, the credibility of the witnesses, the weight to be given their testimony and conflicts in the evidence are addressed to the jury in the first instance and next to the trial judge on the motion for new trial. Clippinger v. Reiss, 17 Cal.App.2d 604, 62 P.2d 418; Sassano v. Roullard, 27 Cal.App.2d 372, 81 P.2d 213. This is one of the cases where our study of the record has caused us to feel that the motion for new trial should have been granted. The jury having returned a verdict for plaintiff and the trial judge having denied the motion for new trial we cannot reverse the judgment even though the study of the record leads us to believe that the preponderance of the evidence is with the defendant.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Kenneth E. Morrison, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Luther Lindauer, deceased. Gold E. Lindauer, as administrator with the will annexed, etc., rendered to the court his final account, and Mildred Ewing, judgment creditor, filed her objection thereto. From a judgment decreeing distribution and from an order settling final account, the judgment creditor appeals.

Affirmed.

Oliver M. Hickey and Alfred J. Smallberg, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Riley M. Reed, of La Habra, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Luther Lindauer died August 11, 1936, leaving his wife Lucy Lindauer as surviving joint tenant and sole devisee and executrix of his will. She died on August 11, 1940. Their son, Gold E. Lindauer, was appointed administrator with the will annexed August 30, 1940. The joint tenancy property was appraised by the State Inheritance Tax Appraiser at $128,990, and the probate property, being separate and community property, was appraised at $39,305.34. On July 10, 1939, Lucy Lindauer, as executrix, filed her account current, which came on for hearing August 7, 1939, before Hon. G. K. Scovel, judge of the Superior Court of Orange county. Apparently, the account current set forth certain statutory attorneys' fees and fees for extraordinary services and executrix' fees that were claimed to have been paid by the executrix based on the original appraisal of the property. It also contained an account of claimed payment by her of state and federal inheritance taxes. In dispute was a claim filed by Gold E. Lindauer for $5,000 against the estate which was disallowed in its entirety. The account current also set forth a claim for moneys advanced by the executrix for which she asked credit, covering costs, expenses of last sickness, funeral expenses, taxes paid on the estate property, and mortgages paid off. It was stipulated between the attorneys of record that the executrix, during her administration of the affairs of the estate, did not keep the funds of the estate in a separate account at the bank, but commingled the funds of the estate with her personal funds. The decree settling the account current recites that: "On this 7th day of August, 1939, the account current * * * came on for hearing. * * * Mildred Ewing, a creditor, having filed objections to said account and report, * * * and Oliver M. Hickey and Alfred J. Smallberg appearing for Mildred Ewing and all parties announced ready, the court, after hearing the evidence," found certain deductions should be made from the appraised value of the estate which was appraised at $39,305.34, leaving the appraised value at $32,430.34, and ordered that the attorneys' fees allowed by law and executrix's commissions be computed upon that sum rather than the sum shown in the original appraisal. It specifically decreed: "(2) that the executrix is entitled to the sum of $978.60, and Riley M. Reed is entitled to the sum of $978.60 as attorneys' fees allowed by law; that $350.00 of said attorneys' fees have been paid, leaving a balance of $628.60, which is hereby allowed. (3) That Riley M. Reed and Thomas L. McFadden are entitled to the sum of $500.00 attorneys' fees extraordinary, for representing the executrix in the cause of Mildred Ewing vs. Lucy Lindauer, executrix * * * which fees are hereby allowed and the said Riley M. Reed is entitled to the further sum of $300.00 as attorney's fees extraordinary for additional services performed for said executrix to date of said account." The court then decreed that the executrix was entitled to credits for the advancements she had made for costs, expenses of last sickness and funeral expenses, taxes paid, including federal inheritance taxes in the sum of $1,162.30, and state inheritance taxes in the sum of $545.86. As thus corrected, the court ordered the account be allowed and settled and ordered the claims and credits above listed to be paid in the course of administration together with such other credits as may become due and that any balance or residue remaining should be applied on the judgment of Mildred Ewing. This decree was dated August 11, 1939. No appeal was taken from this decree.

On May 5, 1941, Gold E. Lindauer, as administrator with the will annexed, rendered to the court his final account, and after setting forth the assets as originally appraised, and chargeable to Lucy Lindauer, as executrix of said estate, claimed to be entitled to credits for the items allowed in the account current as of July 10, 1939, for costs, including $350 on attorneys' fees to Riley M. Reed, expenses of last sickness, funeral expenses, taxes paid, federal inheritance taxes, state inheritance taxes, commissions and statutory attorneys' fees, as well as extraordinary fees, all in the same amounts as allowed in the account current. He then listed certain expenses and expenditures since July 10, 1939, for which he claimed credit, which did not include any of the above listed items allowed in the account current or for any further claim for statutory fees for himself or for the attorney.

On May 21, 1941, appellant, as a judgment creditor, appeared through her counsel and filed her objections to the final account claiming (1) that the statutory fees of counsel and of the executrix were improperly computed in that the computation did not take into consideration an existing obligation against the realty in the estate in the sum of $8,000, nor did it take into consideration the re-appraisal value of the property; that the fees in question should have been predicated on the total charges as they appeared after the re-appraisal, and minus the mortgage lien in the sum of $8,000, which would make a net sum of $13,576.58 on which fees should be predicated. (2) That the executor and administrator filed no claim for moneys loaned or advanced to the estate to discharge the certain particular claims entitled to preference and that they should not therefore be reimbursed for same. (3) That 14 shares of certain water stock claimed to be valued at $750 should be considered as an asset of the estate subject to the payment of appellant's claim. (4) That the final account upon its face shows that payment of state and federal inheritance taxes were predicated upon the sum of $39,305.34, whereas, they should have been predicated on the sum of $11,081.07. (5) That the payments of the obligations of the estate were not made by the executrix or administrator with the will annexed in their official capacity because they did not deposit the funds of the estate to the credit of the estate, but on the contrary, commingled the estate funds with their private funds without an order or direction of the court, and that whatever payments they made in their individual capacity must be considered as payments made by a volunteer. It is then claimed that the final account should be corrected accordingly and that the remaining assets of the estate would then be sufficient to discharge the claim of the appellant.

On June 9, 1941, all parties appeared. The court found: (1) That all items in the final account and report, including the items objected to by the objector, were correct, and that the credits shown in the account and report to which the administrator was entitled represented expenditures for funeral expenses and last illness, costs of administration, taxes and liens on properties, and expenditures for the preservation of the estate, and were properly allowable. (2) that the shares of water stock were assets of the estate, and according to stipulation, valued at $310. (The decree of distribution shows that this stock was "issued to Elizabeth G. Worth, pledgee, for Lucy Lindauer, as executrix of Luther Lindauer, deceased.") (3) That the claims and credits of the administrator set forth in the final account are preferred in order of payment over the claim of the objector Mildred Ewing; that as such claims and credits exceed the sum total of the net proceeds from the sale of the property of the estate and said sum of $310, valuation of the water stock, the administrator is entitled to have such proceeds applied on his credits, and the heirs of the estate are entitled to have the said water stock distributed to them.

On June 16, 1941, the order settling the final account and decreeing distribution was entered accordingly. From this order and decree the judgment creditor has appealed.

[1, 2] The questions now raised on appeal involve practically the same questions presented on objections to the allowance of the account current. The question in respect to the right of the legal representatives of an estate to commingle funds of the estate with their private funds and then urge a claim against the estate for claimed advancements without a previous order of the court, has been considered in this state. Estate of Smith, 118 Cal. 462, 50 P. 701. It appears from the record that Lucy Lindauer, as executrix, received upon her appointment, cash in the sum of $935.34, and to the date of filing of the account current, she received from the sale of avocados $1,623.83; from the sale of realty $2,298.20; and from the sale of Lindauer Corporation stock $200; a total of $5,057.37; that up to said date she paid out for costs of administration, funeral and expenses of last illness, taxes, caring for property, and on mortgages and inheritance taxes, the sum of $10,150.41. It cannot be said that the executrix profited by such transactions or injured any interested party. Appellant makes no claim of wrong-doing or injury. Where the legal representative, in good faith, makes proper expenditures for the estate, either from his own funds or from estate funds, without order of court, he is entitled to credit. In the absence of bad faith or abuse of discretion by the trial judge, the appellate court will not interfere with the action of the trial judge. § 929, Probate Code; Estate of Maddalena, 42 Cal.App.2d 12, 108 P.2d 17.

[3] The remaining contentions of appellant may be considered under one heading, i. e., the determination of the amount of and the allowance of attorneys' fees, executor's fees, payment of state and federal inheritance taxes, payments on mortgages paid by the executor or ordered paid by the court, and the other items about which appellant complains. These items were all contained in the account current and considered by the trial court upon the hearing after notice to and after the opposition thereto was presented by the appellant on the hearing of the account current. The order approving this account current was an appealable order. § 1240, Probate Code. Apparently appellant consented to the allowances there made or failed to appeal from the order allowing and approving such account current containing these items. Our research of the authorities reaches but one conclusion. The failure to appeal therefrom now bars appellant from a consideration of those matters on an appeal from the order approving the final account. Directly in point is Estate of Richards, 17 Cal.2d 259, 109 P.2d 923.

[4-6] The Probate Court has exclusive jurisdiction upon the settlement of the account, after notice to the parties interested, to determine what items of expenditure incurred during administration are proper charges against the estate. Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85, 99 Am.Dec. 352. The court in passing upon such expenditures is vested with a broad discretion whch will not be disturbed on appeal except when abused. Estate of Parker, 186 Cal. 668, 200 P. 619. Where payment of claims is credited in a current account and such account is allowed and settled by the court, the order allowing it is not void, but is an appealable order which, however ill allowed or erroneous, becomes conclusive upon unpaid creditors who do not appeal therefrom. § 931 Probate Code; Estate of Fernandez, 119 Cal. 579, 51 P. 851; Estate of King, 19 Cal.2d 354, 360, 121 P.2d 716, and cases cited.

[7] Assuming the correctness of appellant's contention that the trial court erred in allowing statutory attorney's and executor's fees in excess of the amount due at the time of the filing of the account current (§ 911, Probate Code), or that the trial court failed to take into consideration the mortgage indebtedness in fixing the value of the property for the purpose of determining the proper statutory fees, as the record apparently discloses (§ 901 Probate Code; Estate of Lampman, 15 Cal.2d 212, 100 P.2d 488), or that certain portions of the federal and state inheritance taxes were probably not directly chargeable to the estate, or that certain credits were not properly due the executor, it nevertheless appears that all of these matters were presented in the account current. Appellant appeared and contested them or at least made no objection thereto, and failed to appeal from the order approving the account. She is now barred from raising the same questions there presented on a collateral attack on an appeal from an order approving the final account. Estate of Richards, supra.

[8] Finally, appellant contends that respondent's answer to appellant's objections to the final account does not set forth a defense based upon the ground that appellant was barred from again raising the questions presented by reason of the decree settling the account current; that therefore respondent waived his right to rely upon the doctrine of estoppel or res adjudicata and cannot raise that question for the first time on appeal, citing Semple v. Ware, 42 Cal. 619; Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 P. 84. We only have before us the judgment roll and bill of exceptions upon which to consider the point presented. The record fully sets forth the fact that all of the items complained of were allowed in the account current and no appeal was taken from that order. A copy of respondent's claimed answer to appellant's objections does not, in direct terms, raise the particular issue here argued, but the answer does contain the allegation that the "administrator says that all items of credit set out in the account current, and decree settling account current, and set out in the final account filed herein, are preferred in the order of payment over the judgment claim of said Mildred Ewing." Whether the trial court tried the issues there presented upon the theory that appellant was barred by reason of the former order cannot be here considered as the entire record is not before us. We must therefore conclude, in support of the judgment, that it was so considered. The final judgment recites that the "final account is correct"; that the allegations in the petition for distribution are true; that all claims against the estate are paid except the claims of the administrator as set out in said final account and the claim of the said Mildred Ewing; that the claims of the administrator are preferred in the order of payment over the claim of the said Mildred Ewing; and that the total funds and proceeds of said estate, including proceeds from sale of said stock, were it sold, are not sufficient to satisfy the claims of the administrator.

The allegations of the final account establish the fact, in themselves, that the items complained of were approved in a former account. The judgment roll, the record on appeal, and the approved bill of exceptions contain the decree and order approving the account current so establishing that fact. The entire record, including the former order, were all properly before the court for consideration when the final account was approved. Further pleadings on this subject, under these circumstances, were unnecessary. From the record it cannot be said that the question of estoppel or res adjudicata was not properly pleaded or was improperly presented for the first time on appeal.

[9] Just why the trial court distributed the water stock, valued at $310, the only remaining asset of the estate, to the heirs, is not ascertainable from the record. There is some indication that the stock was being held as a pledge. It would appear that any remaining assets of the estate should ordinarily be sold to satisfy first the preferred creditors and then the others according to preference. §§ 750, 754 and 950, Probate Code. In the account current, and again approved in the final account, the court found that the estate was still indebted to the executor for advances made by her to the estate in payment of preferred claims in a sum in excess of $2,500. As appellant could not, therefore, benefit if said water stock was sold for the benefit of creditors, she would not have any preference, under her claim, to the proceeds of the sale of the water stock, if made. She therefore cannot be heard to complain in this respect, on appeal, as she would neither be injured nor benefited if the order of distribution of the water shares to the heirs was erroneous.

The order and decree are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Sibbilla B. Worrall, deceased, wherein a will was offered for probate by Charles Eugene Allen, as executor, etc., and others, opposed by Albert Edson Worrall. From the judgment upholding the will Albert Edson Worrall appeals.

Affirmed.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying a contest of a will and admitting the will to probate.

On September 22, 1939, in a proceeding brought under section 1460 of the Probate Code, Sibbilla B. Worrall was declared to be incompetent and "incapable of taking care of herself and/or managing her property," and a guardian for her estate was appointed. She was then 86 years old. A proceeding for restoration to capacity brought under section 1470 of that Code was unsuccessful and was dismissed on February 21, 1940. On June 14, 1940, she executed the will in question, leaving two-thirds of her estate to her daughter and the other one-third to her son and certain grandchildren, share and share alike. The will was offered for probate and the son contested upon the grounds of incapacity to make a will and of undue influence. At the trial, he carefully refrained from offering any evidence as to the competency or capacity of his mother at the time the will was executed and relied entirely on the record of the two guardianship proceedings, to which we have referred. From the judgment upholding the will, he has appealed.

The appellant contends that since this will was executed at a time when the judgment or decree in the guardianship proceeding was still in force, that judgment was conclusive with respect to her capacity to make a will and that the court, therefore, erred in receiving and acting upon evidence as to whether or not she was of sound and disposing mind and memory at the time the will was executed. It is argued that this necessarily follows from a proper interpretation of section 40 of the Civil Code. That section originally read:

"After his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor delegate any power, nor waive any right, until his restoration to capacity is judicially determined. But if actually restored to capacity, he may make a will, though his restoration is not thus determined." (Italics ours.)

The italicized portion was eliminated by an amendment in 1878 and the following substituted: "But a certificate from the medical superintendent or resident physician of the insane asylum to which such person may have been committed, showing that such person had been discharged therefrom, cured and restored to reason, shall establish the presumption of legal capacity in such person from the time of such discharge."

It is argued that the first part of this section, which has not been amended, prohibits such a person from making a will until he has been restored to capacity, since a will is a delegation of power; that the section originally contained an exception allowing one who has been actually restored to capacity to make a will although such restoration had not been judicially determined; and that the elimination of this exception by the amendment of 1878 leaves the first part of the section in full force, prohibiting such a person from making a will while the adjudication of incapacity remains in force, with a result that is conclusive in this case.

[1, 2] In our opinion, this interpretation of section 40 of the Civil Code and the effect of the 1878 amendment thereto cannot be sustained. If appellant's interpretation were to be accepted, section 40 of the Civil Code would be in conflict with the spirit and effect of section 20 of the Probate Code as the latter section has been consistently interpreted in this state. Under that interpretation, an inquiry into the factual situation with respect to testamentary capacity at the time the will was executed has always been allowed. Even an insane person may make a will during lucid intervals if the facts disclose the required elements of capacity at the time in question.

[3] It is unnecessary, however, to hold that there is any conflict between section 40 of the Civil Code and section 20 of the Probate Code. Section 40 of the Civil Code appears as one of a number of sections relating to the making of contracts and conveyances, and the main purpose in adopting section 40 was to cover activities of that nature on the part of persons adjudged to be of unsound mind. When that section was adopted in 1872, as now, other sections provided not only for the appointment of a guardian, both in cases of insanity and where the person in question was mentally incapable of managing his property, but also provided who might make a will. The Legislature may have had this in mind when, in adopting section 40 in 1872, it added the provision which it eliminated in 1878. In any event, that provision very clearly stated that the requirement for a judicial restoration to capacity, which applied to prohibited conveyances, contracts and delegations of power, should not apply with respect to testamentary capacity, which was left to be determined as a question of fact. The provision thus was consistent with other statutes, and not only recognized that different elements of capacity are involved in making a will and in determining whether a person is in a degree of mental weakness which may cause him to fall prey to designing persons, but its inclusion indicates that the preceding provisions were not intended to control upon the matter of testamentary capacity.

It seems rather clear that originally it was not intended to make the provisions of section 40 which still remain, applicable to testamentary capacity. The section was adopted for quite another purpose, and the reference to making a will was probably inserted as a matter of precaution to make sure it would not be understood as applying thereto. The elimination of all reference to the making of wills, in 1878, and the substitution of a provision for presumptive restoration to capacity in certain cases, indicate an intention to somewhat relax the requirement for judicial restoration in cases where the facts naturally warrant this being done, rather than an intent to extend the conclusive effect of an adjudication of incompetency to a field which it had never been intended to cover, regardless of the actual facts in that connection and of other rules applicable thereto. By omitting all reference to wills, through the 1878 amendment, it may have been intended to more fully carry out the original intent of the section by eliminating any possible prima facie effect of an adjudication of incompetency, since the statute was not designed to cover and affect the matter of testamentary capacity. See In re Estate of Johnson, 57 Cal. 529. Be that as it may, it would reasonably appear that this amendment was not intended to completely change the original purpose of the section by so extending it as to give it a conclusive effect over matters which it had expressly excluded from its scope and which were otherwise covered and provided for.

This interpretation is in line with the decisions of the courts of this state. In re Estate of Johnson, 200 Cal. 299, 252 P. 1049, 1051, involved a contest of a will executed after the testator had been adjudged incompetent to manage her property and a guardian had been appointed. While the contestant in that case was successful the question as to the effect of the prior adjudication of incompetency was presented and considered. The court there said: "The court instructed the jury that the adjudications of March 22, 1922, and January 31, 1923, declaring the decedent to be an incompetent person in the guardianship proceedings, were 'prima facie evidence of want of testamentary capacity' on the dates of said orders. It is urged that such was not the legal effect of such orders. We are cited to no authority in this state, and we have discovered none since the amendment of section 40 of the Civil Code in 1878, holding that an adjudication of incompetency in a guardianship proceeding raises a presumption of testamentary incapacity or is even prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity. [In re] Estate of Johnson, 57 Cal. 529, construed said section 40 prior to its amendment. Proof of incompetency in a guardianship proceeding is evidence of mental condition on the date of the adjudication but it is not prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity so as to shift the burden of proof to the proponent of the will. [In re] Estate of Loveland [162 Cal. 595, 123 P. 801], supra; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448, 15 N.W. 545. Notwithstanding the erroneous use of the term 'prima facie' in the instruction complained of, we are of the opinion that the appellants were not prejudiced thereby, in view of the fact that the court elsewhere fully instructed the jury that said adjudications of incompetency in the guardianship proceedings did not necessarily mean that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of such adjudications, or that she was not ther competent to make a valid will * * *. When considered as a whole, we think the jury was made clearly to understand that, notwithstanding the several adjudications, the burden of proving unsoundness of mind on the date of the alleged will was always on the contestant."

The appellant argues that views exactly opposite to those just quoted were expressed in the later case of Hellman Commercial T. & S. Bk. v. Alden, 206 Cal. 592, 275 P. 794, 799, where the court said: "The adjudication of mental incapacity therefore applies to both the insane and the incompetent, regardless of the character or degree of the mental derangement. No further evidence of mental incapacity is required under our statute while such a decree remains in full force and effect." It is argued that this is a holding that a prior adjudication of mental incapacity is conclusive, that no other evidence of mental capacity is required or may be received, and that this is determinative of the problem now before us. No such effect can be given the language of the Hellman decision thus relied on. In using that language the court was considering and discussing an endorsement and transfer of a cashier's check by a person then under an adjudication of incompetency. The language used referred to a situation which was clearly within the purview of section 40 of the Civil Code, and not to any question of testamentary capacity. While it may have been dicta the court, in the Hellman case, further stated: "It is the settled law of California that an adjudication of the incompetency of a testator is merely prima facie evidence of his incapacity to make a valid will." Regardless of any distinctions as to whether presumptions exist and what is necessary to constitute prima facie evidence these cases indicate a disposition to hold that an adjudication of incompetency is certainly not conclusive evidence of incapacity to make a will. In Re Estate of De Graaf, 34 Cal.App.2d 120, 93 P.2d 199, a somewhat similar question was presented in that the appellants argued that since the testatrix had been adjudged insane and a guardian had been later appointed for her estate it must be presumed that her incapacity continued and that there was no evidence that her condition had improved. In passing upon that point this court, in effect, stated that any such presumption was nothing more than conflicting evidence, that it could not be said as a matter of law that the testatrix lacked testamentary capacity on the day the will was executed, and that the question was one of fact for the trial court. A similar holding is announced in Re Estate of Young, 38 Cal. App.2d 588, 101 P.2d 770, 771. In that case, a will made by an elderly man after he had been adjudged incompetent and a guardian had been appointed for his estate, was upheld, the court approving an instruction to the effect that a prior adjudication of mental disorder was not conclusive on the question of capacity to make a will. The court there said: "Moreover, proceedings for the purpose of adjudicating the mental status, although satisfactory to all parties concerned, are frequently uncontested and therefore no more comprehensive or extensive than the particular circumstances require. A judgment based upon such a proceeding may be valid but it is not conclusive on the question of decedent's incompetency for the purpose of testamentary disposition."

[4] The appellant argues that the cases to which we have referred have no controlling effect here either because the precise point was not there presented or because the interested party there had waived the point here raised by introducing evidence on the question of the capacity of the testator to make the will and allowing the matter to be tried as a question of fact without standing squarely on the prior adjudication, as was done in the instant case. Whether or not such a matter could be thus waived, if a statute gave a conclusive effect to a prior adjudication of incompetence, need not be considered. In our opinion, no such effect is given in this case by section 40 of the Civil Code, the matter is here squarely presented, and we hold that this section had no application here which prevented or rendered improper an inquiry into the testamentary capacity of this decedent at the time the will was executed and that the court did not err in admitting the testimony objected to, which was ample to sustain the finding made.

The appellant introduced no evidence on the issue of undue influence, relying entirely on certain presumptions from facts which otherwise appeared. It is not, and it could not well be, argued that the evidence is insufficient in this respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This is an appeal by taxpayers from a decree fixing the amount of an inheritance tax.

In 1923 Arthur Zellerbach, uncle of appellants, created two irrevocable trusts whereby he transferred certain shares of stock to trustees, expressly reserving to himself a life income in the property and providing for a vested remainder over on his death of the corpus to appellants. He died in 1937, and between the date of the creation of the trusts and the date of his death other stock and other trustees were substituted in the trusts. At the time of the creation of the trusts in 1923 the value of the property subject thereto was $142,000; whereas its value at the date of the termination of the trust in 1937 was $403,739.69. It was agreed for all the purposes of this particular case that the Inheritance Tax Act of 1921, Stats. 1921, p. 1500, governed the taxability of the transfers in question; and the legal problem involved was whether the tax to be imposed should be computed on the value of the trust property as of the date of the creation of the trust in 1923, or as of the date of the death of the decedent in 1937 when appellants came into the possession and enjoyment of the property. If computed on the 1923 value the total tax would be $1,154.91, but if computed on the 1937 value the tax would be $39,162.71. The trial court held that the tax should be computed as of the date of the death of the trustor in 1937, and fixed the amount of the tax accordingly.

[1] In support of the trial court's decision and in accordance with its written opinion giving the reasons therefor, the respondent contends that In re Estate of Miller, 184 Cal. 674, 195 P. 413, 417, 16 A.L.R. 694, is decisive of the question here presented, and we are in accord with such view. There the decedent died in 1916. In 1913 he had executed a deed of trust to his daughter and her husband as trustees, assigning to them 120,000 shares of the capital stock of Miller and Lux Company, a Nevada corporation. By the trust instrument the decedent reserved a life estate in the property, followed by a life estate in the daughter and her husband, with a remainder over in fee. Subsequent to the transfer but before the decedent's death both the federal government and the state of Nevada levied a death tax on the transfer; and in fixing the amount of the inheritance taxes on the transfer under the California law (the Inheritance Tax Act of 1911) the question arose whether the federal and Nevada state taxes could be deducted in determining the clear market value of the property subject to the California inheritance tax. If the value was to be taken as of the date of the transfer, the deduction would not be allowed, but if the property were to be valued at the date of the death of the grantor it would be allowed. For the purposes of its decision the Supreme Court assumed the validity of the federal and Nevada taxes, amounting to some $4,048,000. The court stated that the question presented was "as to whether under our own statute the tax in this case is to be computed upon the value of the beneficial interests transferred as of the date of transfer, or as of the date of the death of Miller, the transferor." It will be noted that this is the identical question presented in the present case; and the court there held that the property should be valued as of the date of the death of the trustor. In so holding the court in part said: "There is no declaration in the statute as to what shall be the rule when the dates are not the same; i. e., when a taxable transfer is made prior to the death of the transferor. The statute, however, does contain a provision which closely approaches a declaration that the valuation of future, contingent, or limited estates, created by the transfer, shall be as of the date of death. Such estates were created by the transfer here involved. * * * The provision of the statute referred to is the portion of section 5 reading, * * *" quoting section 5, which is identical to section 8 (1) of the 1921 act here governing. The court goes on: "This provision is plainly one for the valuation of future, contingent, or limited estates. It appropriately requires an appraisal, both of the property as a whole out of which such estates are carved, and of the particular estates into which it is carved. * * * The provision of section 5, particularly significant upon the point under discussion, is that the appraisal in such cases, whether the taxable transfer be by death or inter vivos, be made 'immediately after the death of the decedent.' This, of course, is literally a provision as to the time of actually making the appraisal, not as to the time as of which it shall be made. * * * At the time when the statute requires the appraisal to be made, the death upon which the estates to be valued depend has actually occurred, and the natural and reasonable method of computing their value would be to take the actual date of death * * *. We think it fairly certain, therefore, that when the statute provides that in such cases as the present the appraisal is to be made immediately after the death of the transferor, it contemplates and requires that the appraisal be on the basis of the actual date of his death, and therefore, of necessity, as of that date." As stated, section 8 (1) of the 1921 act is identical with section 5 of the 1911 act referred to in the Miller case (with the exception of the reference to certain sections which have been renumbered). From the foregoing it will be seen that the decision therein is directly in point and therefore here controlling.

Furthermore, in deciding the Miller case, the court held that the California inheritance tax was a succession tax—a tax on the beneficial interest of each beneficiary or heir; whereas the federal tax is an estate tax imposed upon the net estate of the deceased as a unit; that therefore the federal tax must be deducted in order to determine the amount upon which the state tax should be levied "since it is plain that what the transferee receives is only the portion of what the decedent left which remains after the federal tax is taken." "It is the settled law of this state that the inheritance tax is imposed upon the net clear market value of what the transferee receives, and that to ascertain this the value of what he does not receive, in contemplation of law, must be deducted from the value of what the decedent left. The application of this principle plainly requires the deduction of the federal estate tax." This same reasoning applies here; the inheritance tax is imposed upon the net clear market value of what the transferee receives. In the Miller case the beneficiaries received less than actually transferred on account of the deduction of the federal and Nevada taxes; while here they receive more because of the increase in the value of the trust property subsequent to the transfer.

Appellant contends, however, that in Chambers v. Lamb, 186 Cal. 261, 199 P. 33, 34, which was under consideration at the time the Miller case was decided, the court declared a doctrine inconsistent with that announced in the Miller case. An analysis of the two cases shows otherwise. In Chambers v. Lamb the decedent executed a deed in 1909 in contemplation of death which transferred certain property. The deed was recorded in 1910, and decedent died in 1911. The grantor retained no rights in the property transferred. The 1905 act governed the transfer. The question arose as to whether the property should be valued as of the date of the delivery of the deed or the death of the grantor. It was there stipulated, however, "* * * that full title, control, and enjoyment passed to the grantee in 1909, at the time of the delivery of the deed" and the court held therefore that "Logic and consistency compel the conclusion that the property should be valued, for the purposes of the tax, as of the date of the delivery of the deed." In other words, the date of the transfer happened to be also the date when the beneficial enjoyment commenced, since the transferee went into immediate possession and enjoyment; but it was this latter factor rather than the date of the transfer which controlled. As said by the trial court herein in its written opinion: "Both cases [the Miller and the Lamb cases] were decided by the same justices within less than six months of each other and both recognize the distinction between the transfer inter vivos of a fee simple in contemplation of death and the transfer of a remainder subject to a life estate in the transferor. In Re Estate of Miller the court applied one rule in the case of a remainder, recognizing and expressly stating that a different rule might apply in the case of a transfer inter vivos of a fee simple in contemplation of death. 184 Cal. at pages 686, 687 [195 P. 413, 16 A.L.R. 694]. In the Lamb case the court distinguished but did not disapprove the Miller case. 186 Cal. at page 264 [199 P. 33]. The Supreme Court simply adopted different rules for the two cases and the Legislature, with presumptive knowledge of both decisions, substantially reenacted section 5 of the previous act into subdivision 1 of section 8 of the present act, thereby in effect adopting the rule of the Miller case." In the Chambers case the court in pointing out the factual distinction between the two cases says: "Section 5 of the act, which in effect requires an appraisal as of the date of the death of the transferor, is limited to future, contingent or limited estates, and has no application to transfers, such as that in the instant case, which do not create estates of that character. [In re] Estate of Miller [184 Cal. 674], 195 P. 413, 418, [16 A.L.R. 694]." The Miller case likewise makes plain the distinction between the two kinds of cases, wherein it is said: "We should, perhaps, say that the conclusion so reached, based, as it is, on the particular provisions of section 5 as to the appraisal of future, contingent, or limited estates, does not involve a determination of the question as to whether it is the date of transfer or the date of death of the transferor as of which the appraisement should be made in cases of taxable transfers inter vivos which do not create estates of that particular character. That question is not involved here, and should not be determined."

Nor is there any merit in appellants' contention that the doctrine of the Miller case was in effect abrogated by the decision in Re Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 204 P. 826. The majority opinion therein makes no reference whatever to the Miller case, nor is there any language used therein indicating an intention to reject the doctrine of the Miller case.

[2] Appellants argue that the decision in the Miller case is founded on an obviously strained construction of the 1911 act, which is explained by the desire of the court to give the transferee the benefit of large estate and inheritance taxes paid the federal government and the state of Nevada; and that it is no longer necessary to perpetuate the strained construction to reach this result, because the act was subsequently amended to provide for deduction of other taxes paid. Irrespective, however, of the reasons which may have induced the court to arrive at its decision, the doctrine therein declared has not been altered or rejected by any later decisions, either expressly or by implication, and until that is done the decision therein stands as the law. Furthermore it cannot be said that the doctrine of the Miller case is inequitable, because while valuation as of the date of the death gives the state the benefit of a larger tax where the property has increased in value, a decrease in value results in a smaller tax, and the taxpayer thus benefits in not being compelled to pay a tax on a value which he has never enjoyed in possession.

Appellants argue also that since immediately after the Miller case was decided the Legislature amended the act so as to allow the deduction of federal estate and inheritance taxes and state inheritance, succession and transfer taxes, from the market value of the property transferred, it "repudiated the means by which the court in Estate of Miller achieved the result, but sanctioned the result." Inasmuch, however, as the amendment conformed to the doctrine of that case and was not inconsistent therewith, it must be deemed that the amendment was intended as a ratification of the doctrine rather than a repudiation thereof.

Paraphrasing section 2 of the 1921 act, it provides that a tax is imposed on the transfer of property, "said taxes to be upon the market value of such property" when the transfer is made in contemplation of death or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death. Then follows this sentence: "When such person, institution or corporation becomes beneficially entitled in possession or expectancy to any property or the income therefrom, by any such transfer, whether made before or after the passage of this act." (As will be noted, the sentence is not complete grammatically, and in Re Estate of Potter, supra, it was held that the sentence should be separated from the matter which preceded it by a comma, rather than a period.) Appellants argue that the quoted provision constitutes an express declaration that property transferred inter vivos is to be valued as of the date of transfer. They contend that it means that when a person is entitled "in expectancy" by any transfer the property is to be valued as of the date he becomes entitled in expectancy, that is, the date of transfer. The negative answer to this contention is to be found in those portions of the decisions in the Miller and Chambers cases above quoted, wherein it is held that future, contingent or limited estates such as we have here, are to be governed by section 5 (section 8 (1) of the 1921 act), rather than by section 1 (section 2 of the 1921 act).

Appellants further contend that there is a change in the 1921 act which permits of reaching a different conclusion than under the 1911 act, involved in Re Estate of Miller. The only change which is here pertinent is in the position of the provision to the effect that the tax is upon the market value of the property, and it is apparent that such change in position will not permit giving a different interpretation under the 1921 act than under the 1911 act.

The decree is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Dal. M. Lemmon, Judge.

Action by E. E. Hundley and others against A. Marinkovich and others, to enforce a materialmen's lien for materials furnished by plaintiffs to building contractor and used in construction of apartment house on property of defendants Marinkovich. From a judgment holding that plaintiffs were not entitled to any lien against the property or to any judgment against defendants Marinkovich, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Huston, Huston & Huston and Mervin H. Reith, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

Treadwell & Laughlin and Russell E. Barnes, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal upon the judgment roll alone, in an action to enforce a materialman's lien for materials furnished by appellants to the contractor, and used in the construction of an apartment house on the property of respondents Marinkovich.

The trial court found that on May 12, 1937, respondents Marinkovich entered into a contract with one Vukicevich, as contractor, for the construction of an apartment house, and that respondent Maryland Casualty Company executed the usual surety bond for the faithful performance of said contract, and the payment for labor and materials used in connection therewith.

The findings of the court then proceed:

That the construction of the said building was completed on or before the 9th day of November, 1939, and on or prior to the 9th day of November, 1939, the labor ceased on the construction of the said building, and the said building was delivered by the contractor to the owners, and the said owners entered into possession thereof and entered into the actual occupancy of the said property by themselves and their subtenants. That the said owners, within ten days after the completion of the said contract and work of improvement, and on the 9th day of November, 1939, did file for record in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated, a notice setting forth the date the said work was completed, and on which cessation of labor occurred, together with their names, addresses and the nature of their title, and a description of the property sufficient for identification, together with the name of the contractor, which notice was verified by the said owners, and they duly paid the fee for recording the same. That at the time that the said notice was recorded, the said construction had been completed, said building had been accepted and occupied by the owners, and there had been a cessation of labor on the said building, and no labor was subsequently employed in the construction of said building.

The trial court found further that appellants did not, within thirty days after the completion of such work of improvement as a whole, file any claim of lien or give any notice to the surety, and that the only notice or claim of lien ever filed by appellants was filed on the 21st day of December, 1939, more than thirty days after the filing of said notice of completion, and after the cessation of labor on said building, and after occupancy and use of said property by the owners, and after the acceptance of said work and improvement by the owners; that during the course of construction, and before respondents Marinkovich accepted the building, appellants furnished materials to the contractor Vukicevich, of the value of $788.94, which materials were delivered between August 26, 1939, and November 8, 1939; that appellants on November 29, 1939, furnished the contractor "with a certain part of a lock of the value of $4.12 to replace a defective part of a lock installed in the construction of said building. The said portion of said lock was thereafter installed in the lock in said building, but the same constituted no part of the construction of said building"; that on December 21, 1939, appellants recorded a claim of lien "for materials furnished in the sum of $793.06, but said notice of lien was not recorded within thirty days after the completion of said building, and was not recorded within thirty days of the last delivery of material used in the construction of said building, but was recorded within thirty days after the furnishing of said material used to replace a defective portion of a lock of said building"; that appellants' cause of action to enforce a lien upon said property is barred by the provisions of section 1183 and 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, excepting as to a lien for said sum of $4.12, which said sum the respondents paid into court for the benefit of appellants.

From said findings the court concluded that appellants were entitled to judgment against the contractor Vukicevich for the sum of $793.06, but were not entitled to any lien against the property, or to any judgment against respondents, and appellants appeal from the judgment entered in accordance with said findings and conclusions.

Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows:

"Every original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter, at any time after he has ceased to perform labor or furnish material, or both, for any work of improvement mentioned in this chapter, and until thirty days after the completion of such work of improvement, as a whole, may file for record with the county recorder of the county or city and county in which such property or some part thereof is situated a claim of lien containing a statement of his demand * * *. In all cases, any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for all the purposes of this chapter; the occupation or use of a building, improvement or structure by the owner, or his representative, accompanied by cessation from labor thereon; or the acceptance by the owner, or said agent, of said building, improvement or structure, or cessation from labor for thirty days upon any contract or upon any building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof; the filing of the notice hereinafter provided for.

"The owner shall within ten days after the completion of any contract or work of improvement provided for in this chapter, or within ten days after there has been a cessation from labor thereon for a period of thirty days, file for record in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation from labor occurred, together with his name, address and the nature of his title, and a description of the property sufficient for identification, together with the name of the contractor, if any, which notice shall be verified by himself or some other person on his behalf. * * * In case such notice be not so filed, then all persons claiming the benefit of this chapter shall have ninety days after the completion of said work of improvement within which to file their claims of lien. The phrase 'work of improvement' and the word 'improvement' as used in this chapter are each hereby defined to mean the entire structure or scheme of improvement as a whole."

Appellants contend that because of the furnishing by appellants to the contractor on November 29, 1939, of the part of a lock to replace a defective part of a lock installed in the construction of said building, their lien, as filed on December 21, 1939, was within thirty days after the completion of said building. Appellants argue that a substitution or replacement of material, at the demand of the owner or the original contractor, will operate where the labor or material was not gratuitous, to validate a mechanic's lien filed within the statutory period.

[1] Appellants cite the case of Nevada County Lumber Co. v. Janiss, 25 Cal.App. 2d 579, 78 P.2d 200. In that case the trial court found that although the building was occupied by a tenant on December 2nd, the sewage system failed to operate, and replacement pipes for said system were necessary to the completion of the building under the contract, and that such necessary work was not completed until December 20th, and that a lien filed was within the ninety-day limitation prescribed by section 1187, supra. Upon appeal, this court said, at page 582 of 25 Cal.App.2d at page 201, of 78 P.2d: "Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifies certain circumstances which 'shall be deemed equivalent to a completion' of a contract for the purposes of that chapter of the Code. The provision relied on by the appellant declares that 'the occupation or use of a building * * * by the owner, or his representative, accompanied by a cessation from labor thereon' will be deemed to constitute a completion of the job, for the purpose of determining the limitation of time within which a notice of claim of lien may be filed. It will be observed the statute does not declare that mere occupation of the building is sufficient to set the statute of limitations running. That occupation must be accompanied by cessation from labor thereon. The question of the completion of a building is one of fact, with the determination of which we may not interfere where there is substantial evidence to support the finding in that regard."

The cited case does not support the position of appellants, but is merely authority to the effect that the question of the completion of a building is one of fact.

Appellants also cite "54 A.L.R. pages 984 to 988, and the authorities there cited," and have referred to two cases mentioned in said note. In those two cases it was held that the question of the date of completion was a question of fact, and that, considering all the facts, the finding that the building had not been completed was supported. In neither of the cases was there involved any statutory provision such as we have in California defining completion.

[2, 3] As hereinbefore stated, this appeal is on the judgment roll alone. We are asked by appellants to hold that the furnishing and installation of a part to replace a defective part of a lock on November 29, 1939, extended the time of the completion of the construction of the building to that date. This appeal, being upon the judgment roll alone, the findings of the trial court are conclusively presumed to be supported by the evidence. The trial court found that said portion of said lock constituted no part of the construction of said building; that on November 9, 1939, the construction of the building was completed, labor thereon ceased, possession thereof was delivered by the contractor to the owners, and the owners entered into the possession and occupancy thereof; that on November 10, 1939, notice of completion was recorded, and that the claim of lien of appellants was not recorded until December 21, 1939. These facts so found by the trial court properly led to the conclusion that appellants were not entitled to a lien upon said property.

Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure sets forth what shall be deemed equivalent to completion, and it is for the trial court to say whether or not a building has been completed. If there is substantial evidence to support such finding, an appellate tribunal may not interfere. The trial court in the instant case found that the various steps specified by section 1187, supra, to be equivalent to completion, had been complied with, and that the installing of the portion of the lock constituted no part of the construction of said building. These findings are conclusively presumed to be true, as the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. The judgment in favor of respondents is therefore fully supported by the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

Suit by Sam Estrin against David Fromsky for dissolution of a partnership and for an accounting of proceeds, and for money had and received. Affirmed.

Abe Richman and Edward K. Brody, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred R. Meyers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant, by means of a bill of exceptions, takes this appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for an accounting of the proceeds of a business venture, and from an order denying a motion to strike certain items from the plaintiff's memorandum of costs and disbursements.

The complaint herein was one for dissolution of a partnership and for an accounting of the proceeds. Before trial of the action an additional cause of action for money had and received was added by amendment. After hearing the cause, the trial court, by an interlocutory judgment, decreed that the plaintiff and the defendants were not partners and that appellant was the sole owner of the business in question, a market enterprise conducted in the name of appellant and the D. Fromsky Markets, and that the plaintiff (respondent here) was entitled to an accounting of the books of said enterprise and was entitled to judgment for such sums as might be found to be credited to his account after the accounting of the books had been completed. The court thereafter, and on January 15, 1941, ordered a firm of certified public accountants to audit the books in the action. Included in the same minute order was the statement: "The plaintiff is ordered to pay for said audit." On April 30, 1941, the following minute order was entered: "Minute order of January 15, 1941, is ordered amended nunc pro tunc to further read as follows: Costs of audit by Arthur Andersen & Company to be assessable as an item of costs in this action." After the accounting and a further hearing of the matter, the trial court found, in part, that respondent was entitled to an accounting from appellant and that the audit of the books in question indicated and reflected a credit to the account of respondent in the sum of $6,000, and ordered judgment accordingly, together with interest, costs and disbursements. The cost of the audit was allowed respondent by the court.

[1-5] Appellant bases his contention, as to the impropriety of allowing respondent the cost of the audit, upon the sole ground that the minute order of April 30, 1941, by the terms of which it was attempted to amend nunc pro tunc the previous minute order, was void. The contention is not material. It should be pointed out that the minute orders in question were in no sense final orders and the court, in subsequently taxing costs, was not bound thereby. See 15 Cal.Jur. 112, § 177, as to the effect of such orders. Also see McAllen v. Souza, 24 Cal.App.2d 247, 250, 74 P.2d 853; Hughes v. DeMund, 96 Cal.App. 365, 274 P. 405, and cases cited. Moreover, there is no question but that the trial court could change or amend the minute order first entered, upon a proper motion in the course of proceedings. Whether the amendment was properly made in the instant case need not be decided, as already pointed out. Expense of services of an expert accountant, necessary for the proper presentation and determination of the case, and appointed by and acting under the direction of the court, is properly charged as an item of costs. Faulkner v. Hendy, 79 Cal. 265, 21 P. 754; In re Peterson, 253 U.S. 300, 40 S.Ct. 543, 64 L.Ed. 919. In the Peterson case, supra, an order requiring either or both parties to pay the cost of appointing an auditor was said to be erroneous, since the prevailing party would be entitled to such costs, the court there indicating that the expense of the auditor should abide the result of the action. Costs in an action in equity are matters within the discretion of the court. Smalley v. Geo. C. Peckham Co., 175 Cal. 146, 148, 165 P. 438. See, also, 7 Cal.Jur. 280, § 21; 20 C.J.S. 274, 275, Costs, § 10, subsec. b; Id., 284, § 13. The item of expense for the audit was properly charged as a cost of suit herein.

[6] Appellant also contends that since the determination of the amount due respondent was based in part upon the deduction of an estimated sales tax liability of $3,000, and it has been officially determined by the State Board of Equalization since the trial of the action herein that the liability was actually $9,999.98, the judgment should be reduced accordingly; and appellant requests this court to take additional evidence upon the question, under the power given appellate courts by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this connection, the record indicates that it was not possible to obtain an accurate determination of the sales tax liability at the time of the audit because appellant had not kept a proper set of books. The failure of the auditors to make an exact determination of the liability for sales tax appears therefore to have been the fault of appellant. The interests of justice would not be served in reopening the matter at this time, even if, under other circumstances, such a procedure could be held a proper one under section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[7] Appellant's contention, that in no event could a judgment for $6,000 be properly rendered, is without merit. The contention is founded upon the claim that the judgment was based solely on the count for money had and received, which cause of action was for but $5,851.65. The findings of the court and the judgment based thereon reveal that the basis therefor was the amount shown to be due upon the audit of appellant's books; and a judgment for such sum as was shown to be due upon an accounting was properly rendered, the action being one for an accounting.

Appellant has raised no other points. The judgment and the order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas L. Ambrose, Judge.

Roy King was convicted of lewd and lascivious acts against children, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Maurice A. Gleason, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

In an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged in two counts with violations of section 288 of the Penal Code, while the remaining two counts alleged the commission by him of acts denounced by section 288a of the same code. Following the entry of not guilty pleas as to all counts, trial before a jury resulted in guilty verdicts upon all charges. Upon hearing of defendant's motion for a new trial, the same was denied as to counts 1 and 3 charging violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, while counts 2 and 4, alleging violations of section 288a, were dismissed by the court in the interests of justice. From the judgment of conviction entered as to counts 1 and 3 defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] It is first contended by appellant that the stories related by the two complaining witnesses, young girls aged eleven and twelve years, respectively, are inherently improbable, and show "that it was physically impossible for the defendant to have committed these acts in the manner (they stated) it was accomplished," and that therefore a reversal of the judgment is required. This contention is refuted by the record, from which it appears that appellant resided with his family in one of the apartments of a government housing project on Via Wanda Street in North Long Beach. This project consisted of 83 buildings with 11 families living in each building. Appellant's apartment was about 100 feet from the apartment occupied by the families of the two prosecuting witnesses. According to the testimony of the prosecutrix named in count 1, she was eleven years of age and had known the appellant for some two years. She testified that about Thanksgiving time in the month of November, 1941, this witness, in company with her playmate (the prosecutrix named in count 3), went to appellant's apartment, upon which occasion he was downstairs painting some furniture. He invited the two girls to come in and look at the furniture, then requested them to come upstairs to a back bedroom. Upon arrival at the latter room, appellant showed the two girls a book containing pictures of nude men and women. One of the girls left the room, going downstairs to see her sister, leaving the other in the back bedroom with appellant. The witness who remained in the room testified that afte her playmate had departed, appellant pushed her on the bed, removed certain of her clothing, and thereupon perpetrated certain acts detailed by her that without question constituted a violation of section 288, supra.

The other prosecutrix testified that following the above occasion, and either in the same or the succeeding month, she went back to appellant's apartment to complain that his young son had destroyed one of her "play books." This she testified was on a Saturday afternoon when her mother and father had gone downtown. Appellant admitted her to his apartment, took her to the back bedroom, and requested her to lie down on the bed, whereupon he perpetrated certain lewd and lascivious acts upon her person. While appellant was engaged in these acts his young son called to him, whereupon appellant told the prosecutrix to get into the closet and told his son to go on with his play, after which he let the complaining witness out of the closet, and she then went home. Neither of the child victims complained or related to their parents or other members of their families any of the foregoing occurrences, but one of the complaining witnesses testified that they had narrated what had transpired to another of their playmates. A Juvenile Hall physician testified that she examined the complaining witnesses and found that with reference to one of them the hymen had suffered a rupture not of recent origin, and as to the other prosecutrix, the physician discovered a slight rupture on both the right and left sides of the hymen, which also was not recent, and was without irritation.

The father of one of the complaining witnesses testified that on November 22, 1941, which was a Saturday afternoon, he and his wife, together with appellant's wife, drove to Long Beach to pay a tire bill. He fixed the date through a receipt which was marked in evidence and bore that date. He testified that they stayed in Long Beach until 3 o'clock and that appellant was home on that date. The wife of this witness testified that it was the usual custom of her and her husband to take appellant's wife with them to Long Beach on Saturday afternoons.

The defendant produced witnesses who were living in the apartments of the government housing project where he and the complaining witnesses lived, all of whom testified that they remembered but one occasion, along in the fall of 1941, when appellant was painting furniture, and that on that occasion none of these witnesses saw either prosecutrix go into the apartment occupied by appellant. He also introduced testimony that his general reputation for the traits involved in the offenses charged was good. Appellant's son testified that on an occasion one of the prosecuting witnesses lay down on the bed in a semi-naked condition and asked him to come in, but that he did not go. Appellant's wife testified to an occasion when she was in the apartment of one of the prosecuting witnesses and saw the latter lying on a couch partially undressed and heard her ask the witness' son to come in and play with her. She also testified that on another occasion she came upon this particular prosecuting witness and her boy under a blanket playing on the floor, but stated that she made no mention of either occasion to the mother of the girl. The record seems to indicate that the parents of the complaining witness and the appellant and his wife were very good friends. Defendant testified in his own behalf, denying the commission of any of the offenses charged against him. He testified to an occasion upon which, instead of his exhibiting indecent pictures to the prosecuting witnesses, they showed him an indecent photograph.

Concerning appellant's first contention, we are unable to say that the testimony given by these alleged victims of his lust is inherently improbable, wholly untrustworthy and not entitled to belief. As heretofore stated, these children were of the ages of eleven and twelve years. Their competency to testify and their understanding of the meaning, solemnity and obligations of an oath were conceded by appellant's counsel at the trial. There was no claim, nor even an attempted showing, that they were coached as to their testimony, while vigorous and searching cross-examination failed to bring into the record anything upon which could be predicated a conclusion of willful or deliberate falsification by either of the prosecuting witnesses or that their testimony was the mere figment of a childish imagination. The trial judge was at all times mindful of appellant's rights, and by way of a cautionary instruction admonished the jury that "you are instructed that a charge of this nature is particularly difficult for a defendant to clear himself of. No charge can be more easily made, and none more difficult to disprove. From the nature of the case, the complaining witness and the defendant are generally the only witnesses. The law does not require in this character of a case that the prosecution witness be corroborated by another witness, or other corroborating circumstances, but does require that you examine her testimony with caution."

[2] However dubious we might be, from a reading of the cold record of this case, as to the verity of the testimony given by the prosecuting witnesses, unless we can justly conclude that their entire testimony is per se unbelievable we are without authority to interfere with the findings of the triers of fact, because, as was said by this court in People v. Quinn, 12 Cal. App.2d 752, 754, 55 P.2d 1277, 1278:

"While the alleged variances or inconsistencies apparent in the child's testimony and the contradictions referred to undoubtedly afforded opportunity for a persuasive argument to the jury against the reliability of her testimony, we find nothing in them from which a reviewing court could justly conclude that her entire testimony is per se unbelievable, and that it was therefore the jury's duty not only to disregard it, but to accept the defendant's denial of any wrongdoing on his part. Reviewing judges are, obviously, in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded to witnesses or to weigh their testimony. Undoubtedly for that reason our Constitution (art. 6, § 4½) provides that the appellate courts are not authorized to review evidence, except where, on its face, it may justly be held that it is insufficient to support the ultimate issue involved, in which case it is not a review of a question of fact, but purely one of law. People v. Haydon, 18 Cal.App. 543, 553, 123 P. 1102, 1114. Carrying out the spirit and intent of this constitutional provision, the Legislature has ordained that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses (Code Civ.Proc., § 1847), and are the judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, except in those instances where it is declared by law that it shall be conclusive. Code Civ.Proc., § 2061. It necessarily follows from the rules just noted that the jury in this case were authorized, if they conscientiously felt warranted in so doing, after full and fair consideration thereof, to reject any testimony which might have been contradictory to that of the child witness (People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 551, 557, 56 P. 424; People v. Wright, 4 Cal.App. 704, 706, 89 P. 364; People v. Turpin, 10 Cal.App. 526, 530, 102 P. 680; Clark v. Tulare L. D. Co., 14 Cal.App. 414, 432, 112 P. 564), and, therefore, to disbelieve the testimony of the defendant and accept that of the child as to the immediate circumstances of the alleged felonious assault and the actions constituting the same, however weak in places the latter's testimony may have been made to appear, or however sharply her testimony on other important points might have conflicted with the testimony of other witnesses.

"In addition thereto, we must remember that a motion for a new trial was made in this case and denied by the trial court. The judge of that tribunal had the witnesses before him, was fortified with an opportunity to observe their manner and demeanor on the stand and apparent candor or lack of the same, and the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the stories they told; and unless he believed the testimony of the child and disbelieved the evidence given by the defendant, it not only was his privilege but his duty to grant a new trial. In denying the motion for a new trial the lower court concurred in the action of the jury, which rejected defendant's denial and accepted the testimony of the child witness concerning the lewd and lascivious acts claimed by her to have been committed upon her by the defendant."

See, also, People v. Kearney, 20 Cal.2d 435, 126 P.2d 612.

Where, as here, the child witnesses were aged eleven and twelve years, concededly possessed of ordinary intelligence, and testified to similar acts on different occasions, the perpetration of which was not inherently improbable, and where there was no indication that the stories had been prompted by others, we are not authorized to reverse a judgment founded thereon. Moreover, there are some corroborating circumstances present. Both the prosecution and defense concede that appellant was at home painting his furniture on a Saturday, as related by the child witnesses, and that this was the only occasion in 1941 when he was so engaged. There is also testimony as to the Saturday when the parents of one of the children took appellant's wife to Long Beach, the date of which is established by a tire bill which was in evidence. Therefore, the most that can be said is that the testimony introduced on behalf of appellant created a conflict with that of the prosecuting witnesses, and that conflict was resolved by the jury against the defendant. In connection with appellant's claim that the description given by one of the complaining witnesses as to what took place was a physical impossibility, thereby rendering her testimony incredible as a matter of law, it must be remembered that the jury and the trial court had the defendant and the witness before them, and any doubt as to whether the acts described were physically impossible was resolved against the defendant by the jury and again by the trial court on the hearing of a motion for a new trial. Under the facts here present we are not empowered to disturb such finding made by the triers of fact. People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 691, 117 P.2d 321.

[3-5] Appellant earnestly insists that his substantial rights were prejudiced when the trial court, at the conclusion of the presentation of the case by the prosecution, denied his motion to dismiss the two counts charging violations of section 288a of the Penal Code. We are unable to understand how appellant could have been prejudiced by the action of the trial court, since the evidence upon which the motion was based had already been submitted to the jury. That the prosecution is entitled to charge in the same information more than one offense, when such offenses are allegedly connected together in their commission, or where the charges are different statements of the same offense, is established by section 954 of the Penal Code. Furthermore, even though we concede error in the refusal of the court to dismiss counts 2 and 4, or to advise the jury to acquit on those two counts, such error was cured by the subsequent action of the court in dismissing these counts upon the motion for a new trial. People v. Shekell, 5 Cal.App.2d 537, 538, 43 P.2d 328.

There being no error in the record which would justify a reversal, the judgment is affirmed.

Cr. 3557.

Embezzlement 🔑44(6)

Evidence that real estate agent fraudulently appropriated to his own use money belonging to his clients which money came into his control by virtue of his employment as such agent established "embezzlement" within the statutory definition thereof and sustained conviction of grand theft. Pen.Code, §§ 484, 508.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

John J. Atwater, Jr., was convicted of grand theft. From an order denying a new trial, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant was convicted by the court, a jury having been waived, on three counts of an information charging him with grand theft. Following his conviction, appellant's motion for a new trial was denied, proceedings were suspended without judgment being rendered and appellant was granted probation for a period of ten years, a condition thereof being that he make restitution. The appeal herein is taken from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

Appellant has been a licensed real estate broker in the State of California for about ten years; and the circumstances which led to his prosecution on the charges herein arose out of certain real estate transactions in which appellant had acted as agent. Count one of the information charged appellant with the theft of $2,590.24, the personal property of Julia P. Casanega and Lorraine Casanega, Trustee, count two with the theft of $2,149.87, the personal property of Julia P. Casanega, and count three with the theft of $500, the personal property of Arthur W. and Frances H. Hartigan. Appellant's sole ground of appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction for grand theft.

At the trial the following facts were put in evidence. The Casanegas desired to exchange certain real property in Nogales, Arizona, for property in California, and called several real estate concerns or brokers on the matter, appellant among them. A conference with appellant resulted in his acting as agent for the Casanegas. After necessary information as to the Nogales property had been given appellant by the Casanegas, appellant took the Casanegas to see a certain parcel of real estate in Los Angeles, with which property the Casanegas expressed satisfaction. According to Lorraine Casanega, appellant had stated that an exchange of the Nogales property for property in California could be handled "if we had some note or mortgage or somebody else's property." Julia P. Casanega is the widow of one Tom Casanega of Nogales and Lorraine Casanega is their daughter and was made administratrix of her father's estate. Among the assets of the estate was a mortgage on a piece of property in Arizona, which mortgage was later supplanted by a new mortgage made to Julia P. Casanega, as mortgagee. As part of the transaction involving the Nogales property appellant obtained an assignment of this latter mortgage, together with an executed satisfaction of the same from Julia Casanega, for the purpose of disposing of the mortgage. In addition, appellant obtained a $1,000 note from the Casanegas for the expressed purpose of raising cash in case appellant was unable to dispose of the mortgage. Lorraine Casanega also executed a power of attorney to appellant. As a result of appellant's efforts, a realty and trust company in Tucson, Arizona, purchased the mortgage, issuing its check therefor in the sum of $2,590.24. Appellant also arranged with the same company for a loan on the Nogales property of the Casanegas, and told the secretary of said company to hold the mortgage papers until he returned, when he would bring the Casanegas to complete the transaction. With the check of the realty company, given for the mortgage, appellant obtained a cashier's check in the same amount from a national bank in Tucson. While in Tucson appellant purchased a Cadillac automobile for $2,219.50 and gave his personal check therefor. Appellant drove this automobile to Los Angeles via San Diego; and while in San Diego appellant cashed the check of the national bank and purchased a $2,000 cashier's check from the United States National Bank of San Diego. Later, appellant deposited to his account in a Los Angeles bank the cashier's check for $2,000 and $500 in currency. On the same date that this deposit was made a payment of $375 was made out of the same account on a house being purchased by appellant and occupied by him. Later Mrs. Casanega signed a mortgage for $3,250 on the Nogales property, for which she was handed two checks by the secretary of the Tucson realty company, one in the amount of $500 and the other in the sum of $1,649.87. The difference of $1,100.13 between the amount of the mortgage and the checks was for delinquent taxes. The total cost of the automobile, including accessories and other costs, was $2,619.67. At appellant's direction, Mrs. Casanega endorsed both of the checks last mentioned. The $500 check was used by appellant in payment on the Cadillac automobile. Appellant characterized this $500 as a fee. After giving Lorraine Casanega a check for $100, appellant deposited the check for $1,649.87 to his account in his Los Angeles bank, together with the sum of $100 in currency. On giving Lorraine Casanega the check for $100, appellant told her that he would have an account ready for her mother the following Tuesday. Thereafter Lorraine Casanega asked appellant to see about a mortgage held by the Casanegas on property in Colima, Mexico, and agreed to pay appellant $500 additional for his work in connection with that mortgage. However, appellant did not go to Colima in connection with this matter. Appellant arranged for and obtained a loan of $1,000 from an automobile finance company on the Cadillac automobile, placing the proceeds thereof in the safe in his office. Appellant later, in January, 1941, sold the car for $1,050, and after the loan of $1,000 was paid off to the finance company by the purchaser of the automobile, and other expenses deducted, appellant received a check therefor in the sum of $17.25. On September 23, 1940, appellant's Los Angeles bank account, wherein the deposits above mentioned had previously been made, had a balance of $1.48. This was about two months after the money in question had been deposited. The proceeds received by the Casanegas from the foregoing transactions amounted to $175. No deal was ever entered into for the exchange of the Casanega property for the Los Angeles property first shown the Casanegas by appellant; but appellant claims that an escrow was later opened for the exchange of other property, which transaction failed of completion because of the revocation of appellant's power of attorney and the refusal of the Casanegas to take steps to protect the equity in the Los Angeles property, the mortgage on which was foreclosed and the property sold. The record shows that an escrow was opened between the owner of the property and a Mrs. North, and another escrow between Mrs. North and the Casanegas. The Casanegas never signed the escrow instructions. Mrs. North testified that she entered the transaction merely as an accommodation to appellant in order that the property might be refinanced. The deed from the grantor in the first escrow was never delivered.

Mrs. North executed a grant deed of the California property to Lorraine Casanega. This deed was recorded. On the date the deed to Lorraine was recorded, appellant appears to have induced Mrs. Cox, the owner of the California property, to sign a deed to the property under the following circumstances, as related by Mrs. Cox: "I saw him on the 4th of December. He called me to come over to his office, and he said, 'I think it is about time I was giving you a little bit of money.' He read me a paper concerning the property had been sold to a Mrs. North for $5,500, he said, by the escrow papers, and so he said, 'I think I had better give you a little money,' and he said, 'I have a paper here I want you to sign,' and he said, 'I will read it to you.' I didn't have my glasses, and he read it to me and he said, 'Mrs. North is having trouble in raising the money, and she is trying to sell her automobile to pay the rest that is due me.' He said, 'The place was sold, and we are trying to refinance it to get you the money,' and so he read this over to me, and he said, 'I want you to go over to the escrow department to sign this paper, and if you don't get the money for 30 days, so you can get interest on it,' and he took me over in Westwood, and we went in there and he said, 'The gentlemen I want to see is not here,' and he went out and he was gone for about 45 minutes, and he came back and he said, 'I could not find him,' and he said he went to lunch, and we come back in about half an hour and he introduced me to Mr. Elfstrom, and he said, 'I want to get this paper fixed up for Mrs. Cox,' and he said, 'Sign here,' and I thought it was the same paper that he read over in his office about the automobile, and I signed it, and then he gave me $50, and I signed what was supposed to be a receipt for the $50, and I never saw him any more." Appellant admitted at the trial that after the property in question was deeded to Lorraine Casanega appellant took the money in his possession and used it for his own purposes. As already mentioned, the California property owned by Mrs. Cox, which was deeded to Lorraine Casanega, was sold under foreclosure.

As to appellant's dealings with Mr. and Mrs. Hartigan, the basis for the third count of the information, the Hartigans went to appellant's office and inquired about a residence appellant had advertised for sale. Appellant showed the Hartigans a residence that interested them. The price of this property was $6,750; and appellant told the Hartigans that it would be helpful in making a quick sale if the Hartigans would produce ready money. Accordingly, the Hartigans gave appellant a diamond ring and a check for $100. An additional $400 was paid into the transaction by Mr. Hartigan's brother-in-law. Some time later the owner of the residence decided not to sell. It was understood that the ring and money were to be returned if the deal did not go through. About three or four months before the trial of the instant action appellant returned the diamond ring to the Hartigans, but appellant never returned the money although demand was made upon him.

Appellant concedes that the evidence establishes that appellant was acting in the capacity of an agent and that he obtained and held the money in question in the capacity of trustee; but appellant contends that it was not established that the money belonged to his principals nor that he converted the money to his own use in violation of his trust. Obviously, the evidence above set forth is sufficient to support charges of grand theft under section 484 of the Penal Code. Section 508 of the Penal Code states: "Every clerk, agent, or servant of any person who fraudulently appropriates to his own use, or secretes with a fraudulent intent to appropriate to his own use, any property of another which has come into his control or care by virtue of his employment as such clerk, agent, or servant, is guilty of embezzlement." Appellant's attempts to explain or justify his conduct merely served, if at all, to create a conflict in the evidence. The appeal is without merit; and the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

Cr. 3579.

July 1, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑241

Where complaint charging burglary conformed strictly to statutory provisions, magistrate did not err in committing defendant to superior court for sentence on her plea of guilty without taking any evidence. Pen. Code, §§ 806, 859a, 951, 952; Const. art. 1, § 8.

2. Criminal law 🔑998

Where a woman, moving to vacate judgment, sentencing her to penitentiary on her plea of guilty of burglary, because of alleged duress and representations or promises by her attorney that she would be sentenced to not more than 30 days in jail, offered no evidence at hearing on motion in addition to affidavit attached thereto and affidavit controverting people's counter affidavits, probation officer's report on file noted that movant made complete confession, and evidence showed that she assisted officers in returning stolen merchandise to owners, superior court did not err in denying motion.

3. Criminal law 🔑998

The exceptional remedy of motion to vacate judgment of conviction was not designed to enable guilty person to escape punishment, but to purify administration of justice, and may be utilized only on strong and convincing showing of deprivation of legal rights by extrinsic causes.

4. Criminal law 🔑274

The fact that defendant did not receive milder punishment on pleading guilty than that which she thought might be meted out if she stood trial, or fact that she might be placed in position to receive milder punishment for other crimes, if such plea were set aside, presents no ground for court's exercise of discretion to permit withdrawal of plea.

5. Criminal law 🔑274

The fact that defendant entered plea of guilty solely on her counsel's advice is not available as ground for withdrawal of plea as fraudulently obtained.

6. Criminal law 🔑1178

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie E. Still and Edward R. Brand, Judges.

Mollie Donegan and Loraine Ormsby pleaded guilty of burglary, and, from a judgment sentencing defendant Ormsby to the penitentiary and an order denying her motion to vacate the judgment, she appeals.

Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order denying motion to vacate judgment affirmed.

John S. Cooper, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

In a complaint filed in the Municipal Court of the City of Long Beach, defendants were charged in two counts with commission of the crime of burglary. Upon arraignment both defendants were represented by counsel and regularly pleaded guilty to the offenses charged. Thereupon, the cause was certified to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for sentence, pursuant to the provisions of section 859a of the Penal Code. Defendants applied for probation and in due course probation was granted to the defendant Donegan but was denied as to appellant, who was sentenced to Tehachapi. Judgment was entered on September 29, 1941.

On October 15, 1941, appellant employed her present counsel, who secured a thirty-day stay of execution and on November 13, 1941, filed a notice of motion to vacate said judgment praying that appellant either be placed on probation or be permitted to change her plea to "not guilty" so as to allow her to be tried for the offenses charged against her.

Accompanying said motion was appellant's affidavit to the effect that she had employed her former counsel because she was told that he was not only competent but that he had influence with the Long Beach office of the district attorney as well as the courts, and that he was related to one of the deputy district attorneys; that she was persuaded to plead guilty by her said attorney upon the representation that he had consulted with the officers and the deputy district attorney in charge of the case and that, in his opinion as an attorney, she would not receive more than a thirty-day jail sentence; that she would not have received a greater sentence if she had been tried; that her plea of guilty was induced by fear and persuasion, and that regardless of her guilt or innocence she would not have entered a plea of guilty if she had known, suspected or believed that she would receive a penitentiary sentence.

Counter affidavits were filed by the prosecution stating that appellant's plea was entered freely and voluntarily and without any persuasion exerted by her attorney; that said attorney had not discussed the case with any member of the district attorney's office; that appellant assisted in the return of approximately $5,000 worth of merchandise to the lawful owners in an effort to make restitution; that before sentence appellant was advised by her attorney that the probation department had recommended that probation be denied her and that she would probably be sentenced to Tehachapi; that her attorney did not advise her that she would not be compelled to serve more than thirty days in the county jail.

Thereafter appellant filed additional affidavits which did not materially add to the allegations of her original affidavit. The motion was argued and submitted on said affidavits and denied by the court.

From the judgment and the order denying her motion to vacate said judgment, appellant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Appellant urges that she was improperly held to answer by the committing magistrate for the reason that said officer certified the defendants to the superior court "without taking any evidence, any stipulation or otherwise * * * that such procedure absolutely invalidates all the proceedings in this case, as there was no evidence, no deposition, nothing except a complaint made by a police officer upon information and belief."

The complaint herein conforms strictly to the provisions of sections 806, 951 and 952 of the Penal Code. Section 8, article I of the Constitution of this state provides: "* * * and upon such plea of guilty, the magistrate shall immediately commit the defendant to the sheriff and certify the case, including a copy of all proceedings therein and such testimony as in his discretion he may require to be taken, to the superior court, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as if such defendant had pleaded guilty in such court." Section 859a of the Penal Code outlines the procedure to be followed in language identical to that last quoted. Accordingly, no error was made by the magistrate when he committed appellant to the superior court without taking any evidence after she had pleaded guilty to the crimes charged in the complaint, which conformed strictly to the provisions of the code sections which define, indicate the form and the manner in which the commission of an offense shall be charged against a defendant. Secs. 806, 951, 952, Pen.Code. The magistrate followed the procedure laid down by section 859a of the Penal Code in committing and certifying appellant to the superior court, which was all that could be required of him in the circumstances presented by the record herein.

[2] Appellant complains that "the court erred in refusing to vacate and set aside the judgment and sentence herein because of the alleged duress and promises under which any plea was made." Such contention cannot be sustained.

Attached to her motion to vacate and set aside the judgment was appellant's affidavit to the effect that her attorney made certain representations or promises to her that she would be sentenced to not more than 30 days in jail in the event she entered a plea of guilty. Thereafter respondent filed counter-affidavits denying such allegations and averring that appellant had entered her plea of guilty freely and voluntarily. Appellant then filed additional affidavits controverting said counter-affidavits. Respondent also filed additional affidavits by the deputy district attorneys who handled the prosecution, denying that they had discussed the case with or had made any promises to either appellant or her attorney as to what action the court might take in the event that she pleaded guilty. Appellant offered no additional evidence at the hearing, although the court afforded her an opportunity to do so.

Appellant's motion is based in part upon the probation officer's report on file, wherein it is noted that she made a complete confession of her guilt. Moreover, it is shown by the record that appellant assisted the officers in returning approximately $5,000 worth of mechandise to the lawful owners in an effort to make restitution which in effect was an admission of her guilt.

[3-5] The exceptional remedy of a motion to vacate a judgment of conviction "was not designed to enable the guilty to escape punishment, but to purify and keep pure the administration of justice, and the same may be utilized only upon a strong and convincing showing of the deprivation of legal rights by extrinsic causes." People v. Gottlieb, 25 Cal.App.2d 411, 415, 77 P.2d 489, 491. Furthermore, the "fact that a defendant did not receive a milder punishment by pleading guilty than that which he thought might be meted out to him if he stood trial, or the fact, as in the instant case, that the defendant might be placed in a position to receive a milder punishment for other crimes if his plea of guilty to a particular offense were set aside, presents no ground for the exercise of the discretion necessary to permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn. People v. Manriquez, 188 Cal. 602, 206 P. 63, 20 A.L.R. 1441. Neither does it avail appellant anything that he entered his plea solely on the advice of his counsel representing him in the case, because this falls far short of being a fraudulently obtained plea." People v. Gottlieb, supra.

[6, 7] Appellant's appeal from the judgment is not urged in the brief now before this court and it must be assumed that he intended to abandon it. As a matter of fact the judgment herein was entered on September 29, 1941. Appellant gave no oral notice of appeal therefrom and the written notice of appeal from the said judgment was not filed until December 16, 1941; also, her order for a transcript on appeal requests only the preparation of the proceedings had after the entry of said judgment. It follows that said appeal was not taken within the time provided by section 1239 of the Penal Code.

For the reasons stated, the purported appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying motion to vacate and set aside the judgment is affirmed.

WOODS v. RECHENMACHER, County Clerk.

Civ. 6761.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 7, 1942.

1. Judgment 🔑275

Under statute requiring entry of judgment in conformity to verdict within 24 hours after rendition thereof, a stay of entry of judgment upon a verdict until determination of an appeal from an order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was not authorized where case was not reserved for further argument or consideration, the verdict was not defective and where such stay deprived plaintiff of interest on the judgment and the possible benefit of the lien thereof. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 664, 674.

2. Judgment 🔑275

Under the statute requiring judgment to be entered in conformity to verdict within 24 hours after rendition of verdict and which provides for an automatic stay of entry of judgment until decision upon a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a further stay for the purpose of allowing losing party to secure ruling of an appellate court upon his motion for judgment notwithstanding before proceeding with a motion for new trial is not authorized. Code Civ.Proc. § 664.

3. Appeal and error 🔑449

Granting a stay of entry of judgment upon verdict, until determination of an appeal from an order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding, for the purpose of giving defendant additional time to move for new trial, was not within the inherent power of a court, since the avoidance of the pendency of more than one appeal in a case was not a function of the trial court necessary to its existence and plaintiff had the right to have judgment entered promptly, to draw interest thereon and the benefit of the lien thereof upon property of defendant.

Proceeding in mandamus by Walter Woods against L. Rechenmacher, clerk of the superior court of Placer County, to compel defendant to enter judgment on the verdict of the jury.

Writ granted.

Jas. F. Brennan and Chas. J. Janigian, both of San Francisco and Charles A. Tuttle, of Auburn, for petitioner.

T. L. Chamberlain, Lowell L. Sparks, and Gerald B. Wallace, all of Auburn, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the clerk of the Superior Court of Placer County to enter judgment on the verdict of a jury.

In an action brought in the Superior Court of Placer County, California, Woods sought damages for personal injuries. Trial was had before a jury which, on September 13, 1941, returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $5,200. On the same date and before entry of judgment defendants moved the trial court to enter judgment in their favor notwithstanding the verdict, reserving the right to apply for a new trial if said motion was denied. On October 3, 1941, the court made the following order, which was entered in its Minutes:

"It is hereby ordered that defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict of the jury be and the same is hereby denied.

"It Is Further Ordered that a stay of proceedings herein be granted so that the entry of judgment be stayed until defendants have an opportunity to perfect an appeal from the order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, if so advised, and in the event that an appeal is perfected, the entry of judgment shall be stayed until the determination of said appeal and the filing of the remittitur with the Clerk of this Court."

On October 10, 1941, Woods filed in this court a petition for alternative writ of mandate to be directed to L. Rechenmacher, county clerk of Placer County, directing her forthwith to enter judgment on the verdict in the said action or show cause why she had not done so.

The facts above stated were set forth in the petition, and it was also alleged that the aforesaid order that entry of judgment be stayed is null and void, that the court had no jurisdiction, power or warrant of law to issue said order; that said order causes unnecessary delay in the final determination of said cause, and prevents the entry of judgment and the running of interest thereon in favor of plaintiff; that plaintiff is of the age of seventy years and may die before judgment be entered, all to plaintiff's irreparable damage; that the respondent clerk has, after a written request of plaintiff so to do, refused and still refuses to enter judgment on said verdict because of said void order; and that said order shows on its face that its only effect is to delay final determination of the cause and that it can serve no other purpose, as all of defendants' rights with respect to said motion can be obtained by motion for a new trial or an appeal if said motion be denied.

Upon order of this court an alternative writ was issued on October 10, 1941. On October 28, 1941, respondent L. Rechenmacher filed a return and answer thereto, in which she based her refusal to enter judgment after verdict upon the aforesaid order of the court, and asserted that said order was within the jurisdiction and power of the court by reason of general law, and inherent power of the court, and section 664 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California. She further alleged that said order was made under the circumstances and for the reason that on October 2, 1941, Charles A. Tuttle, one of the attorneys of record for plaintiff, and Gerald B. Wallace, an associate of one of the attorneys of record for defendants in said superior court action, called at the chambers of the judge of said court and discussed the possible effects of a ruling upon the motion then under submission; that attorney Wallace expressed the view that if the court decided to deny defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, confusion could be avoided if an order were made staying the entry of judgment so that the time for giving notice of intention to move for a new trial would not commence to run, in the event that said defendant concluded to appeal from said order; that if a motion for a new trial were proceeded with and the court should grant said motion there was a possibility of a new trial being held while an appeal was still pending; that the District Court of Appeal had authority to enter judgment in favor of defendants on such appeal is so disposed, and that consequently a new trial would involve useless and needless expense to plaintiff and defendants and would result in inconvenience and uncertainty to all parties concerned; that attorney Wallace presented to the trial judge a proposed draft of an order staying proceedings, which said draft of proposed order was handed to the respondent on October 3, 1941, by said judge, with instructions to make it a part of the order denying said defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict; and that said order was forthwith duly entered by respondent in the minute book of the court.

It was also alleged that defendants had filed notice of appeal from the order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding, and at the date of the return and answer the official transcript was in course of preparation.

On November 11, 1941, the transcript on said appeal was filed in this court. On February 2, 1942, by order of the Supreme Court the case was transferred to the District Court of Appeal for the First District, Division Two, which, on April 17, 1942, affirmed the order of the trial court refusing judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Woods v. Walker, 51 Cal.App.2d 307, 124 P.2d 844. On June 16, 1942, a petition to the Supreme Court for hearing therein was denied.

The question presented for determination here is then, whether, under the facts of the case, the trial court had power and authority after verdict by the jury awarding damages to plaintiff to stay the entry of a judgment in conformity to the verdict until the determination of an appeal from its order denying defendants' motion for judgment in their favor notwithstanding the verdict.

Section 664 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict, within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict (provided that in justices' courts such judgment shall be entered in the docket at once), unless the court order the case to be reserved for argument or further consideration, or grant a stay of proceedings. When a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is pending, entry of judgment in conformity to the verdict shall be automatically stayed until the court has rendered its decision upon the motion."

In the present instance the case was not reserved for argument or further consideration. The stay of proceedings was granted so that the time within which defendants could move for a new trial would not begin to run until said defendants had an opportunity to perfect an appeal from the order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, if so advised, and the coming down of the remittitur from the appellate court. It is not contended that there was any legal obstacle to having a motion for a new trial made and heard pending such appeal or that any hardship would have been imposed upon defendants had the judgment been entered in conformity with Section 664, supra. It is not denied that the stay of judgment for plaintiff deprived him of the right to interest on the amount of his award during the time necessary for a decision on such appeal or that he was not also deprived of the right to the security of a lien upon any real property belonging to defendants as provided by section 674 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California. It is not contended that there was any defect or uncertainty or ambiguity in the verdict of the jury or that it was not responsive to the issues in the case.

An analogous situation was presented in State v. District Court, 50 Mont. 1, 144 P. 564. Section 6800 of the Revised Codes of Montana, 1907 provides (as does § 664, supra) that "When trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict, within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict, unless the court order the case to be reserved for argument or further consideration, or grant a stay of proceedings." In that case, after verdict by a jury awarding plaintiff damages the court ordered the verdict to be filed but "ordered further that no judgment be entered, and that the case be reserved for further argument and consideration, and ordered that in the meantime a stay of proceedings be had." The trial court having refused to vacate this order on demands made by plaintiff, mandamus was sought by the state on the relation of plaintiff against the court and the judge thereof, to compel the vacation of the order staying the entry of judgment, and to order the entry of such judgment. In its return the court set forth that the order was not a final one denying judgment but was one authorized by the code section supra; that the court had requested counsel to argue the question whether the court could, on its own motion, set aside the verdict and grant a new trial; that argument had been had and briefs requested but not filed.

The Supreme Court said that from the return it was clear the trial court, believing the jury had wrongly decided the issues, stayed the entry of judgment pending the discussion and decision of a proposition which had nothing whatever to do with the form of the verdict, with its responsiveness to the issues, or with its adequacy in any respect to support a judgment; that while a court may, under some circumstances, reserve a case for argument or grant a stay, in view of the fact that the prevailing party is prima facie entitled to have judgment entered as directed in section 6800, supra, and that a duty is thereby imposed upon the clerk from which he is absolved pending the stay, it must be that neither reservation nor stay can be alllowed ex gratia or without adequate reason; that generally speaking this is certainly true of a stay after judgment (State v. Clements, 37 Mont. 96, 94 P. 837, 127 Am.St.Rep. 701); and that a stay before judgment is a more serious matter than a stay after judgment. Citing and quoting from Freeman on Judgments, 4th Ed., § 42.

The court further said that the stay complained of was confessedly in aid of a new trial contemplated by the court upon its own motion, but that a stay for such purpose is properly granted only after notice of intention has been given, and that such notice cannot be given until after the entry of judgment (citing §§ 6796 and 6798, Revised Codes of Montana); and that from this it would seem to follow that a stay before judgment for such purpose would be a legal impossibility. It was said also that the "case" was not reserved for argument or further consideration; that the "case" was held up pending argument on a collateral matter, because in Montana, while a court may refuse to receive a verdict which is insufficient, it may not set aside a verdict upon substantial grounds save by granting a new trial, nor grant a new trial save upon motion, etc., as provided in the code. The conclusion was that a case may be reserved for argument under section 6800, supra, only when the judgment does not necessarily follow the verdict or where, after discharge of the jury the verdict is claimed to be unresponsive to the issues or so ambiguous or informal that no judgment proper under the issues could be entered in conformity with it.

Also it was added that as plaintiff was entitled to have judgment in conformity with the verdict from the moment it was entered she was entitled to have such judgment entered nunc pro tunc; and the order of the court was that respondents vacate the order forbidding entry of judgment and direct entry thereof.

Freeman in his work on Judgments, 4th Ed., says in section 42:

"The Code of Civil Procedure in California requires the clerk to enter judgment in conformity with the verdict within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict, unless the court orders the case reserved for further consideration, or grants a stay of proceedings. If there is no doubt as to what judgment is proper, the better practice is to enter it at once. The judgment may as well be set aside as the verdict. Therefore such proceedings as may be appropriate to securing a new trial, or any other right of the losing party, can be prosecuted as advantageously upon granting a stay of proceedings upon the judgment as upon the verdict. The immediate entering of judgment authorizes the making up of the judgment roll, and thus secures a lien on the judgment debtor's real estate. To this security he is at once justly entitled. If the court delays in granting it to him, he may during the stay of proceedings be deprived of the fruits of his litigation."

Cited by Freeman is Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 50, in which case, after verdict, a motion was made for stay of proceedings to enable plaintiff to move for a new trial. No judgment was entered. Some months thereafter a motion for a new trial was overruled and entry of judgment on the verdict was ordered. The main error assigned on appeal was that judgment was entered in vacation; but before proceeding to determine that point the court said at page 51 of 13 Cal., "we think it well, in order to secure uniformity of practice to suggest that we consider it better, in all cases where there is no question as to the proper judgment to be entered on the verdict, for the Court to direct judgment to be entered at once, without waiting for a motion for a new trial or any proceedings to set aside the verdict. The judgment can be as well set aside as the verdict, while there may be some embarrassments, as in this case, attending the postponement of the entry, and the plaintiff ought to have the benefit of the security, which is sometimes very important, afforded by the lien of the judgment. A suspension of all proceedings under the judgment fully protects the losing party from all loss or injury if, from any cause, the verdict be set aside or the judgment vacated."

Also see 14 Cal.Jur. section 37, 924, citing Hutchinson v. Bours, supra.

[1, 2] Conceding that by virtue of section 664, supra, a court is authorized to stay entry of judgment under some circumstances, we are of the opinion that the circumstances of this case did not justify such action. The case was not reserved for further argument or consideration, nor is it contended that there was anything defective in the verdict which would raise any doubt as to what judgment was proper. It does not appear that any real confusion would have arisen if the orderly processes of the law had been followed, even though a motion for a new trial were heard pending appeal from the order denying judgment notwithstanding the verdict. On the other hand it is not denied that plaintiff is injured by the stay as he is deprived of his right to interest until judgment is entered, and is also deprived of the possible benefit of the lien of his judgment. Section 664, supra, stays entry of judgment pending the decision of the court upon a motion for judgment, notwithstanding the verdict; further stay of entry of judgment for the mere purpose of allowing a losing party to secure the ruling of an appellate court upon his motion for judgment notwithstanding before proceeding with a motion for a new trial is not, we believe, authorized thereby.

[3] Respondent argues, however, that authority to order such a stay is within the inherent powers of a court—that courts have such inherent powers as are "essential to their existence and to the due administration of justice"; that presumptively whatever judicial procedure is essential to enable courts to exercise their functions is authorized under their inherent powers, and that to enable the court in the instant case "to exercise its function of having only one appeal pending at a time" in the case of Woods v. Walker it had inherent power to stay the entry of judgment.

But it cannot be said that the avoidance of the pendency of more than one appeal in a case is a "function" of the trial court, essential to the existence of the court. And in view of the right conferred upon plaintiff by the statutes of this state to have judgment upon the verdict in his favor entered promptly, to draw interest on the amount of his judgment until satisfaction of same, and to have the benefit of a lien upon the property of defendants for his security, it cannot be said that the granting of the stay in this case was necessary to or tended to promote the due administration of justice.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue commanding respondent forthwith to enter judgment for plaintiff upon said verdict of the jury, nunc pro tunc as of October 3, 1941.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action by Thomas M. Reardon and another against L. A. Melbourne and another for commissions for procuring purchaser for realty, and for other relief. From an adverse judgment, the named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas M. Hamilton, of San Diego, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of Thomas M. Reardon against L. A. Melbourne for $162.50.

Plaintiffs' amended complaint attempts to state four causes of action.

In the first cause of action it is alleged that Reardon is a duly licensed real estate broker; that on January 21, 1940, Reardon and Melbourne entered into a contract concerning the sale of real property in San Diego and that Melbourne signed a memorandum in writing agreeing to pay Reardon $162.50 commission if he found a buyer at the price of $3,250; that Reardon procured his co-plaintiff, Joseph C. Ventura, as a buyer, "who is ready, willing, and able to purchase the said property and has tendered the purchase price"; that Melbourne refused to pay Reardon the commission of $162.50.

The second cause of action incorporated the allegation of the first by reference and alleged that when Melbourne agreed to pay Reardon the commission he was acting in his own behalf and not as agent and wrongfully held himself out as acting for and on behalf of the real owner of the real estate.

The third cause of action incorporated therein by reference paragraphs I, II, and III of the first cause of action which alleged residence of plaintiffs in San Diego, that Reardon was a licensed real estate broker and that Melbourne signed the written memorandum to pay the commission. It was further alleged that the other defendant, Martha J. Reichmuth, was the owner of the real property; that she "entered into a contract in writing to sell the said real property in the City of San Diego, State of California, for the sum of $3,250.00; that the plaintiff, Joseph C. Ventura, contracted and agreed to buy the said real property for the said sum; that he is ready, willing and able to buy the said property, has tendered a purchase price" and that defendant Reichmuth refused to sell it; that Ventura has been damaged by such refusal by being deprived of the rentals at the rate of $40 per month "and that he is entitled to specific performance of the said contract."

The fourth cause of action incorporated by reference the allegations of the first cause of action and alleged that in agreeing to pay Reardon a commission Melbourne "was acting as the agent lawfully authorized of defendant, Martha J. Reichmuth"; that the commission is due and owing Reardon from her.

The prayer prays judgment against Melbourne or Reichmuth in the sum of $162.50; for judgment in favor of Ventura against Reichmuth for damages for loss of rent in the sum of $40 per month from March 5, 1940; that Ventura have judgment against Reichmuth that she "specifically perform her contract" and convey the real property to him.

Defendants demurred both generally and specially to all counts of the complaint.

On March 11, 1941, the trial court entered judgment of nonsuit "with prejudice" in favor of Reichmuth. This judgment contains the following recital: "* * * and plaintiffs having in open court admitted that they had no cause of action against the defendant, Martha J. Reichmuth, and plaintiffs having consented in open court that a judgment of nonsuit be entered against them in favor of Martha J. Reichmuth. * * *"

On March 12, 1941, judgment was entered in favor of Reardon against Melbourne in the sum of $162.50. Findings were waived, but the court did find in the judgment that "the allegations of the second cause of action in plaintiffs' amended complaint are true."

Melbourne urges as a ground for reversal of the judgment that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action and that his demurrer should have been sustained. The demurrer should have been sustained, especially as to the third count in which there is apparently some attempt made, though a vague and futile one, to state a cause of action for specific performance. 23 Cal.Jur. 495, § 53, et seq., and cases cited.

[1] Reardon attempts to support the judgment by urging that the court had jurisdiction because the action involved the ownership of real property and had as one purpose the specific enforcement of a contract to convey real property; that once having acquired jurisdiction the court could render any proper money judgment for an amount within the exclusive jurisdiction of the municipal court though it decided the specific performance issue against plaintiffs, citing Morrissey v. Morrissey, 191 Cal. 782, 218 P. 396. As a general rule his argument is well supported by the authorities.

We will assume, without holding, contrary to the contentions of Melbourne, that the causes of actions and parties were properly joined. § 378 et seq., Code Civ. Proc.; § 427, Code Civ. Proc.

The jurisdiction of the trial court must depend on the purported cause of action for specific performance, for the maximum amount of money judgments sought against both defendants was far short of $2,000, which, in the absence of the purported equitable cause of action, would place jurisdiction exclusively in the municipal court.

To bring this case without the general rule, we have here a pleading that does not state any cause of action for specific performance. Further, we have the plaintiffs admitting in open court "that they had no cause of action against the defendant, Martha J. Reichmuth," and consenting to judgment in her favor.

[2, 3] We do not believe that jurisdiction can be conferred on the superior court by any such proceeding. Plaintiffs' pleading did not state an equitable cause of action. It only hinted at one. Plaintiffs admitted they had no such cause of action. Having none they should not have attempted to plead one. If such a proceeding were approved a plaintiff could confer jurisdiction on the superior court by simply adding to his legitimate cause of action, properly belonging in the municipal court, allegations of an imaginary cause of action falling within the jurisdiction of the superior court. This should not be permitted especially when the imaginary cause of action is abandoned before trial.

The rule on motions for change of venue because of non-residence of the defendants in the county in which the action is pending should be applicable here. If a resident defendant is joined and he is palpably an unnecessary party against whom no cause of action exists the fact of his being joined will not prevent the nonresident defendants from having the place of trial changed to the county of their residence. 25 Cal.Jur. p. 87, § 21.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred E. Paonessa, Judge.

Action by John E. Zehnder and another against Raymond R. Spaulding and others for injuries to plaintiffs when their automobile collided with an automobile driven by named defendant. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hubert W. Swender, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. W. Brunton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This appeal, which is prosecuted from a judgment awarding the sum of $2,000 damages to plaintiffs for injuries sustained by them in a collision between their automobile and one driven by defendant Raymond R. Spaulding, a minor, is presented to this court upon an engrossed bill of exceptions. From said bill of exceptions and the statements of fact contained in the briefs, it appears that said collision occurred under the following circumstances:

On May 25, 1941, the respondent John E. Zehnder, accompanied by his wife, respondent Alice Zehnder, was driving a De Soto automobile in a southerly direction along Haskell Avenue, an unpaved highway twenty feet in width running north and south through a sparsely-settled section of San Fernando Valley in the city and county of Los Angeles. As the De Soto approached the intersection of Haskell Avenue with Lassen Avenue, a paved highway running in an easterly and westerly direction, the paved portion thereof being twenty feet in width, the view to respondents' right was completely obscured by a row of trees growing along the westerly side of Haskell Avenue until they reached a point twenty to twenty-five feet north of the northerly curb line of said Lassen Avenue. Traveling at the rate of fifteen miles per hour, respondents at this point looked to their right and were able to see westerly along Lassen Avenue a distance of 200 feet. They saw no automobile on the highway within said distance of 200 feet, but they did observe a pedestrian walking in a westerly direction on Lassen Avenue about 100 or 150 feet west of its intersection with Haskell Avenue. Respondents then looked to their left in an easterly direction toward Lassen Avenue. However, because there was a high growth of weeds along said easterly side of Haskell, they were unable to see what traffic, if any, was approaching the intersection from the east until the front wheels of their automobile were approximately on the north edge of the paved portion of Lassen Avenue. When it appeared that no traffic was approaching the intersection from the left or east, respondent John E. Zehnder shifted into low gear and proceeded into the intersection at a speed of fifteen miles per hour. It is admitted that respondents did not again look to their right until just an instant before the moment of impact between their De Soto and a Willys automobile which was being driven in an easterly direction on Lassen Avenue by the appellant Raymond R. Spaulding. The impact of the two cars occurred in the south half of Lassen Avenue, the Willys striking the De Soto at about the location of the front seat resulting in the breaking off of the front left wheel which caused the De Soto to skid on its axle or frame in an easterly direction along the southerly edge of the paved portion of Lassen Avenue a distance of approximately forty-nine feet.

Appellant Raymond R. Spaulding testified that he did not see respondents or their automobile until the moment of the impact.

Appellants urge that the court erred as a matter of law in making its findings of fact to the effect that respondent John E. Zehnder was operating his automobile "in a prudent manner" at the time of the accident, and that said respondent was not guilty of contributory negligence . In this connection, appellants argue that respondents' "action in looking to their right while at a distance of from 20 to 25 feet from the intersection curb line, and where their vision was limited to a distance of only 200 feet up Lassen avenue, is tantamount to not looking at all; at least it is not looking on entering the intersection, and constitutes contributory negligence as a matter of law." In support of their contention, appellants quote the following excerpt from the case of Holibaugh v. Ito, 21 Cal.App.2d 480, 486, 69 P.2d 871, 874; "* * * it is the duty of the driver of a vehicle which is approaching an intersection of highways where other vehicles are liable to pass, to look both ways before entering such intersection." (Italics added.)

The record reveals as a matter of fact that respondents did look both ways before they crossed the twenty-foot paved portion of Lassen Avenue. Traveling at fifteen miles per hour they looked to the right westerly along Lassen when they were within twenty or twenty-five feet of the intersection, and when the front wheels of their car were on the north edge of the pavement on Lassen Avenue, they looked to the left or east. Respondent John E. Zehnder then shifted into low gear and proceeded to cross the said twenty-foot paved section of Lassen Avenue and, having safely negotiated the first ten feet thereof, was struck when his car reached the second ten feet or the south half of the paved section of Lassen Avenue. When respondents looked to the right they had a clear view of Lassen Avenue for a distance of 200 feet to the west, at which time appellants' car was not in sight. From that point to the moment of impact, estimating the width of the shoulder on the north edge of Lassen Avenue at ten feet, respondents' car traveled at most not over fifty feet, during which time, as heretofore stated, respondents looked both to the right and to the left.

[1, 2] It is only "When a person takes no precautions at all for his own safety and is injured, and this conclusion is uncontroverted, [that] contributory negligence is a question to be decided by the court. White v. Davis, 103 Cal.App. 531, 542, 284 P. 1086; Stephens v. Kaufmann, 137 Cal.App. 328, 331, 30 P.2d 536. If evidence is introduced relative to the degree or requisite vigilance, and the inferences therefrom are honestly debatable, it becomes a question of fact for the jury to determine. Gore v. Market Street Ry. Co. [4 Cal.2d 154], 48 P.2d 2; Salomon v. Meyer, 1 Cal.2d 11, 15, 32 P.2d 631; Anderson v. Market St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal.App. 282, 285, 2 P.2d 529. In the instant case, whether respondent looked in the direction from which appellant was approaching, whether the point from which observation was made was prudently selected, whether respondent should have seen appellant's car within a distance of sixty feet, whether respondent should have looked north and south, or north alone, and whether due vigilance was observed continuously, were disputable questions of fact upon which reasonable minds might legitimately debate and honestly reach different conclusions. The question was properly submitted to the jury, and its finding under all the circumstances of the case is conclusive upon appeal." Lavin v. Fereira, 10 Cal.App.2d 710, 712, 52 P.2d 518, 519.

[3] In the instant case whether respondents, particularly the driver of the car, John E. Zehnder, exercised reasonable care in keeping a proper outlook and whether he acted as a reasonable man in not again looking to the right before he proceeded across the intersection were questions of fact for the court to determine and, having resolved them in favor of respondents, this court is powerless to interfere. It is noteworthy that, according to the bill of exceptions, the only evidence produced on behalf of appellants was to the effect that appellant Raymond R. Spaulding did not see the respondents or their automobile until the moment of impact.

[4] In the circumstances presented by the record herein, there was no error on the part of the trial court in making the findings of fact complained of.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

Robert T. Linney and Buel R. Wood, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, upon trial by jury, was found guilty of the crime of receiving stolen property. His motion for new trial was denied and from this ruling, as well as from the judgment pronounced on the verdict, he appeals. Three points are urged: (1) that the information does not state a public offense; (2) that defendant was convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; and (3) that the trial court erred, to the prejudice of the defendant, in admitting over objection evidence tending to show a separate offense. Neither of the first two points is tenable but the third one presents an error which requires a new trial.

Material Facts.

For all of the evidence tending directly to establish the commission of the offense and defendant's connection therewith the plaintiff relies on the testimony of admitted thieves. The witness Boyle testified that prior to his arrest (some months before defendant's trial) he had been regularly engaged in stealing automobiles and disposing of the parts and accessories; that he had stolen a "few hundred;" that on the night of February 27, 1941, he stole a 1941 Chevrolet coupe (identified by stipulation as the property of one Melvin L. Williams). On the same night he removed from that car five green-painted wheels, together with their mounted U. S. Royal tires and tubes, and, by prearrangement with one Estes, placed such wheels and tires "in a garage in the 1700 block on Magnolia in the alley." He stated that in or about the month of February, 1941, and on one or more other occasions he had accompanied Estes to defendant's place of business, denominated the Broken Drum Wrecking Company, located on San Fernando Boulevard in Los Angeles County. While there, on the first occasion, he heard Estes ask defendant "how many tires he wanted the next time and whether he would want any generators or anything else and how soon he could use some more." Defendant said he wanted some but the witness did not recall how many or what was ordered. Such witness further stated that on the occasion in February, 1941, he and Estes "delivered some tires and wheels."

The witness Estes testified in substance that he had been engaged for about twenty months in either stealing automobiles or in receiving and disposing of the parts and accessories of stolen cars. He said that he had made "twelve to fifteen hundred" sales of his "merchandise" and of that number that thirty-five or forty had been transactions with the defendant. He stated that his first deal with defendant was in June or July, 1939, concerning which time, speaking of tires and wheels, he testified, "I told him what I had and he asked me how hot they were and I said 'they are hot from two or three days back' and he said 'All right, bring them out and I will take a look at them.'" From then on, he said, until the witness' arrest in March, 1941, he saw the defendant "every week or ten days" and on each occasion either sold or delivered merchandise to him or collected for it or discussed proposed deals. He testified specifically that on the morning of February 28, 1941, he took from the "garage in the 1700 block Magnolia Street" five Chevrolet wheels with tires and tubes, and sold and delivered them to the defendant; that the wheels were painted green and the tires were U. S. Royal Cords, size 16-600; that the defendant paid him $25 for the merchandise. He described the transaction as follows: "I got out and went in and seen him. He said 'What have you got this time?' And I said 'Tires and wheels.' * * * He said 'Bring them in' and then he said 'Put them in that tire shed right there.' * * * He says 'I guess you want $5.00 each for these the same as yesterday?' And I said 'Yes, sir.' * * * He gave me $10.00 * * * said he would give me the rest of the money in about a week or ten days."

Sufficiency of the Pleading.

[1] As to the first point, defendant contends that the information is insufficient in that it does not describe with adequate particularity the property alleged to have been unlawfully received by defendant. The pleading certainly is not a model to be commended and by the expenditure of a slight amount of legal skill and care could have been substantially improved, but its imperfection lies in the uncertainty of its description rather than in failure to state any essential fact. The pertinent language alleged that defendant feloniously received "five wheels and tires, which was then and there of the personal property of Melvin L. Williams." It is true that defendant was not apprised by this pleading as to whether the wheels and tires had any connection with each other; as to whether the wheels were spinning wheels, emery wheels, bicycles, or some other or others of a vast number of types; or as to whether the tires were of steel or rubber, casings or tubes, or of other description. But if the defendant needed more particularity of averment to enable him to answer the charge his remedy was by demurrer, Penal Code, §§ 1004, 1012, and having failed to demur he must be deemed to have waived the defect. People v. Mead, (1904) 145 Cal. 500, 503, 78 P. 1047; People v. Horvath, (1913) 23 Cal. App. 306, 307, 137 P. 1069; People v. Schroeder, (1919) 43 Cal.App. 623, 625, 185 P. 507; People v. Price, (1927) 81 Cal. App. 668, 670, 254 P. 640.

Vendor of Stolen Property is not Accomplice of Vendee

[2, 3] In support of point two defendant urges that the witness Estes was an accomplice of defendant and that his testimony was not corroborated within the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code that "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." The definition of accomplice in the last sentence of the section quoted shows that defendant's position on this point is untenable. While the witness Estes may be regarded either as an accomplice of Boyle in stealing the automobile or as himself becoming guilty of receiving stolen property in his receipt thereof from Boyle, such offenses were complete before he contacted the defendant as to this particular property. By purchasing and receiving such property from Estes the defendant became guilty of an offense separate and distinct from that committed by Estes when the latter received it from Boyle. Under no construction of the evidence can the defendant's purchase and receipt of the property from Estes be regarded as an effort by defendant to assist Estes in his unlawful receipt of the same merchandise from Boyle. Although the action of each tended to prevent the owner from again possessing his property such action in each case was obviously motivated by the desire to secure gain for himself alone. The defendant did not share or participate at all in the original receipt, or in the possession, of the property by Estes and Estes did not share or participate in any way in the possession of such property by defendant. Having sold and delivered the merchandise to defendant, Estes was no longer interested in it. The vendor of stolen property is not an accomplice of his vendee. See People v. Williams, (1935) 7 Cal.App.2d 600, 603, 46 P.2d 796; People v. Layman, (1931) 117 Cal.App. 476, 480, 4 P.2d 244; In re Morton, (1918) 179 Cal. 510, 513, 514, 177 P. 453. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction is not challenged except on the basis that Estes is an accomplice of defendant. As upon the view above expressed such relationship did not exist we cannot sustain defendant's second point.

Error in Receiving Irrelevant Evidence With Prejudicial Implications

Defendant's third point requires a further statement of facts. As a witness in his own behalf he testified that he had been in the automobile wrecking business for sixteen years; that he had never had in his possession any of the tires or wheels described by the plaintiff's witnesses; that he had never purchased anything from the witness Estes and that he had never known or even seen either Estes or Boyle until they appeared as witnesses against him. He stated particularly that he had been absent from his place of business during the months of June, July and August in the years 1939 and 1940. He also testified, "I never had any tires on my place except what came off automobiles that I bought, and I didn't pay much attention what make they were or what condition they were. I just go out and buy the automobile. If it has new tires on it why I am lucky." On cross-examination the defendant stated, "I used to buy wheels from the wheel dealers. What year they were and what make they were I couldn't tell you * * * I had lots of Chevrolet wheels * * * no 1940 or 1941 models."

At this stage of the proceedings the deputy district attorney injected a series of questions which were neither material nor relevant to any issue before the court. He asked: "And you had four or five Zephyr wheels there, didn't you, 1941?" to which the defendant replied, "I don't remember paying any attention to Zephyr wheels. I don't think there were any wheels later than 1938 or 1939." The prosecuting attorney continued, "Just prior to your arrest didn't you pick up those Zephyr wheels, and state, 'I am going to keep these until the heat blows down,' and then subsequently bring them back?" An objection to that question was sustained, but the deputy district attorney persisted as follows:

"Q. As I understand it your testimony is that you don't recall having any Zephyr wheels in the place of business of the Model 1941 at the time you sold the place? A. To my knowledge up until the time I sold the place there were never any Zephyr wheels on the place.

"Q. The day after your arrest did you go over to the place of business and pick up four Zephyr wheels? A. The day after my arrest I was in jail until late in the afternoon.

"Q. Well, did you or didn't you? A. I did not."

Thereafter the deputy district attorney produced as a witness, one Levy, who was one of the persons to whom defendant had sold his place of business in March, 1941. Over the timely and proper objections of the defendant, the witness Levy was permitted by the court to be interrogated concerning the presence of some Zephyr wheels at the wrecking house and an asserted conversation with the defendant relative thereto. The witness stated that there was a set of Zephyr wheels on the premises when he and his partner took over the business. He testified further, "Mr. Burness [defendant] came into the place after he was released and said he thought it would be better to get that set of Zephyr wheels away from the place while the heat was on. He picked up those wheels and took them away from there and had them out for about three weeks. Then I demanded the wheels back or the money for the wheels and he brought them back."

[4-7] The admission of the foregoing testimony relative to the Zephyr wheels was clearly error. Certainly it cannot be justified as impeachment. A witness may not be impeached on an immaterial or collateral matter. 27 Cal.Jur. 107, 152; People v. Chin Mook Sow, (1877) 51 Cal. 597, 600; People v. Worthington, (1894) 105 Cal. 166, 171, 38 P. 689; People v. Cole, (1900) 127 Cal. 545, 550, 59 P. 984; People v. Smith, (1922) 189 Cal. 31, 35, 207 P. 518; People v. Westcott, (1927) 86 Cal. App. 298, 305, 260 P. 901. It is not competent for the prosecutor to introduce irrelevant evidence falling short of crime and designed merely to degrade and prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury. 8 Cal.Jur. 59; People v. Nelson, (1928) 90 Cal.App. 27, 34, 265 P. 366. There was not the slightest proof that the Zephyr wheels were stolen property or that they had been acquired by defendant from the witness Estes or that they had any connection whatsoever with the issues being tried. Furthermore the situation presented by the record here is not similar to a case in which stolen property has been found in the possession of a defendant and in which he seeks to establish that he acquired possession of such property innocently. In such cases evidence of other offenses may sometimes be admissible to show plan, intent, or guilty knowledge (see People v. De Vaughn, (1934) 136 Cal.App. 746, 750, 751, 29 P.2d 914; People v. Stollmack, (1937) 18 Cal.App.2d 471, 474, 475, 64 P.2d 162), but here there was no such issue. If any merchandise was sold and delivered to the defendant by the witnesses Estes and Boyle it was definitely stolen property. The question is, was the property sold and delivered by them to the defendant? On this point the evidence is squarely conflicting. The two admitted thieves say they did have such transaction; defendant denies any such transaction and denies even having seen or heard of Boyle or Estes before the day of his arrest. The stolen property was not found in his possession. While no motive appears for the making of a false charge by the witnesses the fact is obvious that so far as the circumstances in evidence are concerned they could as easily have lodged their charges against an innocent dealer as against a guilty one. The evil character of such witnesses is established by their own testimony and on their testimony, substantially unaided by circumstances, depends proof of defendant's guilt. Against their testimony were the positive denials of defendant, corroborated in part by other witnesses who were unimpeached and who placed the defendant outside the state at certain of the times when the prosecution witnesses said they had dealt with him at his place of business. In such a situation the error in admitting the gratuitously injected testimony of the witness Levy relative to the Zephyr wheels and his conversation with defendant concerning the same becomes manifestly prejudicial. By such error the defendant was prevented from having the fair trial to which every accused person is entitled. In such a case the provisions of section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution do not justify an affirmance of the judgment (People v. Duvernay, (1941) 43 Cal.App.2d 823, 829, 111 P.2d 659.) While the evidence is legally sufficient to support the judgment, we are unable to conclude that defendant would have been convicted had the error not occurred. Accordingly the judgment must be reversed (People v. Wilson, (1913) 23 Cal.App. 513, 524, 138 P. 971; People v. Degnen, (1925) 70 Cal.App. 567, 606, 234 P. 129; People v. Curtis, (1939) 36 Cal. App.2d 306, 327, 328, 98 P.2d 228.)

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

Whitehurst & Logan, of Patterson, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Stanislaus County entered in favor of defendant after demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained without leave to amend.

This action was instituted by the State of California against Lester K. Gustafson, as executor of the last will and testament of John E. Gustafson, deceased, to recover the sum of $570 alleged to be the reasonable value of the use and occupancy by John E. Gustafson of lots 395 and 396 in Patterson Colony, Stanislaus County, subsequent to the sale of same to the state for nonpayment by said Gustafson of delinquent county taxes. The complaint alleged that the property was deeded to the state on June 29, 1939, but that Gustafson continued to occupy same from December 6, 1937, to December 6, 1940; that on the latter date the state demanded of him the said sum of $570, alleged to be the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of said property during the aforesaid period of occupancy; that on December 7th Gustafson instituted and commenced the payment of delinquent taxes in installments, pursuant to the provisions of section 3817a of the Political Code of the State of California, and that said plan was still in full force and effect; that said John E. Gustafson died testate about December 25, 1940, that Lester K. Gustafson was appointed and qualified as executor of his will, that a claim was duly presented to said executor for the said sum of $570, but that said claim was rejected.

To said complaint defendant demurred on the grounds that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that plaintiff was guilty of laches in that no action to recover possession of said property was instituted for a period of over three years while Gustafson was occupying the property, and that it had permitted decedent to institute the payment of taxes in installments without making or tendering a lease, and after permitting decedent to continue in the occupancy of the premises. Waiver of the right to demand anything for use and occupancy was also set up.

Demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appeals from the judgment in favor of defendant entered thereafter.

Appellant contends that after the deed of Gustafson's property to the state was executed the state became the absolute owner of said real property and that by virtue of such ownership it could require that Gustafson pay to it the reasonable value of his use and occupancy; also that section 3773 of the Political Code of this state, as amended in 1925, specifically gives the state the right to exact from a former owner in possession the reasonable value of his use and occupancy even though no lease is exacted of him, and when he has not been notified in advance of the demand that he would be required to make such payment.

Respondent contends that neither the ownership acquired by the state by virtue of its deed, nor the provisions of section 3773, supra, give the state such right, but that if they do, the institution of an installment redemption plan under section 3817a of the Political Code destroys it; also that by its delay in making a demand upon Gustafson and by its failure to institute an action for possession of the property, the state has waived any right it might have, and that it is estopped to urge it.

The questions presented then, appear to be, first, whether by virtue of its tax deed, and independent of the provisions of section 3773 of the Political Code, the state can compel a former owner who remains in undisturbed possession of tax deeded property without notice that he will be required to pay for his use and occupancy, to pay the reasonable value of such use and occupancy; second, whether section 3773 of the Political Code authorizes the state to exact payment for such use and occupancy under such circumstances; third, whether, if section 3773, supra, gives such right, the institution of redemption proceedings under the installment plan provided for in section 3817a, supra, destroys same; and fourth, whether in this case, the state by its delay in making a demand upon Gustafson, has waived any right it may have had to exact payment for the use and occupancy of the land.

[1, 2] While section 3787 of the Political Code provides that a tax deed conveys to the state the absolute title to the property described therein, with the exceptions stated, such property is nevertheless subject to the right of redemption. The Supreme Court said, in Anglo California Nat. Bank v. Leland, 9 Cal.2d 347, at page 353, 70 P.2d 937, at page 939, that "The title acquired by the state, or an instrumentality thereof, at a tax sale is not the same as that vesting in a private purchaser, since the object of the purchase is not the acquisition of the property, but rather the collection of the taxes. 37 Cyc. 1355, and Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Lucas, Treasurer, 93 U.S. 108, 23 L.Ed. 822." Also, see Blackwell on Tax Titles, 5th ed., § 964.

[3] Appellant cites no cases holding that by virtue of a tax title, alone, a state can compel a former owner left in undisturbed possession to pay for his use and occupancy. Furthermore it is the settled policy of the law to give a delinquent taxpayer every reasonable opportunity compatible with the rights of the state, to redeem his property, and to make his burden as light as possible; (Dougery v. Bettencourt, 214 Cal. 455, 462, 6 P.2d 499; Lachmund v. Johnson, 47 Cal.App.2d 377, 380, 117 P.2d 920); and the return to the tax rolls of the property which has been sold for taxes in order that it may again support general governmental functions is in the public interest. Anglo California Nat. Bank v. Leland, supra, and cases therein cited.

[4] Appellant relies upon section 3334 of the Civil Code which provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of real property in cases not embraced in certain designated sections of the codes, is deemed to be the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, etc.; and it cited Richmond Wharf & Dock Co. v. Blake, 181 Cal. 454, 185 P. 184; Samuels v. Singer, 1 Cal.App.2d 545, 553, 36 P.2d 1098, 37 P.2d 1050, and Cullet Corp. of America v. Rosenberg, 306 Ill. App. 267, 28 N.E.2d 351. But in none of these cases was the property involved tax deeded property, and they are not in point. In the case before us Gustafson cannot be said to have been in possession unlawfully. The execution of the deed of his property to the state did not ipso facto render his possession unlawful (Sears v. Willard, 165 Cal. 12, 14, 130 P. 869; Teich v. Arms, 5 Cal.App. 475, 479, 480, 90 P. 962); and no attempt to dispossess him appears to have been made.

[5] Therefore, we are not inclined to accept the proposition that, solely by virtue of the title acquired through a tax deed, the state can exact payment for the use and occupancy of the property from the former owner left in possession, especially where, as here, such possession has continued without objection by the state. If the state has power to exact such payment it must be by virtue of statutory enactment authorizing such action.

This brings us to the second question above set forth, to-wit: whether, under the circumstances of this case, section 3773 of the Political Code authorizes the state to exact from a former owner in possession, the reasonable value of his use and occupancy of the property.

That section provides in part:

"Notwithstanding any other provisions of law to the contrary, the State, by and through the Controller, shall have the sole and exclusive power and authority to lease and rent, and to receive and collect all rents, issues and profits arising in any manner from property heretofore or hereafter deeded to the State pursuant to the provisions of section 3785 of this code, which power and authority shall accrue from and after the date of recording of the deed to the State.

"The Controller, or any person designated by him, may exact from the former owner of said property, or any person having any interest therein, or any person in the possession, actual or constructive, of said property, or any part thereof, an accounting for said rents, issues and profits, and may, at any time after the recording of the deed to the State as aforesaid, demand and receive possession of the property so conveyed, and such possession shall be surrendered to the Controller or to any person designated by him. On the request of the Controller made to the Attorney General or to the district attorney of the county in which any part of the land is located, an action of unlawful detainer or of ejectment shall be brought in the name of the people against any persons unlawfully occupying the property.

"The Controller or any person designated by him is hereby authorized and empowered to lease and rent such lands, or any part thereof, in the name of the Controller, and for that purpose in the name of the Controller, and under his authority, to agree upon the terms, conditions, rentals and covenants of such leases, to execute, acknowledge, deliver and record the same, to collect the rentals, issues, profits or other consideration accruing or arising under such leases, and give receipts and acquittances therefor, to consent to the assignment or subletting or cancellation of such leases, to give, serve, and post notices and demands concerning the leased premises, including notices and demands under the forcible entry and unlawful detainer acts, to terminate and cancel leases in cases of violation of the terms, conditions and covenants thereof on the part of the lessees, to demand and receive possession of the leased premises, to institute and prosecute actions and proceedings for the recovery of possession of the demised premises, or of the rents, issues and profits thereof, including actions of forcible entry or unlawful detainer or other actions or proceedings concerning the leased premises, including actions to prevent waste or concerning injuries to the premises, or for the removal of appurtenances or fixtures, or the destruction thereof, to authorize repairs necessary to preserve improvements on the lands, and, in the name of the Controller and under his authority, to do and perform such other matters and things as may be necessary in the premises in the matter of leasing lands deeded to the State under the provisions of section 3785 of this code. For the enforcement of the provisions of this paragraph of this section, the Attorney General shall, upon request of the Controller, commence an action on behalf of the State. * * *

"All moneys received by the State Controller for the rental of the tax deeded properties shall be placed in the State Treasury to the credit of the tax deeded land rental fund and shall not be credited on the amount necessary to be paid in redemption of the property." (Italics added.)

Under this section the Legislature has conferred power upon the state to "lease and rent" tax deeded property, and to receive and collect all "rents, issues and profits" arising from the same. Also the controller may exact from the former owner or any person having any interest therein, or any person in possession, actual or constructive, an accounting for rents, issues and profits; demand and receive possession of such property; and secure the institution of proceedings in unlawful detainer or ejectment against any persons unlawfully occupying the property.

It might be noted in passing that if the state merely by virtue of its ownership of tax deeded property, prior to the enactment of the foregoing section, had possessed the power to exact from the former owner in possession, payment for his use and occupancy, it could as well be argued that, by virtue of such ownership it also had the power to lease and rent such property and to exact an accounting for rents, issues and profits therefrom; and if it had such power before, it was unnecessary to confer same in section 3773 of the Political Code.

In the instant case the state did not lease or rent the property in controversy, nor did it seek to exercise the right conferred by the statute to receive or collect rents, issues or profits therefrom, if any there were. The controller did not attempt to exact from the former owner any accounting nor did he demand possession nor institute any proceedings in unlawful detainer or ejectment. The present action is not a suit for accounting. For all that appears the former owner was left in undisturbed possession for over three years, after which time a demand was made upon him to pay the reasonable value of the use and occupancy for a period prior to the demand.

[6, 7] Aside from the right enjoyed by a former owner of tax deeded property to remain in possession until a sale of the land by the state, as held in the cases cited, supra, it is inferable from section 3773, supra, also that he may be left in undisturbed possession, and that no lease or agreement to pay rent need be exacted of him, and no accounting for rents, issues and profits be required of him. The authority granted to the controller by this section is permissive as is indicated by the use of the word "may," and by the alternative given to him. And to have required that the controller lease or rent tax deeded property, or that he collect the rentals, issues or profits therefrom, might well have been to demand the impossible, as no lessee might be found and no rents, issues or profits arise.

[8, 9] Assuming but not deciding that the power to "lease and rent," conferred upon the state by said section, would have authorized the state to exact from decedent a lease or agreement to pay rental, to demand possession in the event of his refusal to enter into such lease or agreement, and to effect his removal by proceedings in ejectment or unlawful detainer upon his refusal to surrender possession, the right which the state had to lease and rent and to receive and collect all rents, issues and profits arising from the property, does not compel the conclusion that the controller may exact payment for use and occupancy where no agreement exists and when no demand for possession was ever made. As hereinbefore stated, the primary purpose of statutes providing for the conveyance to the state of title to property that is tax delinquent, is the collection of taxes, and not the acquisition of the property or of other income therefrom. Such statutes should, therefore, be given a construction favoring the delinquent tax payer.

Appellant urges that the right of the state to exact payment for "use and occupancy" flows from that provision of section 3773, supra, that "the State, by and through the Controller, shall have the sole and exclusive power and authority * * * to receive and collect all rents, issues and profits" from property which is deeded to the state pursuant to the provisions of section 3785, supra; that this language gives to the controller the greatest right that could be given to collect anything from the premises; that the Legislature could not have used any language which would have allowed to the controller greater power to collect from the occupant of tax deeded land either agreed rent or the reasonable value of his use and occupation of the land.

[10] But the statute does not in terms confer the right to collect from the former owner in possession the value of his use and occupation, and the language taken as a whole indicates that the authority conferred upon the state "to receive and collect all rents, issues and profits" has no such broad meaning as that contended for by appellant, but means only such rents, issues and profits as may arise from leases of the property or, perhaps such net profits as might arise from a business carried on upon the premises. The power conferred upon the controller by the section is "to collect the rentals, issues, profits or other consideration accruing or arising under such leases" as he is authorized to execute. Throughout the section emphasis is placed upon rents and leases.

[11] Words of a tax statute cannot be extended by implication. If the Legislature had intended that the controller should have the right to recover from the former owner in possession the value of his use and occupancy of the tax deeded property, as well as the right to "lease and rent" and "to receive and collect" all "rents, issues and profits" arising from such property, no reason appears why it should not have said so in terms.

In section 707 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that a purchaser from the time of sale until a redemption, and a redemptioner from the time of his redemption until another redemption, is entitled to receive from the tenant in possession, the rents of the property sold, or the value of the use and occupation thereof, not only is the right to recover for use and occupancy conferred, but such right is distinguished from the right to receive rents.

[12] Furthermore, the phrase "rents, issues and profits" has a well understood meaning and refers to rents collected by the party in possession, and/or the net profits accruing to him from said property, and not to the rental value or the value of use and occupation. Amberg v. Claussen, 186 Okl. 482, 98 P.2d 927; Smith v. Howell, 91 Or. 279, 176 P. 805; Fifty-Ninth St. Real Estate Co. v. Murphy, 95 Misc. 191, 159 N.Y.S. 203; In re Stevens, 111 App.Div. 773, 98 N.Y.S. 28, 31; Equitable Life Insurance Co. v. Brown, 220 Iowa 585, 262 N.W. 124; Hopkins v. Remy, 64 N.J.Eq. 12, 53 A. 676, 677; Oram v. Peirce, 73 N.J.Eq. 391, 67 A. 1053, 1056; 54 C.J. Sec. 6, p. 385.

In Amberg v. Claussen, supra [186 Okl. 482, 98 P.2d 930], an action upon a supersedeas bond which stipulated that the obligor should "pay the rents and profits collected from, or rental value" of the premises, the court held that the obligee had the option to sue for rents and profits actually collected or the rental value of the property, saying that "rental value" and "value of use and occupancy" meant substantially the same but that "rents and profits" collected were not the same as rental value.

In Smith v. Howell, supra [91 Ore. 279, 176 P. 811], the right to hay cut from land by a foreclosure purchaser pending redemption was in issue. The court held that title to said hay was in the purchaser, subject to an accounting for rents, issues and profits, and said that the term "rents, issues, and profits," applies only to the net profits and such as are in the nature of rents. Citing 7 Words & Phrases, p. 6090; also citing In re Vedder's Will, 2 Conn. Sur. 548, 15 N.Y.S. 798, to the effect that "rents and profits" of real estate mean "the sum annually yielded" by the same.

[13] Also that the right to "receive and collect all rents, issues and profits" conferred by section 3773 of the Political Code is clearly distinguishable from a right to exact payment for use and occupancy, is further evidenced by the provision of the section that the controller or any person designated by him, may exact an accounting for said rents, issues and profits—obviously meaning "rents, issues and profits" received by some one other than the state. The statute is not intended as a money making scheme for the benefit of the state but to encourage redemptions, providing only that if any profits accrue therefrom the state and not the delinquent taxpayer may be the beneficiary.

[14] Our conclusion is, therefore, that the language of section 3773 of the Political Code does not authorize a suit by the state for the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of tax deeded land by the former owner left in possession.

The foregoing conclusion renders unnecessary a determination of the third question, to-wit: whether the institution of redemption proceedings on the installment plan provided by section 3817a of the Political Code by the former owner of tax deeded land, who has remained in possession, terminates any right the state may have had to sue for the reasonable value of the prior use and occupancy of the premises.

Respondent argues that in initiating redemption proceedings in the instant case Gustafson agreed to pay the full amount he would have been required to pay if the property had been redeemed in a lump, plus interest on all unpaid balances, also all current taxes accruing during the period of redemption; that the state is getting all that it would have received if there had never been any delinquency, and penalties and interest as well; that therefore it would be inequitable for the state also to exact payment from him for the use of the land during a part of the period for which it is being paid taxes, penalties and interest in full.

Appellant relies upon the provision of section 3817a that payments under the section are not a redemption or partial redemption and do not affect the state's interest in the real estate, and that payments "are compensation for the use of the real estate"; and it argues that use of the real estate applies solely to the use for the period covered by each payment under the installment plan and has no reference to any prior period; that any other construction would result in inequities since one delinquent tax payer may have resided on his land for a long period without initiating an installment payment plan, while another may have initiated such a plan promptly; that the Legislature could not have intended that the same amount should be compensation for differing periods of occupancy; and that if respondent's theory be correct an occupant of land who might have received income of thousands of dollars from tax deeded property could wipe out the obligation to the state by a comparatively small payment to the county and, after making one payment, could default in the installment plan and be free and clear of all obligations to the state.

This argument of appellant leaves out of consideration the fact that the man who delays redemption pays interest for his longer period of delinquency; it confuses the right conferred upon the state by section 3773, supra, to rent or lease the land and to collect the rents, issues and profits therefrom, with the right contended for to sue the former owner in possession for his use and occupancy; and it loses sight of the primary purpose of legislation which is to lighten the burden of the taxpayer. If the state could exact payment for use and occupancy from a former owner who elects to pay his delinquencies on the installment plan it could exact such payment from one who redeemed his property by payment of the whole redemption amount in a lump sum; and such taxpayer, though his obligation to the county had been cancelled and the title of the state to his land terminated, would find himself still burdened with an obligation to the state for his prior period of occupancy, and this though he may never have received one cent of income from the property during the period of such occupancy. If he had in fact entered into a lease or had agreed to pay rent for the premises, or had there been "rents, issues and profits" arising therefrom of which he had been the beneficiary, a different situation would be presented and it might be argued more forcefully that installment payments of delinquencies were not to supersede rentals agreed to be paid for any period prior to their institution, or rents, issues and profits received by him for such period.

[15] Whether the state could, after the institution of such a payment plan, collect agreed rentals unpaid by the former owner in possession for a period prior to redemption, or exact an accounting for rents, issues and profits accruing during such period is not in issue in this case; but if the state were entitled to exact payment for the use and occupancy of the property for a period prior to redemption we are of the opinion that the provisions of section 3817a, supra, that installment payments are compensation for the property would apply to the whole period of delinquency rather than for the periods during which the payments were being made. The effect of that provision that installment payments are not a redemption or a partial redemption and do not affect the state's interest in the real estate, is to continue the title in the state until complete redemption is effected, so that if such installment payments are not completed no complications as to title may arise. The provision of section 3773, supra, that moneys received by the controller for the rental of tax deeded property shall not be credited on the amount necessary to be paid in redemption, is not inconsistent with this conclusion. If the taxpayer elects to pay rental, or rental is paid by another, no injustice results from providing that such rentals shall not be credited upon the redemption amount due the county.

The foregoing lends force to our conclusion that section 3773, supra, does not authorize a suit for use and occupancy.

As to the question of waiver appellant contends that estoppel cannot be invoked against the state by reason of failure to act on the part of its officials, and that the doctrine of laches cannot be invoked against the sovereign. These are broad general statements to which there are exceptions.

[16] A state, as well as an individual, may be estopped where the necessary elements or grounds of estoppel are present (City of Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 373, 35 P. 1002; 31 C.J.S., Estoppel, § 138, p. 405); it may be estopped when acting in its proprietary capacity as distinguished from its governmental capacity (31 C.J.S., Estoppel, § 140, p. 413); and it may be estopped by the acts of its public officials done in the exercise of powers expressly conferred by law, and by their acts or omissions when acting within the scope of their authority. 31 C.J.S., Estoppel, § 142, p. 417.

[17] As hereinbefore noted, section 3773, supra, authorizes but does not require the leasing or renting of tax deeded property by the controller; it leaves to his discretion the determination of whether he shall exact a lease or contract to pay rent from the former owner, whether he shall dispossess him, and whether he shall exact an accounting for rents, issues and profits; and where, as here, he has elected for a period of over three years to do nothing it would not be deemed inequitable to hold that he had waived the right, if such he had, to exact payment for the use and occupancy of the premises. Such determination is not necessary for a decision in this case, however; and for the reason above stated, that the controller does not have the right to sue a former owner left in possession of tax deeded property for his use and occupancy of same, the judgment is affirmed.

PHILBRICK, Director of Motor Vehicles, et al., v. STATE PERSONNEL BOARD et al.

Civ. 6673.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 1, 1942.

1. Statutes 🔑233

Generally the state and its agencies are not bound by general words of statute limiting rights and interests of citizens unless such public authorities are included within the limitation expressly or by necessary implication.

2. Limitation of actions 🔑11(1)

Generally limitation statutes are held not to bind the state and its agencies unless they do so expressly or by necessary implication.

3. Statutes 🔑233

Generally, statutes are meant to regulate acts and rights of citizens and not the government itself, and therefore general words of a statute do not include the government or affect its rights unless that construction is clear and indisputable upon the text of the statute.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑11(1)

The state and its officials were not "persons" within statute requiring action by any person having cause of action based on Civil Service Law to be brought within one year after cause of action arose, and therefore could maintain mandamus proceeding against the personnel board regardless of whether the proceeding was instituted within one year after cause of action arose. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Howard R. Philbrick, as Director of Motor Vehicles, etc., and others against the State Personnel Board of the State of California and others, to require the board to strike certain names from official roster of persons holding position under Civil Service Act and from a departmental re-employment list and to certify to petitioners, names and addresses of three persons standing highest on the eligible list who indicated their willingness to accept appointment to such position. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Freitas, Duffy & Keating, of San Rafael, and Ivan C. Sperbeck, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Wilmer W. Morse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Sacramento county, ordering the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the State Personnel Board of the State of California, its respective members and its executive officers to strike from the official roster of persons holding positions under the State Civil Service Act maintained by them, the name of respondent Benjamin Hartwell, and a certain entry with respect thereto; to strike the name of said Benjamin Hartwell from the departmental reemployment list for the Department of Motor Vehicles maintained by them for the class of squad captain, California Highway Patrol, and to certify to petitioners the names of three persons standing highest on the eligible list maintained by them for the class of squad captain, California Highway Patrol, who had indicated their willingness to accept appointment to the position of squad captain, California Highway, Patrol, at Fresno, California.

The petition for the writ was filed on February 15, 1940. The allegations thereof, all of which with one exception not pertinent here, the trial court found to be true, were: That at all times since January 18, 1940, a vacancy had existed in the California Highway Patrol at Fresno, California, a state civil service position; that on or about that date petitioners submitted to the State Personnel Board (hereinafter called the Board) a statement of the duties of the position, the necessary and desired qualifications of the persons to be appointed, and a request that the names of persons eligible for appointment to the position be certified to petitioners; that the Board thereafter allocated said positions to the class of squad captain, California Highway Patrol, in the personnel classification plan of the State of California, and on January 29, 1940, certified to petitioners the name and address of respondent Benjamin Hartwell for appointment thereto; that Hartwell had no civil service status and no eligibility for such certification by reason of facts set forth; that, notwithstanding such ineligibility, the Board had placed his name on the Departmental Reemployment List, and that this action was arbitrary and in abuse of discretion because of Hartwell's lack of eligibility, and also because any cause of action to have his name placed on the list which Hartwell might have had at some previous time was barred by various statutes of limitation and by his laches at the time his name was placed on the list by the Board; that since January 18, 1940, Hartwell's name had been the only one on the departmental reemployment list, that no other names had been on either the promotional eligible list or the reemployment list, but that at all times there had been names of persons available on the eligible list for said class, willing to accept appointment to such vacancy at Fresno; and that petitioners had, prior to the commencement of this action, demanded of the Board the relief sought to be obtained by the writ. It was prayed that the Board be required to strike the name of Hartwell from the official roster of persons holding positions under the State Civil Service Act and from the departmental reemployment list for the Department of Motor Vehicles maintained by them for the class of squad captain, California Highway Patrol, and that it certify to petitioners the names and addresses of three persons standing highest on their eligible list of such class of squad captain, who had indicated their willingness to accept appointment to such position.

Respondents therein demurred generally to the petition and set up also that the relief prayed for was barred by section 52 of the State Civil Service Act, Chap. 753, Stats. 1937, p. 2092, as amended, and particularly that it was barred on and after September 17, 1939, and on and after January 3, 1940. They also filed an answer which admitted certain allegations of the petition, denied others, and also alleged that on December 9, 1938, there existed a vacancy in the position of squad captain in Fresno and elsewhere in the state, that on or about said date petitioners had submitted to the Board a statement of the duties of said position and the necessary qualifications of persons to be appointed thereto and a request for the certification of the names of persons eligible for appointment thereto, and that the Board had certified the name of Benjamin Hartwell to them on January 3, 1939. As to petitioners' allegations regarding the ineligibility of Hartwell for certification, same were denied, and it was denied that the action of the Board in placing his name on the departmental reemployment list was arbitrary or an abuse of discretion. They also set up in the answer that the relief prayed for by petitioners was barred on and after September 17, 1939, and on and after January 3, 1940, by section 52 of the State Civil Service Act, supra.

Trial by jury having been waived the issues of fact tendered by the foregoing pleadings were tried by the court sitting without a jury. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, respondents' demurrer was overruled, and judgment was entered ordering that a peremptory writ of mandate issue, requiring respondents to strike the name of Benjamin Hartwell from their official roster of persons holding positions under the State Civil Service Act, and from their departmental reemployment list for the Department of Motor Vehicles, for the position of squad captain, California Highway Patrol, and that they certify to petitioners the names and addresses of three persons on their eligible list for the said class of squad captain.

The pertinent facts found by the court are that since March 3, 1939, there had existed a vacancy in the civil service position of squad captain at Fresno; that on January 18, 1940, the petitioners requested certification of names by the Board to fill this vacancy; that in response to such request the Board, on January 29, 1940, certified the name of Hartwell for appointment to such position; that on January 18, 1940, Hartwell's name was, and at all times since had been, the only name on the departmental reemployment list for the class of squad captain, but that there were names of persons available for appointment on the eligible list for that class; that petitioners refused to appoint Hartwell to the position, demanding that the Board strike his name from the departmental reemployment list (which takes precedence over an eligible list, §§ 91-95, State Civil Service Act, Stats.1937, chap. 753, p. 2097), and certify names from the eligible list for appointment to the position.

As to the civil service status of Hartwell the court found that he was ineligible and that the action of the Board in placing his name on the departmental reemployment list for the class of squad captain in the California Highway Patrol, was arbitrary, wholly unsupported by the facts and the evidence, and in excess of the jurisdiction of the Board.

In regard to certain matters set up in the answer to the petition, the court also found that since the 9th day of December, 1938, there had existed a vacancy in the position of squad captain at San Rafael, California (not at Fresno as alleged in the answer), that on December 29, 1938, petitioners had requested the Board to certify names of persons to fill this vacancy, and that in response thereto said Board had certified Hartwell's name; but that no appointment had been made at that time, and that on October 25, 1939, certification for the appointment to this position at San Rafael had been withdrawn and cancelled by the Board.

This appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, and the single point raised by appellants is the statute of limitations, to-wit: Section 52 of the Civil Service Act as amended by statutes of 1939, chapter 898, p. 2507, which reads as follows:

"No action or proceeding shall be brought by any person having or claiming to have a cause of action or complaint or ground for issuance of any complaint or legal remedy for wrongs or grievances based on or related to any civil service law in this State or the administration thereof unless such action or proceeding be commenced and served within one year after such cause of action or complaint or ground for issuance of any writ or legal remedy first arose, nor shall any such person be compensated for the time subsequent to the date when such cause of action or proceeding arose unless such action or proceeding is filed and served within ninety days after the same arose; provided, that any such complaint or legal remedy or wrongs or grievances arising prior to August 27, 1937, shall be exempt from the provisions of this section. The time for filing or commencing any action or proceeding as provided in this section shall not be considered to run during any time that the matter involved is before the board pursuant to petition of the person involved, and final action has not been taken thereon by the board, including appeals taken pursuant to subdivision (j) of section 172." (Emphasis ours.)

Appellants' contention is that petitioners' cause of action first arose in 1938 when the Board placed Hartwell's name on the departmental reemployment list for the class of squad captain in the California Highway Patrol, or, in any possible event, not later than January 3, 1939, when the Board certified his name to petitioners in response to their request for certification of names for the position of squad captain at San Rafael; that petition for writ of mandate was not filed until February 15, 1940, more than one year after the certification of Hartwell for squad captain at San Rafael January 3, 1939, and more than one year after the Board's order of September 17, 1938, and the restoration of Hartwell's name to the reemployment list on October 25, 1938; and that therefore, under the undisputed facts, the instant proceeding is barred by section 52, supra.

Respondents herein contend that section 52, supra, has no application to proceedings brought by the state or by state officials acting in their official capacity; that the word "person" in the said section does not include the state or its agencies, and that the state is not bound by general statutes of limitation; also that while a cause of action arose when Hartwell's name was originally certified to fill the position at San Rafael, that that was a different cause of action than the one here sued upon; that the right to receive periodically the names of eligibles for appointment to vacancies as they successively occur is a continuing right, and that the time limitation upon the right to sue for the certification of names for appointment to fill the position at Fresno began to run, if at all, from the time when the filling of that position became necessary and certification of names was requested and refused.

No authorities are cited by appellants in support of their contentions, and they filed no brief in reply to that filed by respondents herein. Also the findings of the trial court do not show that when Hartwell was certified to respondents on January 3, 1939, any request was made for another and different name. They do show that this certification was withdrawn and cancelled by the Board on or about October 25, 1939, within one year after it was issued.

The questions presented for decision here are, then, does the word "person" as used in section 52, supra, include the state and its agencies, and therefore respondents herein, so that the statute of limitation therein contained applies in the instant case, and, if it does so apply, did the time within which petitioners could commence this action begin to run when Hartwell was ordered restored to the civil service list by the Board on September 17, 1938, or when his name was entered on said list on October 25, 1938, or when he was certified by the board to fill a vacancy as squad captain at San Rafael on January 3, 1939, or when he was certified by said Board to fill the position of squad captain at Fresno on January 18, 1940?

[1] In the interpretation of a legislative enactment it is the general rule that the state and its agencies are not bound by general words limiting the rights and interests of its citizens unless such public authorities be included within the limitation expressly or by necessary implication. C. J. Kubach Co. v. McGuire, 199 Cal. 215, 217, 248 P. 676; Skelly v. Westminster School District of Orange County, 103 Cal. 652, 656, 37 P. 643; Balthasar v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452; Whittaker v. County of Tuolumne, 96 Cal. 100, 30 P. 1016; Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 P. 646, 23 Am.St.Rep. 451; Marin Municipal Water District v. Chenu, 188 Cal. 734, 207 P. 251; Riley v. Stack, 128 Cal. App. 480, 483, 16 P.2d 110; Berton v. All Persons, etc., 176 Cal. 610, 617, 170 P. 151.

[2] Accordingly general statutes of limitation are held not to bind the state and its agencies unless they do so expressly or by necessary implication. Z. Russ & Sons Co. v. Crichton, 117 Cal. 695, 49 P. 1043; Davidow v. Griswold, 23 Cal.App. 188, 198, 137 P. 619.

The fact that the state by an express statute has sometimes consented to be bound by certain statutes of limitation in the same manner as in actions by private parties, as for instance, by section 345 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, only serves to emphasize the rule that it is not so bound unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication so provides. Said section 345 has no application here.

[3] Section 52, supra, does not expressly provide that the state or its agencies are to be bound by the limitations thereof. Therefore the question arises whether, by necessary implication, it includes them. We believe that it does not. It was said by Associate Justice Story of the United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Hoar, C.C., Fed.Cas.No.15373, 2 Mason 311, 314, that in general, acts of legislatures are meant to regulate and direct the acts and rights of citizens, and that in most cases, the reasoning applicable to them applies with very different and often contrary force to the government itself; that, therefore, general words of a statute ought not to include the government or affect its rights unless that construction be clear and indisputable upon the text of the act.

[4] In certain cases the courts of this state have held that by necessary implication certain statutes of limitation apply to the state and its agencies. People v. City of Los Angeles, 93 Cal.App. 532, 269 P. 934, and Miller v. Johnson, 4 Cal.2d 265, 48 P.2d 956, are illustrative. But we think that there is not in said section 52, supra, any such clear and definite expression of an intention to limit the state and its agencies as would remove the provision from the general rule. C. J. Kubach Co. v. McGuire, supra; Balthasar v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., supra. The implications are rather to the contrary. The section provides that "no action or proceedings shall be brought by any person having or claiming to have a cause of action * * * unless such action or proceeding be commenced and served within one year after such cause of action * * * first arose, nor shall any such person be compensated for the time subsequent to the date when such cause of action or proceeding arose unless such action or proceeding is filed and served within ninety days after the same arose." It further provides that time for filing shall not be considered to run during the time that the matter involved is before the Board pursuant to petition of the person involved and before its final action, including appeals taken pursuant to subdivision (j) of section 172. Presumably subdivision (k) of section 172 rather than subdivision (j) was intended, since the former does not pertain to appeals, and the latter does; but both such subdivisions deal with employees. The inference from the whole of section 52, supra, is, therefore, that the section was intended to apply only to the claims of individuals, particularly salary claims of employees or those who have been separated from the service.

Our conclusion being that the provisions of section 52 of the Civil Service Act do not apply to the state and its agencies, and that it is not, therefore, binding upon petitioners (respondents herein), it is unnecessary to determine whether petitioners' cause of action arose on September 17, 1938, the date of the order of the Board ordering Hartwell's name entered upon the civil service roster (which order the trial court found to be invalid), or on January 3, 1939, the date of the certification of Hartwell's name to fill a vacancy in the position of squad captain at San Rafael (which certification was withdrawn and cancelled by the Board on October 25, 1939), or on January 29, 1940, the date of the certification of Hartwell's name to fill the vacancy in the position of squad captain at Fresno.

MIRICH v. BALSINGER.

Civ. 13459.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

June 30, 1942.

Hearing Denied Aug. 27, 1942.

1. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(1)

Complaint alleging that surgeon negligently performed plastic operation on patient's nose so that patient's nostrils commenced to shrink together, and that subsequent operations did not correct the condition, established cause of action sounding in "tort", notwithstanding allegations concerning engagement of surgeon to perform operation and representations allegedly made by him concerning probable outcome thereof.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Tort".

2. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(4)

Complaint charging negligence in performance of plastic operation on patient's nose was not insufficient because certain acts of negligence were alleged on information or belief.

3. Pleading 🔑16

Pleadings are meant to be self-serving and they may be based on hearsay.

4. Physicians and surgeons 🔑14(4)

The law demands of physician only that he shall have the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians of good standing practicing in his locality, and that he use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient.

5. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

Whether professional conduct of a physician in a particular case measures up to required standards is a question for experts and can be established only by their testimony, but where expert testimony in relation thereto is in conflict it is primarily for triers of fact to resolve if possible such conflict in favor of or against the physician.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

Whenever conclusion of trial court sitting without jury is supported by substantial evidence, the reviewing court is without authority to interfere therewith even though it may appear to the reviewing court that the evidence would justify a contrary conclusion.

7. Appeal and error 🔑994(3)

It is not the function of the District Court of Appeal to determine credibility of witnesses nor to evaluate their testimony.

8. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

In malpractice action it is not necessary to demonstrate conclusively and beyond possibility of doubt that negligence of physician resulted in injury to patient, and substantial evidence which reasonably supports judgment for patient is sufficient.

9. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

Evidence sustained judgment for patient on ground that surgeon, in performing plastic operation on patient's nose, negligently cut unnecessarily from nasal passages of the nose an excessive amount of tissue and negligently cut out a part of the lining membrane which caused complete and permanent shrinkage of the frontal nasal passages of the nose.

10. Appeal and error 🔑971(2)

The competency of an expert witness to give an opinion is for the trial court in exercise of a sound discretion.

11. Appeal and error 🔑971(2)

The ruling of trial court on question of competency of witness to testify as an expert will not be overturned on appeal except where there is actual want of evidence to support it or a clear abuse of discretion in ruling on evidence proffered on the subject.

12. Evidence 🔑546

In malpractice action based on alleged negligence in performing plastic operation on patient's nose, determination that a plastic surgeon and a physician who had specialized in otolaryngology possessed qualifications necessary to entitle them to express opinions concerning cause of patient's condition, and whether defendant surgeon exercised proper degree of skill and care, was not abuse of discretion.

13. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(4)

A patient could maintain action for malpractice in performing plastic operation on patient's nose after failure of subsequent operations to correct the condition created by the first operation, without alleging negligence in regard to the subsequent operations.

14. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

In malpractice action based on alleged negligence in performing plastic operation on patient's nose, the fact that patient did not consult another surgeon until a year had elapsed from time of first operation on nose, and therefore plaintiff's expert witnesses had not made examination soon after the operation, did not impair the patient's right to recover.

Counsel has right to frame hypothetical question on theory of questioning party and in accordance with facts fairly deducible from the evidence, and the question need not include a statement of all the evidence in the case.

That an opinion of an expert is not founded on all facts of the case goes to the weight of the evidence and not to its competency or materiality.

17. Evidence ⚷555

That opinion of expert that treatments of surgeon were improper is based on result of recovery does not deprive the trier of facts of the right to predicate a finding of negligence upon such expert testimony.

18. Evidence ⚷546

In malpractice action based on alleged negligence in performing plastic operation on patient's nose, wherein plaintiff's witness testified that he had made study of causes of atresia, undertaken course of plastic surgery under national authority on the subject, and had watched various plastic surgeons work, permitting witness to answer hypothetical question concerning standard of care exercised by hypothetical plastic surgeon referred to in the question and to give opinion as to cause of atresia from which patient was suffering was not abuse of discretion because of fact that witness was not himself a plastic surgeon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Action by Doreen Mirich, a minor, etc., against W. E. Balsinger for malpractice. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals, and from order denying motion for new trial defendant attempts to appeal.

Attempted appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

A. Brigham Rose, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Phillip W. Silver, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Plaintiff instituted this action against defendant, a plastic surgeon, to recover damages for alleged malpractice. Trial before the court sitting without a jury resulted in a judgment for plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was denied. From the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial this appeal is prosecuted by the defendant doctor.

By her complaint plaintiff alleged that the defendant held himself out to the general public as a physician who specialized in plastic surgery; that he further represented to plaintiff, a minor, and to her mother, that he could beautify and improve the appearance of plaintiff's nose by performing certain nasal plastic surgery thereon; that the defendant was employed to perform this plastic surgery and that pursuant to such employment he did on July 13, 1939, perform a plastic operation upon plaintiff's nose. The complaint further alleged that this operation was performed so negligently and carelessly that following such operation the nostrils of plaintiff's nose commenced to "shrink together," thereby making it impossible for plaintiff to breathe at all through her nose. It was further alleged that on February 5, 1940, defendant performed a second operation upon plaintiff's nose in an attempt to correct the shrinkage of the nostrils; that following the second operation, however, plaintiff's nostrils again "shrank together," obstructing practically in its entirety any breathing through the nostrils. The pleading further charged upon information and belief that the defendant in the first operation negligently and carelessly cut out unnecessarily from the nasal passages an excessive amount of tissue and did carelessly, negligently and unnecessarily cut out a part of the lining membrane, all of which caused a complete and permanent shrinkage of the frontal nasal passages.

In her complaint plaintiff further alleged that because of the negligence and carelessness of defendant she was compelled to suffer unnecessarily the pain and anguish of being required to have two tubes in her nostrils; that she likewise suffered various complications, and is informed and believes that it will be necessary for her to submit herself to several further operations, including a grafting process, to cure the condition.

By his answer the defendant denied that he made any representations to plaintiff or her mother; admitted that he was employed to perform plastic surgery upon the plaintiff; that he did perform the operations set forth in plaintiff's complaint; but denied that he was guilty of any of the negligence charged in the complaint. By way of affirmative defense plaintiff's answer alleged that the defendant gave the plaintiff certain instructions, the observance of which was essential and necessary to effect a proper recovery, but that plaintiff negligently, carelessly and willfully refused and failed to follow or adhere to such instructions, and that any injury sustained by plaintiff was the proximate result of her own negligence, carelessness and wrongful conduct.

The trial court found that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true, save and except as to the amount of damages allegedly sustained by her. It was further found that the denials and affirmative defense set forth in defendant's answer were not sustained by the evidence. The court expressly found "that said defendant in the first operation, previously mentioned negligently and carelessly did cut out unnecessarily from the nasal passages an excessive amount of tissue and did carelessly and negligently and unnecessarily cut out a part of the lining membrane, all of which caused a complete and permanent shrinkage of the frontal nasal passages."

We find in the record evidence given by the minor plaintiff that on July 10, 1939, defendant doctor stated to her and her mother that he could make plaintiff's nose smaller, the tip narrower, and also make her nostrils larger, and further, that when he performed the operation he would also correct the difficulty in breathing from which the plaintiff suffered; that the operation was performed July 13, 1939, following which the nose was packed, tubes were inserted, and a cast placed on it. With reference to certain instructions given her by defendant doctor, plaintiff testified that she rigidly adhered thereto. She further testified that at the expiration of six weeks after the operation, during which time she had visited the doctor at various intervals, she first observed an unusual condition about her nose, in that "it became pinched at the tip. The nostrils became very small. The nose was crooked and appeared to be brought over to one side"; that the defendant informed plaintiff that when he returned from Chicago he would perform a second operation to correct the existing condition; that such operation was performed by defendant, and that prior thereto plaintiff's nostrils were "practically closed up." She also testified that following the second operation she was required by defendant doctor to have certain tubes inserted in her nostrils, which tubes were removed at the expiration of three weeks, after which the nostrils became very small. She testified that on each occasion when the defendant removed the tubes from her nostrils the latter would again become small. She gave further testimony as to the pain and suffering she endured when the tubes were inserted in the shrunken nostrils; that in April following the operation, when the tubes were removed for the last time, the nostrils became small again and practically closed on the right side, with a small opening on the left; that the defendant agreed to perform a cauterization upon the plaintiff, pursuant to which agreement he again operated on her nose and opened her nostrils. Thereafter defendant instructed plaintiff to obtain X-ray treatments, which she did, receiving four such treatments. Following the last X-ray treatment, the tubes were removed by defendant from plaintiff's nose and it began to shrink again. Thereupon defendant informed her that the X-ray doctor either had not given her enough X-ray treatments or had not given her the right kind of such treatments. Thereupon defendant stated to plaintiff that the only thing he could do was to operate again and for her again to take X-ray treatments; but plaintiff refused to submit to a fourth operation. Her testimony showed further that after the last X-ray treatment she was able to breathe only through the left side of her nose, but not enough to breathe comfortably, and that this condition became increasingly worse. At the date of the trial plaintiff's nostrils were "all closed up."

Defendant doctor testified in his own behalf that the minor plaintiff's mother brought her to him in regard to correcting the shape of the daughter's nose and with reference to the possible curing of her impaired breathing, which was due to a deflection of the septum. Defendant testified that he informed the mother that he thought the shape of the nose could be corrected. The witness then described in detail how he performed the first operation. As to the second operation, the doctor testified that in the performance thereof he cut between a sixteenth and a thirty-second of an inch of skin on each side of the nose. The third operation, he testified, was performed to dissect the scar tissue and thereby release the lateral walls of the nostrils.

It was conceded by both parties that the accumulation of excessive scar tissue was what caused the contraction of the lateral walls of the nostrils. It was the contention of the plaintiff, however, that this excessive accumulation of scar tissue was brought about by the negligence and carelessness of defendant doctor in cutting out unnecessarily from the nasal passages an excessive amount of tissue and part of the lining membrane, resulting in a complete and permanent shrinkage of the frontal nasal passages; while the defendant, as appears from his testimony, attributed the condition which developed in the plaintiff's nose—called an atresia—to the fact, as he said, that "the patient had an inherent condition of scar tissue formation," which he defined as "an inherent characteristic of certain persons to production of scar tissue." In answer to a question as to whether such a tendency on the part of plaintiff to produce scar tissue would not have manifested itself after the first operation as well as after the second and third, defendant doctor testified: "That is not true in experience at all. I have operated various times for, say, a face lift, surface cutting and the patient does not always react the same at any two different times. You may have a scar at one time and dissect that out in another operation, getting perfect results. Or you may have it vice versa, you may have a good result one time and next time you operate the same patient and you may have scar tissue form."

There appears to be no conflict in the evidence to the effect that an atresia of the nose following Rhino plastic surgery is attributable in the main to one of the following causes: (1) loss or absence of the vestibular lining (which the plaintiff maintains was the reason for the condition in her case); (2) infection; (3) presence of a syphilitic condition or occasionally following cases of smallpox. In the instant case it is also conceded that neither infection nor any of the diseases responsible for atresia was present.

Dr. William S. Kiskadden, a plastic surgeon produced as a witness by the plaintiff, testified that he examined her in August, 1940, at which time she was suffering from what was commonly termed an atresia and occlusion of the nostrils; that operative work would have to be undertaken to correct this condition. It was his opinion that the scar tissue which he felt was causing this occlusion would have to be cut away and new tissue grafted into place to supplant the scar tissue that had presumably formed; that two or more operations would be necessary in this case. In answer to a hypothetical question, this witness testified that in his opinion the atresia probably was due to the fact that some of the lining membrane of the nose had been lost or did not exist. Dr. Harold M. Holden, a plastic surgeon testifying on behalf of the plaintiff, stated that he examined her in July, 1940. at which time she was suffering from atresia of both nostrils. In response to a hypothetical question which covered the various operations performed upon plaintiff by defendant and the results thereof, this witness gave it as his opinion that the only thing that would create an atresia would be the removal or destruction of part of the vestibular lining of the nostril. He further stated that in his opinion the hypothetical surgeon who had performed the operation mentioned in the question, in cutting out the amount of tissue that he did, had not exercised that degree of skill and care required of a plastic surgeon specializing in plastic surgery, measured by the standard of skill and care ordinarily possessed and exercised by a reasonably prudent and skillful plastic surgeon specializing in plastic surgery in the community in which the operation was performed.

Dr. Saul S. Robinson, a witness produced by the plaintiff, testified that he specialized in dermatology; that on June 13, 1940, he saw the plaintiff at his office, at which time her nostrils were open; that he administered to her four X-ray treatments, which he considered sufficient, because of the possibility that a greater number might result in X-ray burn. Another physician and surgeon, Dr. Sol Malis, called on behalf of the plaintiff, testified that he met her professionally on August 19, 1940. In answer to a hypothetical question propounded to him, this witness testified that in his opinion the cause of the atresia was the accumulation of scar tissue. Assuming as he did, in answering the hypothetical question, that the atresia was occasioned by the removal of excessive tissue from the nose, he gave it as his opinion that due care was not exercised by the surgeon who performed that operation in cutting out the amount of tissue that he did, when measured by the standard of skill and care ordinarily exercised by a reasonably prudent and skillful surgeon practicing in the same community. This witness based his opinion on the history of the case, the operation, the formation of an atresia, coupled with the bilaterality of the atresia formation, which he stated was "very important." When asked why, he answered, "Things may happen in surgery by the most skillful men from time to time. That the same thing should happen on both sides and to about the same degree, I came to the conclusion it was not one of accident, but one of negligence." In the opinion of this witness, scar tissue would form six weeks to three months after such an operation if proper technique is not followed in the excision of tissue. In addition to the reasons heretofore given, the witness also based his opinion in answer to a hypothetical question upon the results that ensued from the operation as well as because of the elimination of the heretofore narrated other causes of atresia.

The defendant produced as a witness Dr. Joseph Ginsberg, who testified that he had examined the plaintiff some months before the giving of his testimony. He testified that at the time of his examination there existed a total occlusion of both nostrils. It was his opinion that there was nothing the operating doctor could do to control the type of scar tissue development that manifested itself in this case. He said, "That no one can determine, and very often scars that look very lovely after the patient is dismissed after appendectomies and plastic operations suddenly become hypertrophic, large, broad, after two or three months have passed." This witness further testified that the growth of scar tissue was due to the incision and the patient's reaction to such incision.

Dr. Samuel Ayres, Jr., testifying as an expert witness on behalf of the defendant, gave it as his opinion that there was no way in which a physician situated as was the defendant in this case could determine in advance whether the scar tissue resulting from the operation would be hypertrophic or large in accumulation. Similar testimony was given by another physician who qualified as an expert.

Dr. Edward H. McManus, testifying on behalf of the defendant, in answer to a hypothetical question based upon the technique of the operation performed in the instant case, stated that he was of the opinion that the defendant doctor herein exhibited and exercised the required skill and care ordinarily possessed and exercised by the average reputable surgeon practicing plastic surgery in the City of Los Angeles under the same or similar conditions. He further testified that the growth of fibrous or scar tissue is beyond the control of the operating physician, and, as he said, "You may do the most beautiful work, the patient may be pleased, and six or eight weeks after the operation they may come to your office with the most terrific scars you have ever witnessed." He gave it as his opinion that some people develop scar tissue and others do not, and referring to the plaintiff in the instant case, said, "This young lady evidently is prone to develop scar tissue." It was also the opinion of this witness that the removal of the lining membrane of the nose will not cause an atresia.

[1-3] Appellant first challenges the sufficiency of the complaint on the ground that it cannot be ascertained from such pleading whether plaintiff is suing because of (1) breach of warranty to beautify her; (2) negligence in the performance of a contract to beautify her; (3) negligence in the performance of the first operation; or (4) negligence in connection with the second operation. The claim of uncertainty cannot be sustained. The complaint specifically alleged negligence in the performance of the first operation. These averments clearly established the cause of action as one sounding in tort, the gist of which is the alleged carelessness and negligence of the surgeon in the performance of the operation. Other allegations as to the engagement of defendant physician to perform the operation and representations allegedly made by him as to the probable outcome of the operation as well as the effect thereof upon the plaintiff's features, are to be considered as mere matters of inducement to the main cause of action and not as allegations charging a breach of a contractual obligation. Hall v. Steele, 193 Cal. 602, 226 P. 854; Harding v. Liberty Hospital Corp., 177 Cal. 520, 171 P. 98; Marty v. Somers, 35 Cal.App. 182, 169 P. 411; Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 8 P.2d 109; Wetzel v. Pius, 78 Cal.App. 104, 248 P. 288. Equally without merit is appellant's contention that because certain acts of negligence are alleged upon information or belief, the pleading is insufficient. The only source open to plaintiff in ascertaining the causes which produced her ailment and condition that allegedly followed the operation was medical advice from other physicians consulted by her. In any event, pleadings are meant to be self-serving, and basing them upon hearsay is expressly authorized. Davis v. City of San Diego, 33 Cal.App.2d 190, 193, 91 P.2d 640.

[4-6] Appellant next urges as a ground of reversal that there is no substantial evidence in the record to sustain and support the trial court's findings that the defendant negligently and carelessly cut unnecessarily from the nasal passages of the plaintiff's nose an excessive amount of tissue, and did carelessly, negligently and unnecessarily cut out part of the lining membrane, all of which caused a complete and permanent shrinkage of the frontal nasal passages of plaintiff's nose. In this regard it is contended by appellant that at most the evidence merely established a post-operation result which does not ordinarily occur, but that its occurrence in the instant case was not shown by the evidence to have been the result of any negligence. We are not unmindful of the fact that the difficulties and uncertainties in the practice of medicine and surgery are such that no practitioner can be required to guarantee results, and that all the law demands is that he shall have the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians of good standing practicing in his locality, and that he use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient. Whether the professional conduct of a physician in a particular case measures up to the required standards is a question for experts and can be established only by their testimony; but where, as here, the expert testimony in relation thereto is in conflict, it is primarily for the triers of fact to resolve if possible such conflict in favor of or against the physician. Whenever the conclusion arrived at by the trial court is supported by substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, an appellate tribunal is without authority to interfere therewith, even though it may appear to the reviewing court that the evidence would justify a contrary finding and conclusion. Hall v. Kaufman, 37 Cal.App.2d 264, 99 P.2d 339; Raggio v. Mallory, 10 Cal.2d 723, 725, 76 P.2d 660; Boens v. Bennett, 20 Cal.App.2d 477, 483, 67 P.2d 715.

[7-9] We have heretofore set forth the evidence given by expert witnesses in answer to hypothetical questions based upon the evidence adduced. The trial court, as indicated by its findings, chose to believe and adopt the testimony given by expert witnesses adverse to the defendant's theory and contentions. We therefore cannot disturb the conclusion arrived at, because it is not our function to determine the credibility of witnesses nor to evaluate their testimony. Kiernan v. Herbert M. Baruch Corp., 20 Cal.App.2d 289, 66 P.2d 748. What we have just said does no violence to the views expressed by us in Adams v. Boyce, 37 Cal. App.2d 541, 99 P.2d 1044, cited by appellant. It must also be remembered that in malpractice cases it is not necessary to demonstrate conclusively and beyond the possibility of a doubt that the negligence of the physician resulted in the injury to the patient. Were such the rule, it would rarely be possible to recover in a case of negligence in the practice of a profession which admittedly is not an exact science. It is therefore not required in the trial of such cases that the negligence of the defendant as the proximate cause of the injury be established with such absolute certainty that any other conclusion is excluded. Substantial evidence which reasonably supports the judgment is sufficient. Dimock v. Miller, 202 Cal. 668, 671, 262 P. 311.

[10, 11] Appellant's contention that the court erred in determining that Drs. Holden and Malis possessed the qualifications necessary to entitle them to express their opinions as to the cause of plaintiff's ultimate condition and as to whether defendant doctor had exercised the proper and requisite degree of skill and care, cannot be upheld. It is for the trial court to determine, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the competency of an expert witness to give his opinion in evidence. Fairbank v. Hughson, 58 Cal. 314. The determination of the competency of a witness to testify as an expert is in itself in the nature of a trial of a question of fact addressed to the judge alone, and as in other decisions on questions of fact by a trial judge, his ruling thereon, being a matter of discretion, will not be overturned on appeal save and except when there is an actual want of evidence to support it or a clear abuse of discretion in ruling upon the evidence proffered upon the subject. When there is any substantial evidence to support the ruling of the trial judge, it will be upheld. Dr. Holden testified that he was a plastic surgeon, specializing in plastic surgery, licensed to practice in the State of California, and that he had a certificate from the American Board of Otolaryngology, which certificate recognized him as a specialist in his profession. He testified that he had degrees of Doctor of Dental Surgery, Master of Arts, Doctor of Philosophy and Doctor of Medicine; that he was connected with Cedars of Lebanon, Hollywood, and St. Vincent's hospitals; that he first began to practice in Tampa, Florida; that he practiced continuously in Illinois for ten years and in Los Angeles continuously from 1938 to 1939; that he had performed upwards of three thousand operations. While on the Pacific Coast he had performed about four hundred plastic operations; that he had observed two other plastic surgeons in Los Angeles at work; that his knowledge of what the average surgeon practicing plastic surgery in Los Angeles does is based upon what he does himself and upon what he observed these other two physicians do.

[12] Concerning the qualifications of Dr. Malis, he testified that he was a physician and surgeon, first admitted to practice medicine in 1924, and that he specialized in otolaryngology (ear, nose and throat); that he was a graduate of the University of Manitoba, Canada; that he was connected with Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Queen of Angels Hospital, Mt. Sinai Hospital, Lincoln Hospital, French Hospital and the County Hospital. That he was recognized by the American Board of Otolaryngology by examination which took place in 1929 and again in 1931. That the American Board of Otolaryngology was composed of men picked from the nation, recognized of years standing, teachers and professors, and that this board meets once in two years to examine candidates for this specialty; that he had been so examined and accepted in 1929 and in Los Angeles in 1930, and ever since then had been recognized as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the nose. That after he arrived in the United States he did post-graduate work at Columbia University and the New York Post-Graduate Hospital. Following that post-graduate work he was a resident surgeon in Newark Eye and Ear Infirmary for one year in 1929. That he had been doing surgery for sixteen years; that most of his cases were intranasal surgery. He testified that he had made a study of the causes of atresia of the nose; that he had seen many cases of atresia; that he had kept up with medical science and learning; that he had undertaken a course in plastic surgery under Professor Vincent Shehan, who was a national authority on plastic surgery. The evidence just recited clearly demonstrates that there was no abuse of discretion in the ruling of the trial judge permitting the witness in question to testify, and we are therefore without authority to disturb such ruling. Johnson v. Western Air Express Corp., 45 Cal.App.2d 614, 630, 631, 114 P.2d 688. The qualifications of another expert witness produced by respondent remain unchallenged by appellant.

[13, 14] An issue is also made by appellant of the fact that no negligence was charged in connection with the second and third operations, and further, that the medical experts who testified at the trial had not made an examination of the plaintiff until over one year after the first operation. Allegations of negligence in regard to the second and third operations were unnecessary, as the evidence reveals that the atresia came into existence after the first operation and before the second, and that all operations after the first were to correct a continuing condition of atresia. If the defendant was shown to have negligently performed the first operation and thereby brought about the condition complained of, it is manifest that further negligence need not be pleaded as to the subsequent operations. Nor does the fact that plaintiff did not consult another physician until a year had elapsed from the time of the first operation impair her cause of action. The fact that she had confidence in the defendant and continued under his care during this period of time without consulting another physician cannot excuse him in any way. Obviously, expert testimony of a physician who examined the plaintiff soon after the first operation was to be desired; however, the testimony of the expert witnesses who examined the plaintiff one year afterward, when her condition was a continuing one, was the best evidence possible under the circumstances and adequate for the purpose. Any other ruling would penalize the plaintiff for her faith in the defendant and place him in an advantageous position to which he is not entitled. In an analogous situation in the case of Trombley v. Kolts, 29 Cal. App.2d 699, 85 P.2d 541, this court held that where the evidence showed that the relation of physician and patient continued until about four months prior to the commencement of the action, there was a continuing obligation on the part of the physician to treat the patient in a proper manner, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the termination of the relation of physician and patient.

[15-17] Finally, appellant insists that the trial court committed prejudicial error in overruling objections made to the form and contents of the hypothetical questions propounded to certain expert witnesses produced at the trial by respondent. In support of this claim it is urged that in propounding the hypothetical questions to Drs. Holden and Malis, the operative technique testified to by appellant doctor as having been used by him was ignored, and that conjectural factors selected by respondent's counsel and not included in the evidence was incorporated in the questions. We have painstakingly read the long hypothetical questions and their repetition here would unduly prolong this opinion; but we are persuaded that appellant's claim is without merit. Taking into consideration the testimony given by appellant doctor on the witness stand and in his deposition which was received in evidence, we are convinced that every hypothesis contained in the questions had some evidence to sustain it. The questions certainly were neither unfair nor misleading. In propounding a hypothetical question, counsel has a right to frame it upon the theory of the questioning party and in accordance with the facts fairly deducible from the evidence. The question need not include a statement of all the evidence in the case. Coyne v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 104, 111, 112, 47 P.2d 1079. That an opinion is not founded upon all the facts of the case goes to the weight of such evidence and not to its competency or materiality. McCollum v. Barr, 38 Cal.App. 411, 176 P. 463; Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., 21 Cal.App. 357, 131 P. 894; 10 Cal.Jur. 966, § 223. Nor does the fact that the opinion of an expert that the treatments of the physician were improper is based upon the result of recovery deprive the court or jury of the right to predicate a finding of negligence upon such expert testimony. Kershaw v. Tilbury, supra, 214 Cal. at page 692, 8 P.2d 109. Certainly no prejudice resulted to appellant from the form or contents of the hypothetical questions.

[18] Appellant next challenges the qualifications of Dr. Malis and the admissibility of his opinion, for the asserted reason that the witness was not a plastic surgeon. Our attention is not directed to any rule, nor do we know of any, which militates against a physician trained in one school of medicine from testifying in a proper case concerning a treatment by a physician and surgeon trained in a different school. While such objection might be made in a malpractice case where the charges of negligence were directed against some special course of treatment to be tested by the teachings and doctrines of a particular school, it can have no applicability to a case like the instant one, where the general charges of negligence relate to matters within the knowledge and observation of every physician and surgeon, particularly so, where, as here, the witness testified that he had made a study of the causes of atresia; that he had seen many cases of it; that he had kept up on medical science and learning; that he had undertaken a course of plastic surgery under Professor Vincent Shehan, a national authority on the subject; and that he had watched various plastic surgeons work, including Drs. Smith, Kiskadden, Updegraff, Holden and Ginsberg. Manifestly, the court was guilty of no abuse of discretion in permitting this witness to answer the hypothetical question propounded to him covering the standard of care exercised by the hypothetical plastic surgeon referred to in the question and giving his opinion as to the cause of the atresia from which the plaintiff was suffering. Abos v. Martyn, 31 Cal.App.2d 705, 713, 88 P.2d 797; Ellinwood v. McCoy, 8 Cal.App.2d 590, 593, 47 P.2d 796; Hutter v. Hommel, 213 Cal. 677, 681, 3 P.2d 554.

The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment is affirmed.

PERLICK et al. v. PACIFIC DISCOUNT CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 12841.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
June 30, 1942.

1. Pawnbrokers and money lenders 🔑6

Where loans were made by corporation which was licensed personal property broker engaged in business of aviation financing and aviation sales, in 1938 and 1939 before effective date of statute prescribing maximum rate of interest to be charged by personal property brokers, the loans were not subject to usury laws. Const. art. 20, § 22, as amended in 1934; Gen.Laws 1939 Supp.Act 5825.

2. Fraud 🔑10, 11(1)

Where plaintiffs obtained loan from defendants who did not occupy confidential relation toward plaintiffs, in order to pay airplane repair bill, statement of defendants that only way they could be secured for repayment of loan was by transfer of title of airplane to lending corporation which would give back option to repurchase, was statement of an "opinion" concerning a legal question and did not constitute "fraud" on the plaintiffs, since plaintiffs were not justified in relying on the statement.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fraud" and "Opinion".

3. Trover and conversion 🔑24

A transferee of title to an airplane who held title in trust for purchaser had a "qualified" or "limited interest" in the airplane and as such was entitled, together with the purchaser, to maintain an action for conversion of the airplane.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Limited Interest" and "Qualified Interest".

4. Set-off and counterclaim 🔑28(1)

Where plaintiffs recovered judgment for conversion of airplane by defendants to whom title to airplane had been transferred as security for loan, the defendants were entitled to credit for unpaid balance of the loan.

5. Chattel mortgages 🔑39

Evidence sustained finding that transaction between plaintiffs and defendants, to whom airplane was transferred, was a loan transaction whereby the defendants were secured by lien on the airplane evidenced by bill of sale and option to repurchase, and was not a sale of the airplane to the defendants.

6. Chattel mortgages 🔑249

If defendants who had lien on airplane to secure loan were entitled to foreclose the lien, their remedy was foreclosure by a proper legal proceeding.

7. Chattel mortgages 🔑169

Where the defendants who had lien on airplane to secure loan did not foreclose lien by proper legal proceeding, action of defendants in moving the airplane and removing therefrom and selling flying instruments, was a "conversion" of the airplane.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conversion".

8. Evidence 🔑462

In action for conversion of airplane, parol evidence was admissible to show that bill of sale to airplane, executed in defendant's favor, and option to repurchase given to plaintiff represented a security transaction rather than an absolute transfer of title with right to repurchase, where the evidence was admitted not to alter the written instruments, but to show the purpose for which they were executed.

9. Chattel mortgages 🔑176(5)

Where loan secured by lien on airplane was made at high rate of interest by defendants and on four successive days defendants refused to accept full payment of principal and interest due, and defendants broke glass in door of airplane, detached door, carried away and sold important flying instruments, removed airplane from hangar, had it stored in another hangar, and refused to release it on demand after adequate tender of full payment of loan, plaintiffs who brought action for conversion of the airplane were entitled to recover exemplary damages. Civ.Code, § 3294.

10. Trespass 🔑56

Where trespass is committed from wanton or malicious motives, or reckless disregard of rights of others, or under circumstances of great hardship and oppression the rule of "compensation" is not adhered to and the measure and amount of damages are for the jury alone. Civ.Code, § 3294.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Robert E. Perlick, and another, against the Pacific Discount Corporation, and others, for conversion of an airplane. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Judgment modified and as modified affirmed.

Helgoe & Hart and Bartlett & Kearney, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Biby & Biby, John E. Biby, and Peter D. Knecht, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

In this action for conversion of an airplane judgment was for plaintiffs for $7,000 actual damages against the three defendants and $3,000 exemplary damages against the two individual defendants.

The trial court found that plaintiff Smith purchased a Beechcraft racing airplane in August, 1937, by transferring to the seller certain shares of stock which had a book value of $12,500; that plaintiff expended more than $6,000 in reconditioning the plane; that in August, 1938, Smith transferred the title to the plane to plaintiff Perlick in trust for Smith; that on December 21, 1938, plaintiffs were indebted to certain persons in the amount of $2,200 for repair work on the plane; on that day plaintiffs requested defendants to loan them said amount for the purpose of paying the creditors and stated to defendants that one of the creditors was threatening to sell the plane unless he was paid immediately; that defendants said they would loan said sum for 90 days provided plaintiffs would pay $220 interest and that the only way they could do that would be for Perlick to transfer the title to the plane to defendant, Pacific Discount Corporation, and to take an option to repurchase the plane for $2,420; that thereupon defendants prepared a bill of sale (in the usual form) which was signed and executed by Perlick whereby the title to the plane was transferred to defendant Pacific Discount Corporation; that thereupon defendants prepared a writing whereby defendant Pacific Discount Corporation gave Perlick the right to purchase the plane from said defendant at any time within 90 days from said December 21, 1938, for $2,420, and said writing was executed by Pacific Discount Corporation and Perlick; that said corporation paid $2,200 to Perlick by several checks payable to Perlick in the various amounts due from Perlick to different creditors; that a few days prior to the expiration of the 90-day period plaintiffs told defendants that plaintiffs would not be able to pay said $2,420 at the expiration of said period and defendants said they would extend the time if plaintiffs would pay for the use of said $2,420 at the same rate charged for the use of $2,200 which additional charge for 30 days would be $40.33; that defendants did not at any time prior to April 27, 1939, have possession of or the right to control said plane; that plaintiffs did not, nor did either of them, sell said plane to defendants, and said transfer of title was for the purpose of securing the repayment of said $2,200 and the charge for the use of said money; that on April 24, 25 and 26, 1939, plaintiffs tendered payment of said $2,460.33 to Pacific Discount Corporation, being $2,200 principal and said further sums of $220 and $40.33, but said tenders were refused; that on April 27, 1939, plaintiffs tendered payment of $2,500 to said defendant, but the same was refused; that defendants Groenendyke and Huntington were the president and secretary, respectively, and the managers of said corporation; that on April 26, 1939, and for more than six months prior thereto, plaintiffs were the owners of said plane and were in actual and lawful possession of the same; that on April 26, the defendants without the knowledge or consent of either of the plaintiffs and without any right so to do, entered the hangar where plaintiffs had the plane stored, forcibly broke the door of said plane and removed the plane to another hangar of their own selection, and thereby converted said plane to their own use; that defendants removed certain instruments from said plane and disposed of them without the knowledge or consent of plaintiffs; that on April 27, 1939, plaintiffs demanded the release of said plane but such demand was refused; that the value of the plane on April 26, 1939, was $7,000, and this sum was the amount of loss to plaintiffs as the result of the acts of defendants; that such acts of said defendants, Groenendyke and Huntington, were wilful, wanton, malicious, fraudulent, and in reckless disregard of plaintiffs' rights and they took an unfair and inequitable advantage of plaintiffs.

The trial court made a conclusion of law that the rate of interest charged was usurious.

The defendants appeal and assert that the judgment is erroneous for the reasons (1) that the question of usury is not involved; (2) that defendants were not guilty of fraud; (3) that judgment should not have been for Perlick for either actual or exemplary damages; (4) certain findings were contradictory; (5) the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that plaintiff did not sell the airplane to defendants; (6) the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that defendants converted it; (7) parol evidence should not have been received to vary the terms of the bill of sale and option agreement; and (8) there was no justification for exemplary damages.

These points will be considered in the order above stated.

[1] (1) Defendant Pacific Discount Corporation was in the business of aviation financing and aviation sales. It was a licensed personal property broker. Section 22, article XX, of the state Constitution (relating to interest rates), adopted in 1934, which was in effect at the time of the transactions herein, provided in paragraph 3 thereof that the restrictions therein relative to the rate of interest that might be charged should not apply to any duly licensed personal property broker. Although said section authorized the Legislature to prescribe the maximum rate of interest to be charged by such brokers, such an enactment had not been made at the time of the transactions herein. Therefore, since the adoption of said section of the Constitution (until 1939 when the Legislature prescribed such rates, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1939 Supp., Act 5825) there was no statutory or constitutional provision of law limiting the amount of interest which a personal property broker may charge. Wolf v. Pacific Southwest Discount Corp., 1937, 10 Cal.2d 183, 184, 74 P.2d 263; Matulich v. Marlo Investment Co., 1936, 7 Cal.2d 374, 60 P.2d 842. Appellants' contention that usury is not involved in this case is correct.

[2] (2) The finding that appellants were guilty of fraud in stating to respondents that the only way they could be secured for the repayment of the loan would be for respondents to transfer the title to the plane to defendant corporation and for it to give back an option to repurchase, cannot be sustained. Such statement was an opinion concerning a legal question, defendants did not occupy a confidential relation toward appellants, and the circumstances were not such as to justify respondents in relying upon the statement. Bank of America v. Sanchez, 1934, 3 Cal. App.2d 238, 242, 38 P.2d 787.

[3] (3) It was not error to include Perlick as one in whose favor judgment was rendered. The plane was transferred to Perlick in August, 1938. He did not pay any consideration for it and it was not a gift from Smith. The court found that Perlick held the title to the plane in trust for Smith and was in possession of the plane. Smith prosecuted the action himself and through his trustee Perlick. Perlick had a qualified or limited interest, as trustee, in the plane and as such was entitled to maintain the action. In Goldberg v. List, 1938, 11 Cal.2d 389, at page 394, 79 P.2d 1087, at page 1090, 116 A.L.R. 900, it was stated, "the reason for the rule permitting recovery by the owner of a qualified or limited interest of the full value of personal property converted, rests * * * upon the fact that the owner of the qualified interest in addition to his own loss sustains a liability toward one owning a superior interest, which will need to be satisfied."

[4] (4) Appellants claim the finding that respondents were damaged $7,000 for the value of the plane is contradictory to the finding that appellants loaned plaintiff $2,200; that the result is that appellants have judgment for the value of the plane and no credit has been given for the $2,200 received; that it is impossible to determine which finding controlled the judgment of the court. In plaintiffs' (respondents') complaint they admit the $2,200 is due to defendant corporation and offer to do whatever the court deems equitable. The trial court did not allow credit for said sum or interest thereon for the reason, apparently, that it considered that usury was involved but, as shown herein, the usury law did not apply in this case. Respondents concede that the allowance was not made; we think it should have been made.

[5] (5) The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that plaintiff did not sell the plane to defendants.

Perlick testified that in August, 1938, he told Groenendyke he wanted to get money to get the ship out for the race;

Groenendyke said he could not loan money on an X license ship (meaning a plane used for experimental and racing purposes); similar conversation was had in October, 1938, and at many times thereafter; about two days before December 21, 1938, Groenendyke and Huntington told him they could loan $2,000 on the plane; on December 21st, he told Huntington that he hated to borrow on the airplane and pay what it would cost to borrow in that way but it would be better than losing the plane; after the contract was prepared for a loan of $2,100, Perlick said he thought it would not cover the bills and he might need more, and Huntington said, "Well we can let you have some more," a hundred dollars more; Huntington said the only way they could do it would be to draw up a bill of sale with a 90-day option to repurchase for $2,420 and that the difference of $220 would be the charge for the 90 days; the bills were paid by checks drawn by defendant corporation payable to Perlick for the various amounts of the bills and were indorsed by Perlick to the different creditors; after January, 1939, he talked to Groenendyke a number of times about money he had coming to take care of the loan; shortly before March 20, 1939, he told Groenendyke that a person wanted to refinance the plane but since the plane was stored and covered with insurance he (Perlick) thought it seemed foolish to draw up a new contract with another finance company when defendants were in the business and could let the loan ride; during another conversation about the same time, when Smith was present, Smith said he wanted to be sure not to lose the plane, that he could arrange to get the money and take care of the loan if it had to be paid but it would be a convenience if it could be carried along, and Groenendyke said that would be all right.

Smith testified that he talked with Groenendyke by telephone about November 1, 1938, and Groenendyke said that Perlick was trying to make a loan on the plane, that there was some possibility of it being worked out and that the same rates as previously mentioned would apply; Smith said if they cared to make a loan at 10 per cent or 12 per cent to go ahead with it, but not at 20 per cent, and Groenendyke said he would not consider it; that his next talk with Groenendyke was at the hangar in the presence of Perlick on March 15th, when Smith asked if he would extend the loan and he said he didn't see any reason why it could not be extended, that they didn't need the money and were willing to let it ride.

Witness Holley, an employee of Smith, testified that he had a conversation with Groenendyke in April, 1939, wherein Holley asked him what was owed and when Groenendyke gave him the figures he (Holley) wrote them on a paper (an exhibit) the way Groenendyke gave them to him,—$2,200, $220 charges and $40.33 interest that was overdue.

The fact that the $40.33, which was charged at the time of the conversation regarding an extension for 30 days, is precisely the same amount as interest would be on $2,420 for 30 days at 20 per cent per annum is an indication that the transaction was a loan.

Defendant Groenendyke testified that he was in the aviation financing and sales business; that in October, 1938, Perlick asked for a loan on the plane and he told Perlick he could not make a loan on an X license; the subject was discussed with Perlick to the same effect several times later; about December 15th, Perlick mentioned a loan of $2,000 but it was refused and at that time Groenendyke talked with Smith by telephone but did not remember anything being said about interest and interest was never mentioned in any of the conversations with Perlick; on December 20th, Perlick told him the plane was to be sold the next day by the sheriff for a mechanic's lien on the plane unless he was able to make a loan on the plane, and Groenendyke said they were unable to make the loan but would purchase the plane for $2,200 and give Perlick an option to repurchase it after a 90-day period for $2,420; that they could not loan on the X license because it was an experimental plane and had no resale value; the idea of buying it and selling it was to make a profit; that he told Perlick the $220 was 10 per cent and the regular commission on a sale; that although they had purchased the plane and were the owners they would charge 10 per cent commission to the person to whom the sale was made rather than the one (themselves) for whom it was made; on December 21st, Perlick said he would accept the offer, nothing was said about a loan or interest; didn't recall any conversation with Smith before the transaction; bill of sale and option were prepared by Huntington; Perlick said it was a high rate of interest and it was better for him to pay it than to lose the plane, but they pointed out to Perlick that it was not interest but commission; after the transaction they told the airport to hold the plane in the name of defendants; they never had a key to the plane and the plane was locked; they had no examination made of the plane by a mechanic before purchasing it; they did not pay delinquent taxes other than as a part of the $2,200 loaned; did not have the motor turned over to protect it while it was in dead storage; that he (Groenendyke) wrote a letter on March 24, 1939, as president of the Pacific Discount Corporation to Perlick which stated: "Your contract on Beechcraft * * * became due and payable March 21, 1939. We have called several times regarding paying off the balance due, but to date have been stalled along from day to day. You must realize that under the terms of the agreement that if this ship was not picked up before the 21st of March the property automatically becomes ours. We realize that you have needed a few extra days to settle this matter and have granted them to you, but we must have this situation cleared in full by Monday, the 27th of March. We are only too willing to work with you, but feel that we have granted as much time as we possibly can. Hoping to have your check in full by or before Monday, March 27, we remain Sincerely, * * *."

Defendant Huntington testified in substance the same as Groenendyke.

Witness Mrs. Pierce, employed as secretary by defendants, testified that Huntington called her into his office on December 21st, when Perlick was there and said Perlick was selling the plane to the defendant corporation.

This evidence warranted the court in holding that the transaction was not a sale. The letter of March 24th, from Groenendyke above set forth demanding payment and stating if payment was not made "the property automatically becomes ours" and "hoping to have your check in full" is strong refutation of the present claim of appellants that the transaction was a sale and supports the finding that it was a loan whereby defendants were secured by a lien on the plane evidenced by a bill of sale and an option to repurchase.

In Teater v. Good Hope Dev. Corp., 1939, 14 Cal.2d 196, at page 209, 93 P.2d 112, at page 119, it was stated in quoting another case with approval: " 'It is the general rule that where the purpose and effect of the transaction is to create a lien on specific property as security for the payment of a debt it constitutes a mortgage, irrespective of the language used by the parties.' "

In Bonestell v. Western Auto-Motive Finance Corp., 1924, 69 Cal.App. 719, at page 723, 232 P. 734, at page 735, it was said: "The whole transaction, though couched in the form of a bill of sale * * * and a conditional agreement of sale * * * was simply a device to secure the repayment of the sum of * * * loaned by the appellant * * *." See, also, Mercantile A. Corp. v. Pioneer C. I. Co., 1932, 124 Cal.App. 593, 597, 12 P.2d 988, citing last case above mentioned.

In Paladini v. Durchman, 1932, 216 Cal. 212, 214, 13 P.2d 731, 732, it was stated: "We are satisfied that the purported 'bill of sale' legally constitutes nothing more than a chattel mortgage given as security for the repayment of the money * * *."

The case of Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 1922, 56 Cal.App. 728, 732, 206 P. 674, 675, states: "* * * if plaintiff ever had any right to the possession of the automobile it was only because he had a mortgage lien on the car, created by defendant's execution of the bill of sale and the so-called 'lease.' "

(6) The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendants converted the airplane.

In addition to the above mentioned evidence, and more particularly upon the subject of conversion, there was testimony as follows:

By Perlick: That payment of the amount due, $2,460.33, was tendered defendants on April 24, 25 and 26, 1939, but was not accepted although no objection was made as to the form of the tender; on April 26th, Huntington said the plane was no good and Smith replied the plane was worth $20,000 to him and that he had a check there to pay everything against the plane; after that conversation Perlick and Smith left Huntington's office and went to the plane and found that the glass in the door of the plane had been broken, the door taken off and six principal flying instruments had been removed; Perlick kept the plane key at home, no request was ever made to deliver the key to the defendants; the plane was removed to another hangar by defendants without his knowledge or consent.

By witness Morgan, janitor at the hangar: That Groenendyke told him in April, 1939, to get a broom and pick up some glass by Perlick's ship.

By Groenendyke: That the tenders were not accepted because the option had run out; there was no extension after March 27th, only a verbal extension of the option for two days; Huntington and Groenendyke caused the plane to be moved. The plane was locked at the time. They ordered the window cut in order to move the plane and the window was smashed or cut; did not tell Morgan, the janitor, to sweep up the glass; they sold the instruments.

By Huntington: In substance the same as Groenendyke.

[6, 7] As above shown, defendants had a lien upon the plane to secure their loan. Possession of and title to the plane remained with Perlick. If appellants were entitled to foreclose the lien their remedy was to foreclose it by proper legal proceedings. Bonestell v. Western Auto-Motive Finance Corp., 1924, supra, 69 Cal. App. 719, 726, 232 P. 734. There was no proper proceeding to foreclose the lien. Moving the plane and selling the instruments mentioned was a wrongful assumption of dominion over the plane and was a conversion of it. Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 1922, supra, 56 Cal.App. 728, 738, 206 P. 674; Metheny v. Davis, 1930, 107 Cal. App. 137, 139, 290 P. 91.

[8] (7) It was proper under the issues here presented to receive parol evidence to show that the bill of sale and option were made and given by way of security rather than as an absolute transfer of title with the right to repurchase. Sterman v. Ziem, 1936, 17 Cal.App.2d 414, 419, 62 P.2d 160; Paladini v. Durchman, 1932, supra, 216 Cal. 212, 13 P.2d 731. Under such circumstances parol evidence was admitted, not to alter the terms of the written instruments, but to show the purpose for which they were executed. Barber v. Motor Inv. Co., 1931, 136 Or. 361, 298 P. 216, 217.

[9] (8) There was justification for the award for exemplary damages. The plane was of substantial value as shown by the testimony of witnesses qualified to give an opinion upon that subject. Witnesses for the plaintiffs testified the value was as follows: Three witnesses said $13,000, one said $12,000, another $10,000 and another $9,000. Witnesses for defendants testified the value was as follows: One witness said $2,500, another $1,800, and another said between $3,000 and $4,000. According to the testimony the average life in flying hours of the kind of engine in this plane was 3,000 hours and the plane had been flown about 196 hours. When the loan herein was made, at a high rate of interest—about 40 per cent per annum, defendants knew that Perlick was about to lose the plane by reason of lien foreclosure proceedings; they refused on four successive days to accept full payment of principal and interest; defendants, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiffs and at a time when they knew plaintiffs were able and anxious to pay the loan in full in order to release the lien against the plane, broke the glass in the door of the plane, detached the door, carried away and sold six important flying instruments of the approximate value of $720, removed the plane from the hangar where the plaintiffs had it stored to another hangar of defendants' selection; no proper proceedings were had by defendants to obtain possession of the plane or foreclose thereon; on April 27, 1939, after having taken the plane unlawfully they refused, upon demand that the plane be returned, to release it although $2,500 which was more than the full amount due them was tendered by a cashier's check. The defendants Groenendyke and Huntington were guilty of oppression, implied malice, reckless disregard of plaintiffs' rights and taking unfair advantage of plaintiffs.

It is provided in section 3294 of the Civil Code that, "In an action * * * not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, the plaintiff * * * may recover damages for the sake of example * * *."

[10] The case of Dorsey v. Manlove, 1860, 14 Cal. 553, 556, states: "where the trespass is committed from wanton or malicious motives, or a reckless disregard of the rights of others, or under circumstances of great hardship and oppression, the rule of compensation is not adhered to, and the measure and amount of damages are matters for the jury alone."

In the case of Prentice v. Zumwalt, 1932, 124 Cal.App. 646, 13 P.2d 379, the defendant took possession unlawfully of plaintiff's farm machinery. Over plaintiff's strenuous protest it was loaded and hauled away.

While it was being loaded plaintiff tendered payment in full and it was refused. Defendant had purchased plaintiff's note secured by a mortgage on the machinery and, in taking possession of the machinery under a provision in the mortgage, was attempting to attach it and collect a balance he claimed to be due on other farm machinery voluntarily returned to defendant by plaintiff because it was not satisfactory. The court said at page 652 of 124 Cal.App., at page 381 of 13 P.2d, "A refusal to surrender the possession of the property when an adequate valid tender was made, rendered the defendant liable for all damages which accrued therefrom." It was stated further on that page, "These circumstances furnish adequate evidence of implied malice and oppression."

In Booth v. People's Finance, etc., Co., 1932, 124 Cal.App. 131, 12 P.2d 50, the defendants took possession of plaintiff's automobile unlawfully while it was parked in front of defendants' office and plaintiff was preparing to pay defendants the balance due on the automobile. The court said at page 145 of 124 Cal.App., at page 55 of 12 P.2d, "but, the taking being held wrongful, the refusal of the defendants to accept payment of the remainder of the purchase price of the automobile furnishes some basis for supporting the verdict of punitive damages, even though it may be slight." That case also states (page 144 of 124 Cal.App., page 55 of 12 P.2d), "The conduct of the defendant * * * subsequent to the taking of possession of the automobile, and his refusal to redeliver the same, and also his actions when the plaintiff sought to make settlement of the entire balance * * * does furnish some basis for holding that the defendant * * * exhibited a malicious purpose." The "conduct" and "actions" of defendant mentioned in that quotation refer to his refusal to redeliver and to accept payment, and to a statement by him that, "That's the way I treat people who fight me." (This referred to a replevin action by plaintiff against defendant.)

In the present case the basis for exemplary damages was not a slight basis of a refusal to accept full payment, but included four refusals to accept full payment, acts of secretly and forcibly breaking into the locked plane, detaching, carrying away and selling important flying instruments of substantial value, wrongfully and secretly removing the whole plane to a hangar of their own selection and refusing to release it upon demand after adequate tender of full payment.

As above stated a credit of $2,460.33, the amount of the loan and interest, should be allowed appellants. The judgment is modified accordingly.

As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action by O. C. Sattinger against the Golden State Glass Corporation for attorney's fees. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Glen Behymer and Newby & Newby, all of Los Angeles, for appellant

O. C. Sattinger in pro. per., and Frank M. Gunter, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff, an attorney at law, obtained judgment against defendant for $5,100 for legal services rendered. Defendant appeals and asserts that the judgment was erroneous for the reasons (1) there was no evidence to support the finding of employment of plaintiff by defendant, (2) the evidence as to estoppel was admitted without any pleading alleging the facts constituting the estoppel, and (3) the amount of the judgment was excessive.

An action was pending in the superior court at Los Angeles entitled "G. C. DeGarmo, Plaintiff, v. A. Goldman, N. E. Shenberg, and Golden State Glass Corporation, Defendants," wherein the plaintiff therein as one of the directors of the corporation defendant was seeking to remove the two other directors, Shenberg and Goldman, and to recover damages from them in behalf of the corporation. A receiver pendente lite of said corporation had been appointed.

The plaintiff herein testified that on the day after the receiver was appointed he was called to the office of an attorney at which place defendants Shenberg and Goldman were present, and plaintiff asked how and when he would be paid in connection with his employment by and representation of the corporation in the then pending case; that the attorney said in the presence of Shenberg and Goldman that they had no money to pay him at that time but when the receivership was vacated in the trial court the corporation would pay him; that if it became necessary to appeal or obtain an extraordinary writ he would be paid at the time the decision became final; the plaintiff also asked about payment for services in the trial of the case and any work other than in the receivership matter, and the attorney said the corporation could not pay for that work at that time either but he would be paid from time to time; the attorney asked Shenberg and Goldman if they were agreeable to the matter as outlined to plaintiff and they nodded assent and one said he was "agreeable."

Defendant Goldman testified that such conversation did not take place in his presence; that nothing was mentioned regarding compensation. On cross-examination he testified that he was discharged by the receiver, was out of the employment of the corporation for a year, but he was in such employment at the time of the trial at a salary of $350 a month; that he verified the petition for writs of prohibition and mandamus which plaintiff prepared and filed, which verification included a statement that "N. Shenberg * * * A. Goldman, secretary of the corporation, and as the only two directors of said corporation who are not plaintiffs in said action, employed petitioner, Oscar C. Sattinger, to represent said corporation * * * and to oppose said order to show cause and take all necessary steps * * * and discharge said receiver." (The petition for writ of prohibition was to prevent the enforcement of orders made in appointing the receiver. The petition for writ of mandamus was to require the trial court to recognize plaintiff as attorney for the corporation.)

There were two plaintiffs, Mr. DeGarmo and Mr. Crane, in the action referred to, when the complaint was filed and when the trial court refused to recognize the plaintiff in the present action (Mr. Sattinger) as attorney for the corporation. It seems that one of the reasons plaintiff was not recognized by the trial court as such attorney was that two directors were plaintiffs and two were defendants and that since the two defendants did not constitute a majority of the directors they did not have authority to employ an attorney for the corporation. Later Mr. Crane made a motion to be released as a party to the action upon the ground that he had been made a party without his knowledge or consent, and the motion was granted. (It appears that the stock which stood in his name was held by him as trustee for Mr. DeGarmo.)

Soon after plaintiff started to act as attorney for the corporation, Mr. DeGarmo, as president of the corporation, wrote a letter to plaintiff stating that the board of directors had not employed plaintiff, that Shenberg and Goldman had no authority to employ him, and that he had no right to represent the corporation.

Plaintiff testified further that, in connection with the receivership matter, he attended the various hearings in the superior court and the District Court of Appeal and prepared and presented the petition for said writs of prohibition and mandamus in the Supreme Court; that the writs were issued, the receivership was vacated and he was permitted to appear as attorney for the corporation; that he devoted twenty-eight days to the receivership phase of the case and that the reasonable value of his services in such matter was $5,000; that in connection with the main case he prepared a cross-complaint against plaintiff DeGarmo to recover fees and salary paid to DeGarmo by the corporation; that he devoted twelve days in the trial of the case, and six partial days, about one-half of each day, in connection with the deposition of Mr. DeGarmo, and seven days in preparation of pleadings, findings, etc.; that the reasonable value of his services in the main case was $2,100.

Mr. DeGarmo, an attorney at law, plaintiff in the case referred to, an owner of one-half of the voting stock and one-third of the capital stock of the corporation, testified that the services rendered by plaintiff Sattinger were of no value; that the reasons for such opinion were: that when the receiver was appointed the organization remained intact except Goldman was discharged; that before the receivership matter was determined finally the case had been tried on its merits, the receiver discharged and the assets turned over to DeGarmo as president; that Shenberg walked out (the judgment removed him); that as to the trial the corporation was not concerned, no relief was asked against it, only the removal of the two directors was sought; that attorneys other than Mr. Sattinger conducted the trial for the defense, except that plaintiff did ask leave to file the cross-complaint and there was some argument about it.

[1] The corporation was a necessary party in said action. Civ.Code, § 310. The plaintiff in that action was president of the corporation and owned one-third of the capital stock of the corporation. The defendants, Shenberg and Goldman, were vice-president and secretary, respectively; each owned one-third of the capital stock and they were the actual operators of the business.

[2] The finding of the trial court in the action now before us that "the plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral contract with N. E. Shenberg and A. Goldman acting for the said defendant, * * * whereby defendant employed the plaintiff as its attorney to represent it," is supported substantially by the evidence, as shown by the evidence hereinabove referred to concerning the conversation relative to plaintiff's services and compensation. Although Goldman said he was not present, the trial court found to the contrary.

[3] Under the circumstances here presented Shenberg and Goldman had authority to employ an attorney in behalf of the corporation. Golden State Glass Corporation v. Superior Court, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 384, 396, 90 P.2d 75. In the case just cited the defendant corporation herein, the plaintiff herein, Shenberg and Goldman were petitioners in the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus to require the superior court to recognize the plaintiff herein as attorney for said corporation in the action concerning which plaintiff is now suing for attorney's fees. The writ of mandamus was granted and the plaintiff herein was permitted to appear as attorney for said corporation. The Supreme Court stated at page 396 of said case in 13 Cal.2d at page 81 of 90 P.2d:

"Petitioners' contention that the trial court should have recognized Sattinger as attorney for the corporation must also be sustained. The commencement of the litigation by DeGarmo made necessary the appointment of an attorney for the corporation. At that time it had four directors, but only DeGarmo, Shenberg and Goldman actively participated in the direction of the corporate affairs. By the uncontradicted affidavits of Goldman and Shenberg it appears that Crane acquired his two shares of stock in 1936 for the purpose of representing DeGarmo's interest during his absence on a long vacation trip. The agreements between DeGarmo, Shenberg and Goldman which are set forth in the complaint recite that these three men are the sole owners of the stock of the corporation. Unquestionably, Crane has no interest in the defendant corporation and the record includes an affidavit quoting Crane as saying that the action was filed without his knowledge or consent.

"Under such circumstances the superior court should have recognized the attorney employed by the two directors owning two-thirds of the corporate stock and in actual control of the corporation's business affairs."

There was no resolution of the board of directors employing plaintiff. Appellant states that the board of directors must be duly assembled when contracts are authorized in order to bind the corporation. In the mandamus proceeding, just cited, involving this issue, the Supreme Court stated further at page 396 of 13 Cal.2d, at page 81 of 90 P.2d: "In Streeten v. Robinson, 102 Cal. 542, 36 P. 946, 947, where the vice-president, then actually managing the business of the corporation, employed an attorney without approval of the board of directors this court held such action proper, the court saying: 'The authority of the president or other head of a corporation to employ an attorney when the exigencies of his company require it has been frequently recognized. (Citing cases.)'"

As above stated, the trial court found that the parties entered into a contract whereby plaintiff was to render legal services for defendant. Appellant contends that irrespective of what was said or done by Shenberg and Goldman at the time of making the alleged contract, Shenberg and Goldman did not have authority legally to employ plaintiff as attorney for the defendant corporation. The testimony upon which the trial court found that such contract was made was in substance a recital of the same circumstances as those stated in said opinion of the Supreme Court, in the mandamus proceeding, as the basis for its decision that Shenberg and Goldman were authorized legally to employ plaintiff as attorney for the corporation. It must therefore be recognized in this case, irrespective of whether the fact is res judicata, that said opinion of the Supreme Court, based upon practically the identical circumstances involved herein, is directly in point as to the law applicable in the present case upon the issue concerning the authority of Shenberg and Goldman to bind the corporation.

[4, 5] Appellant claims that the amount awarded as attorney fees was excessive. The substance of the testimony concerning the legal services rendered and the reasonable value thereof has been stated hereinabove. In the case of the City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles-Inyo Farms Co., 1933, 134 Cal.App. 268, 274, 25 P.2d 224, 227, it was stated, "The rule is established that, in fixing the fees of attorneys, the court is vested with a wide discretion and the court's award of an amount for such fees will be disturbed only when it is manifest that there has been a palpable abuse of such discretion." There was no abuse of discretion in this case.

It is to be noted that the purport of the testimony of Mr. De Garmo was, in part, that the legal services of plaintiff were of no value because the two defendant directors were removed by the judgment of the trial court. It is to be noted further, that since that testimony was given the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the trial court in that case. DeGarmo v. Goldman, et al., 1942, 19 Cal.2d 755, 123 P.2d 1.

By reason of the ruling herein as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of employment, it will not be necessary to discuss respondent's claim of res judicata or estoppel, or appellant's contention that evidence as to estoppel should not have been admitted without a pleading thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

In action to establish against deceased's estate an alleged oral trust, judgment for plaintiff was sufficiently supported by findings covering the matter of creation of the trust, and amount of trust funds for which deceased was responsible to son at time of her death, and that the full amount thereof was on deposit in her name or invested in securities held by her at time of her death. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Roy Kobida against Adolf Hinkelmann, as administrator of the estate of Amalia Hinkelmann, deceased, to establish and have enforced an alleged express oral trust involving personalty. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Kenneth L. White, of San Francisco, and J. W. O'Neill and Donahue, Richards & Hamlin, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Grennan & Ripley, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action to establish and have enforced against the estate of Amalia Hinkelmann, deceased, an alleged express oral trust involving personal property. The plaintiff, Roy Kobida, is the surviving son of the decedent and Joseph Kobida, who predeceased her. The mother died intestate in April, 1939, leaving surviving her as heirs at law the plaintiff, aged 42 years, another son two years younger than plaintiff, and her second husband, Adolf Hinkelmann, who was appointed administrator of her estate and is the defendant herein. The complaint in the present action was filed in September, 1939, and is based on allegations to the effect that for a period of 16 years beginning in 1912 plaintiff turned over his earnings to his mother pursuant to an agreement with her that she would save and invest the money for his use and benefit and on demand return the same to him together with the earnings thereof; that the following property inventoried in her estate represented the accumulations and investments of said trust moneys: savings accounts in banks and other depositaries amounting to $7,350, of which $1,700 was in United States Postal Savings Certificates; three unsecured promissory notes of the total appraised value of $1,410; and two trust deeds securing the payment of promissory notes, one for the appraised value of $9,160 plus interest given by Godfrey and Louise Mezirka, and the other for the face value of $4,500 given by John and Theresa Weber. The answer put in issue the material allegations of the complaint and pleaded the statute of limitations. The trial court found that a trust existed as claimed by plaintiff; that plaintiff's mother at the time of her death "held certain property consisting of money and other evidences of investment in trust for the plaintiff;" that at the time of the trustee's death plaintiff was beneficiary to the extent of $6,000 and gave judgment in his favor for that amount.

[1-4] Section 2221 of the Civil Code provides that "* * * a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust, and, 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust." And it is well settled that such trusts may be proved by parol evidence, but that the evidence must be "clear, satisfactory and convincing." See Taylor v. Bunnell, 211 Cal. 601, 296 P. 288, and 23 A.L.R., note, p. 1500. In the case of Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 259 P. 947, 952, the term "clear and unequivocal" is used. As first ground of appeal defendant contends that the evidence in the present case does not measure up to the required legal standard. It has been held repeatedly, however, that whether the evidence in any given case is of the character mentioned must be determined by the trial court, and that where such determination is not wanting in evidentiary support a reviewing court must accept such determination as conclusive. 25 Cal.Jur. p. 248; Taylor v. Bunnell, supra; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 334, 27 P. 186; Mead v. Mead, 41 Cal.App. 280, 285, 182 P. 761; Bollinger v. Bollinger, 154 Cal. 695, 703, 99 P. 196; Harris v. Harris, 136 Cal. 379, 384, 69 P. 23. Furthermore, it is held that in passing upon the question of whether the finding of the trial court is justified by the evidence, it is necessary to take into consideration all of the evidence, rather than certain disconnected portions thereof. Brison v. Brison, supra. Viewed in the light of these rules, the record in the present case shows that the trial court's findings in plaintiff's favor on all material issues are amply sustained by evidence consisting not alone of the plaintiff's testimony, but of the testimony of disinterested witnesses and strong corroborative documentary proof.

A fair picture of the background of the family may be had from the following facts, as they appear from the evidence: Plaintiff's father and mother were Czechoslovakians. In 1906 they moved from Chicago to Oakland with their two sons, Roy being then about 12 years old. Thereafter they made Oakland their permanent home. They were illiterate, hard working, thrifty people. For many years Joseph Kobida, the husband and father, worked as a mechanic for the Southern Pacific Company. He died in 1929, leaving two pieces of residential property he and his wife had acquired, and a $2,400 bank account standing in his name, all of which was turned over to her as community property. The mother was queer in some ways, but especially shrewd and thrifty. She was able to read and write very little English, but understood the value of money, and how to earn and save it. The family lived in a small home on an ordinary sized city lot, and besides doing her own housework, Mrs. Kobida found time to earn money in various ways. She did housework for other people, raised goats and sold the milk, raised chickens and sold the eggs, and made and sold wine. She also carried on a personal loan business with neighbors, for amounts ranging up to $500, at high rates of interest. She usually wore old and quaint clothing, and around her own premises frequently went barefooted. Plaintiff left school at the age of twelve. His ability to read was limited, but he was very industrious and apparently inherited his mother's propensities for hard work and frugality. Except for the time he served as an enlisted soldier over seas during the world's war, he lived home almost continuously until 1928; and the evidence shows that his mother had a very deep devotion for him and that he always had unbounded confidence in her judgment and integrity in taking care of and investing his earnings.

With respect to the matter of the creation of the trust plaintiff testified most positively that the understanding he had with his mother about the money he gave her was that she was "taking care" of his money for him, "saving" it for him; that she "invested it" for him; and told him the money would be his whenever he wanted it; that she would say, "now, this money that you are giving me, I am saving it for you and you can have it anytime you want it;" that he did not ask her at any time for the return of any of the money because he did not need it, and if he did not take it, it would come to him when she died. To quote from his testimony: "* * * it was always known that of course when I turned this money over to her, why, she would take care of it for me.

"Q. She was to take care of it for you and leave it to you when she died? A. No, if she died, I would expect it, yes.

"Q. You did not expect it before, did you? A. I didn't have occasion to expect it before. I did not have no need for it." Again, "I always expected the money when she died, but I could get it whenever I wanted it, but I had no occasion to ask for it at any time.

"Q. The only reason you never asked your mother for any money or for the money prior to the time of her death, was because you did not have any occasion for it and did not need it? A. I did not need it, I did not have occasion to."

In strong corroboration of plaintiff's testimony there was introduced in evidence in his behalf a bank book issued by the San Francisco Bank, showing that on January 9, 1931, she opened an account in the name of "Mally Kobida Trustee for Gejza Kobida," and deposited therein $9,346.25. "Mally Kobida" or "Molly Kobida" were the names by which she was generally known; and "Gejza" was apparently one of plaintiff's given names, and she usually referred to him as "her Gejza." Plaintiff further testified that his mother showed him bank books issued to her in her name as trustee for him, and that she told him the money deposited therein was his; that she also showed him Postal Savings Certificates amounting to $1,700, saying the money was his; and that she discussed different investments with him but used her own judgment in making them. And in further corroboration of plaintiff's testimony he produced three disinterested witnesses, all friends and neighbors of Mrs. Kobida, who testified in effect that she had told them that she was saving plaintiff's money for him; that the money she loaned out was not only her money but her son's money. One witness testified that Mrs. Kobida had told her that Roy was a good boy to her, that he gave her all his earnings and she invested them for him; that she had $9,000 in a San Francisco bank that she wouldn't touch because it was Roy's. Another witness called by plaintiff testified that when she asked Mrs. Kobida why she was so saving, she replied that this is for her and her Gejza. She also told the witness that she went over to San Francisco because she made money for herself and her Gejza.

As to the various sums of money plaintiff turned over to his mother, his testimony was in substance as follows: He went to school about a year after they came to California. He had been working at odd jobs in Chicago, and after moving to Oakland continued to work after school and during vacations. From 1912 until he enlisted in the army in 1917 he worked at various jobs as laborer, apprentice and mechanic, earning $22 or $25 a week on some jobs, and as much as $6.40 a day with overtime on others. He lived at home all during this period, except on a couple of jobs where he lived at the job. He testified that he gave his mother all his earnings, and she gave him back what money he needed for spending money. When he worked away from home temporarily, either his board was deducted by his employer from his check, or his mother gave him the money to pay it. She bought his clothes, and once gave him about $75 to buy an automobile. While he was overseas with the army he had $15 a month (approximately half of his pay) sent to his mother, and when he received his bonus of $1,400 he turned it over to her. After the war he worked again at different places as a mechanic, earning as high as $7 a day with overtime, and continued to turn over all his wages to his mother, and she gave him back what spending money he wanted, amounting to about $3 a week. For a period of five or six months he engaged in the automobile repair business with his brother, during which time he did not give his mother any money. After this venture he went back to work as a mechanic for the Moore Shipyards, the Victory Motor Company, the Durant Motor Company and others, and again earned at times over $7 a day. Out of these earnings he gave his mother about $25 a week; but about this time concluded to go into business for himself, so he opened a savings account in his name and in 1925 went into business for himself. However he continued to give his mother $25 a week for himself, and an additional $18 a week as salary for his father when he helped him; and he made these $25 weekly payments to her up to 1928, when he married and ceased living at home.

The trial court found that the amount due plaintiff and held in trust for him by his mother at the time of her death was $6,000; and while it does not appear just how the trial court arrived at that amount, the evidence clearly shows that $6,000 was withdrawn by her from the $9,346.25 trust account in the San Francisco Bank, and by her invested in the Mezirka loan. The circumstances relating thereto, as explained by plaintiff, were these: Early in 1939 his mother held a second mortgage on the Mezirka property, upon which there was then due $2,800. The Bank of Italy held the first mortgage, given originally to secure a loan of $10,000, which had been reduced to $6,000. The bank called the loan, and in order to protect the second mortgage plaintiff's mother acquired the first mortgage; and a new note was given to her for $9,260, secured by a deed of trust. The trust account with the bank shows a $6,000 withdrawal on January 16, 1939, which left a balance therein of $279.17; and the new Mezirka note and trust deed bear date January 30, 1939. Plaintiff testified definitely and positively that his mother withdrew the $6,000 from the trust account for the purpose of investing the money in the Mezirka loan; that before doing so she talked the matter over with him and he advised against it; and that afterwards she told him that she had done so on the advice of Hinkelmann. The trust account further shows that previously and on July 9, 1935, plaintiff's mother withdrew $3,000 therefrom, which plaintiff testified went into the Weber loan. In this connection the evidence shows that the mortgage is dated March 23, 1936; that it was made out originally to "Molly Kobida and Roy Kobida, her son," but that sometime subsequently a line was drawn through the words "and Roy Kobida, her son." When, why or by whom this was done the evidence does not explain.

It is quite obvious that the foregoing evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff established all of the elements of a voluntary trust as they are specified in sections 2221 and 2222 of the Civil Code; and that at the time of the death of plaintiff's mother at least $6,000 of plaintiff's money was on deposit or invested in securities standing in her name. Defendant argues that plaintiff's testimony was "equivocal;" and in this connection it may be conceded that on cross-examination some conflicts were developed on minor matters. But under the authorities above cited, the question of whether the evidence in any given case is "clear, satisfactory and convincing" is for the trial court to determine; and none of the points urged by defendant in this behalf would justify the rejection of the trial court's determination as being unsupported. Defendant would have the word "unequivocal" as used in the decision in Lefrooth v. Prentice, supra, construed as meaning "without conflict;" but necessarily such narrow construction would preclude the beneficiary in all cases from obtaining relief in the trial court if the evidence presented a conflict on any point; and such is not the law. Obviously the court in the Lefrooth case intended to use the word "unequivocal" in a sense synonymous with "clear, satisfactory and convincing," the term used in the other decisions in dealing with issues of this kind. Nor do we agree with defendant's contention that plaintiff's testimony as to "the manner in which the trust is to be performed" was irreconcilable. He testified that he could have the money any time he asked for it, and that he would receive it from his mother when she died; but one of these statements is not necessarily false, as defendant contends. It is clear from an examination of plaintiff's whole testimony that he meant he could have the money back any time he asked for it, but that if he did not need it, or did not ask for it, it would come to him on his mother's death; that he did not need the money, so let it remain in trust, knowing it would all be his when she died.

[5-8] Defendant's second major point is that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment. While they are not as definite or comprehensive as they might have been, there is no such fatal defect therein as would warrant a reversal on that ground. They cover the matter of the creation of the trust, the amount of trust funds for which the trustee was responsible to plaintiff at the time of her death, and show that the full amount thereof was then on deposit in her name or invested in the securities held by her at the time of her death. Defendant apparently takes the position that where a deceased trustee has mingled trust funds with his own and subsequently invested the mingled funds in property which is taken in his own name, the beneficiary is relegated to the status of a general creditor who must proceed against the decedent's estate by way of filing a claim with the representative of the estate, unless he can trace the trust funds to some definite property of which the trustee died possessed. Defendant argues, therefore, that since the trial court here found that the decedent "held certain property consisting of money and other evidences of investment in trust for the plaintiff" without specifying the particular property in which the trust funds were invested, the findings are legally insufficient to support a judgment based on a trust, and that therefore plaintiff may not recover the amount of the trust funds, because admittedly he did not file a claim against the estate. In support of this position defendant quotes from and relies on the cases of Lathrop v. Bamptom, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141, and Estate of Arms, 186 Cal. 554, 199 P. 1053, also Orcutt v. Gould, 117 Cal. 315, 49 P. 188, which is based on the Lathrop case. However, the decisions in the Lathrop and Arms cases are extensively reviewed in the later case of Noble v. Noble, 198 Cal. 129, 243 P. 439, 43 A.L.R. 1235, and the decision therein is construed and approved in Mitchell v. Dunn, 211 Cal. 129, 294 P. 386, 388, and in those cases it is clearly pointed out that the rule here contended for by defendant has no application where the estate of the decedent trustee is solvent. Here there is no claim made that the estate is insolvent; in fact the record shows to the contrary. Quoting from the headnotes in Noble v. Noble, supra, that case holds that "The trustee of an express trust, by the mere process of converting the corpus of the trust property into cash and depositing the same in his own name and to his personal credit in his bank, cannot thereby relieve himself of his duty to render an account of his trust and relegate the beneficiary to the position of a general creditor of himself or of his entirely solvent estate; and upon the death of such trustee, leaving a solvent estate with no creditors, the beneficiary is not relegated to the position of an ordinary creditor, and is not required to present a claim against the estate, but may proceed in equity against the fund of the decedent with which the trust moneys were intermingled." In reviewing the decision in that case and conforming to the doctrine laid down therein the court in Mitchell v. Dunn, supra, said: "We are aware of the rule that a cestui cannot follow trust funds unless he can trace them into the specific property involved. It does not suffice merely to show possession of trust funds by the trustee and the purchase of the property; it is clear that the identity of the funds must be traced. Estate of Arms, 186 Cal. 554, 199 P. 1053; Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 481, 42 P. 152. However, the degree of identification in an action between the cestui and the trustee is far less than in a case where the trustee is insolvent and the rights of creditors are involved. Whatever confusion may have existed in this regard in the decisions of this state was entirely set at rest by the case of Noble v. Noble, 198 Cal. 129, 243 P. 439, 43 A.L.R. 1235. That case held that in a contest between the cestui and the administrator of a deceased defaulting trustee, where the trustee had commingled trust and personal funds, the cestui had a special lien on the entire estate of the deceased solvent trustee, even though the trust funds could not be traced into any definite property. The court very carefully distinguished the cases involving the rights of creditors, and held that a different rule applied in such cases. The rule is now settled in this state that, when the money of the trustor can be traced into a particular fund, or deposit, though it be mingled with other money, the beneficiary may enforce the trust. Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 150, 231 P. 987." The law as laid down in the decisions in the two cases last quoted from is obviously here controlling.

[9] Defendant's final contention relates to the question of the application of the doctrine of laches and the statute of limitations. The evidence shows, however, that under the terms of the trust plaintiff's mother was to hold the money and keep investing it for plaintiff until he asked for the return thereof; that if he did not ask for it before her death it would be left to him at that time. He testified that he did not ask for it during her lifetime; and she made no provision for its return to him upon her death. She died in April, 1939, and the present action was instituted the following September. Therefore there was no question of laches, and the statute of limitations did not start to run until the trust was repudiated by failure to make provision for the return of the trust funds upon her death.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William J. Palmer, Judge.

Action by Sam Bell and others against Bayly Bros., Inc., of California, and others, to enforce certain alleged rights of defendant corporation, on allegations that its board of directors refused to act in the matter. From a judgment for defendants after a motion for nonsuit was sustained, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Salisbury, Robinson & Himrod, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Chapman & Chapman, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, Justice.

The plaintiffs, as stockholders, each owning one share of preferred stock of Bayly Bros., Inc., of California, a corporation, (hereinafter referred to as "Bayly Bros."), brought this action to enforce certain alleged rights of that corporation, on allegations that its board of directors, all of whom are among the defendants, refused to act in the matter. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment adverse to them rendered on a motion for a nonsuit.

The facts presented by the record are many and complicated, but only a part of them are important to a consideration of the point which we think determinative of the appeal. The complaint, which is labeled "Complaint for Conversion," contains two counts. The first count alleges that the corporation above named was the owner of 1666⅔ shares of stock of National Oil Co. (hereinafter referred to as "oil stock") worth $50,000, which stood on the books of that company in the names of two trustees; that defendants Roy Bayly and Harold Bayly, acting for Bayly Bros., caused this oil stock to be transferred to other persons who are also defendants; that they did this without authority from the board of directors of such corporation and it received no consideration therefor; and that the named defendants and their transferees claim to be the owners of the stock. The second count incorporates all of the first except the allegations regarding the ownership and transfer of the oil stock, and in place thereof alleges that Bayly Bros. "now is" the owner of the oil stock and the individual defendants "unlawfully converted and disposed of the same to their own use." The relief demanded is the return of the oil stock or its value to the corporation. No dates are given for any of the acts of defendants complained of. The complaint was filed May 22, 1936. The answer, among other defenses, pleads that the action is barred by subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At the trial a motion for nonsuit was made and granted, one of the grounds of which was that the action is thus barred. On this ground the judgment must be affirmed.

[1] Taking the view of the evidence most favorable to plaintiffs, as we must in passing on a motion for a nonsuit, we see the following facts: Bayly Bros. was engaged in the business of broker, dealing in stocks and bonds and other securities. It kept records of the names, addresses and stock holdings of its customers, and following the custom of those engaged in the same business, in order to maintain the goodwill of its customers, it kept them advised of what was happening to their securities. Bayly Bros. had sold to a number of its customers shares of stock of Signal Oil & Gas Co. (hereinafter referred to as "Signal") and owned shares of the same stock on its own account. In 1932 dissatisfaction with the management of Signal arose among some of its stockholders, including Bayly Bros. and its customers, and another Signal stockholder named Ross McCollum and his friends. This culminated in the formation of a stockholders' protective committee, consisting of the defendant Harold Bayly, the plaintiff Bell and Ross McCollum. After negotiations between this committee and the management of Signal and after various proceedings, legal and otherwise, taken by the committee against that management, an offer was made by the latter to take over the stock of the dissatisfied Signal stockholders, amounting to 25,000 shares, in exchange for certain oil royalties. Thereupon a letter was drafted and presented for signing to the dissatisfied Signal stockholders which reads in material part as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, December 15, 1932. Messrs. Ross McCollum and Harold Bayly, Los Angeles, California. Dear Sirs: You have informed us that representatives of Signal Oil and Gas Company have made an offer to take over twenty-five thousand shares of its outstanding capital stock owned or controlled by you and the undersigned, and in consideration thereof to assign and transfer to you * * * [describing certain oil royalties]. You have accorded to the undersigned an opportunity to transfer the number of shares set opposite their names below along with your own shares, on the basis herein set forth, and we are desirous of taking advantage of that opportunity.

"We have therefore delivered to you certificates evidencing the number of shares set opposite our names, respectively, of stock of the Signal Oil and Gas Company, properly endorsed and witnessed for transfer, and we now authorize you to deliver the same to Signal Oil and Gas Company, or its nominee, when you have received assignments or conveyances of the royalty interests above mentioned vesting the title thereto in yourselves, and to be held by you as trustees for the benefit of the stockholders participating in the transaction on the basis herein set forth, as follows:

"The beneficial interests of the trust properties above referred to shall be deemed to be represented by and divided into thirty thousand (30,000) units, and of which five thousand (5,000) units shall belong to you as compensation for services rendered in connection with this transaction and in bringing it about. The remaining twenty-five thousand (25,000) interest shall belong to the stockholders whose stock is to be transferred as aforesaid in proportion to their interests, that is to say, one unit for each share of stock. You shall issue to each of us a declaration of trust showing our respective interests in the property.

"It is contemplated that the above mentioned royalty interests will ultimately be transferred to a corporation with outstanding capital stock not exceeding thirty thousand (30,000) shares, and when so transferred stock is to be issued in lieu of the beneficial interests above mentioned and in the same proportions. You are therefore hereby further authorized to take the necessary steps to vest the trust property in a corporation as above set forth, and in the event you deem it advisable to fix a par value of the stock of the corporation at a greater sum than one dollar per share, and thereby reduce the number of shares outstanding, you are authorized to do so, but always with the understanding that the stock shall be divided and issued upon the same pro rata basis as above set forth, and likewise, if it is deemed advisable that the stock of the corporation to take over the property shall be without par value, our stock interests shall be on the same basis.

"In the meantime, and so long as you hold the property in trust, you are authorized to manage and maintain the same, collect all proceeds, and distribute the same from time to time to the beneficiaries in proportion to their interests and you are authorized and empowered to do all things necessary and proper in the management and maintenance of the trust properties."

Signal stockholders holding 25,000 shares signed this letter. McCollum was one of them. Harold Bayly held no Signal stock personally. The Signal stock belonging to Bayly Bros. was held for it by two allied corporations, and Harold Bayly signed the letter for these two corporations, no other agent joining him.

At the time of the proceedings above mentioned Harold Bayly was a director and president of Bayly Bros., but was not actively engaged in its affairs, having other business which engaged his principal attention, and he received no salary from it. Both of the plaintiffs were employees of the corporation, but were not then stockholders in it. Both of them knew about the foregoing matters and obtained the signatures of some Signal stockholders to the letter of December 15, 1932, above quoted. The office and office force of Bayly Bros. were used in carrying on the business of the committee above mentioned.

McCollum and Bayly acted under the authority given them in this letter. The exact date at which they exchanged the Signal stock for the royalties does not appear, but it was some time before February 2, 1933. They then proceeded to organize a corporation, National Oil Company, and transferred the royalties to it some time in March, 1933. For some reason not appearing here, it was authorized to issue only 20,000 shares of stock instead of the 30,000 shares contemplated by the letter of December 15, 1932. These 20,000 shares were originally all issued to McCollum and Bayly in one certificate, in accordance with a permit of the Corporation Commission authorizing them to be so issued in exchange for the royalties. They were then apportioned among the various interested parties in the same proportions specified in the letter just mentioned, and the certificates for the shares due the former Signal stockholders were sent to them with a letter dated March 18, 1933, and sent out on or about that date.

For the 5,000 royalty interests which were to belong to McCollum and Bayly under the letter of December 15, 1932, only 3333⅓ shares of stock in the newly formed corporation were issued. By agreement between McCollum and Bayly these shares were equally divided between them. Plaintiffs claim that the 1666⅔ shares thus apportioned to Bayly in reality belong to the corporation for which they sue, and in this action they seek to recover them or their value for it. This claim is based on the contentions that Bayly, in negotiating the Signal settlement, was in reality acting for and on behalf of Bayly Bros. and that anything he obtained for doing so in reality belongs to the corporation, and further that as agent for the two corporations holding the Bayly Bros. Signal stock he could not lawfully execute the letter of December 15, 1932, because it undertook to transfer to him a part of their property, and that letter is therefore void as between him and Bayly Bros.

[2] The nature of the action brought by plaintiff is of some importance in determining whether the statute of limitations has run. The complaint is labeled as one "for conversion," and its allegations stamp it as such. Plaintiffs do not contend that the action is not one for conversion. The prayer of the complaint suggests an action for the specific recovery of personal property, but since the period of limitation is the same for that as for an action for conversion (Code of Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 3), we need not concern ourselves with any uncertainty in this respect. It does not purport to be an action in equity to declare and enforce a trust. It is an action in equity by reason of the fact that plaintiffs are suing as stockholders to enforce the rights of the corporation, under equitable rules (6A Cal.Jur. 805), but this does not affect the nature of the corporate right which is involved. Chetwood v. California Nat. Bank, 1896, 113 Cal. 414, 425, 45 P. 704.

It is plaintiffs' contention that the defendants committed no act of conversion before May 23, 1933. On that date 800 shares of National Oil Company stock were issued to the wife of defendant Harold Bayly and 800 shares to the mother of defendant Roy D. Bayly. These shares came directly from the original issue of 20,000 shares to McCollum and Harold Bayly. Later two certificates for 33 more shares each were issued to the same persons, from the same source. The complaint was filed on May 22, 1936; just one day within the period of limitation, if this contention is well founded.

[3] But upon the facts of this case the conversion, if any, occurred at an earlier date. If Harold Bayly was guilty of a breach of duty to Bayly Bros. in taking from the Signal stockholders compensation for his efforts in their behalf, and if the compensation so received by him belongs to Bayly Bros., that compensation, when received, was not the oil stock which plaintiffs are now pursuing, but a share in the oil royalties which were given by the Signal management in exchange for the Signal stock. That compensation, when received, came to him under the letter of December 15, 1932, above quoted. That letter did not provide, as appellants' argument assumes, that the entire oil royalties received by McCollum and Bayly were to be held by them in trust for the Signal stockholders or for anyone. On the contrary, it divided the royalties into 30,000 units and segregated these units into two parts, to be held and dealt with separately, thus: "five thousand (5,000) units shall belong to you [McCollum and Bayly] as compensation for services rendered;" and "the remaining twenty-five thousand (25,000) interest shall belong to the stockholders * * * one unit for each share of stock. You shall issue to each of us [the stockholders] a declaration of trust showing our respective interests in the property." (Emphasis ours.) This clearly provides that when the royalty interests were received one-sixth thereof should at once become the property of McCollum and Bayly. The provision for formation of a corporation to hold "the beneficial interests above mentioned" does not at all affect this part of the agreement. It authorizes, and perhaps requires, McCollum and Bayly to transfer their own royalty interests to the corporation, if formed, and take stock therefor, but it does not impose any limitation on their ownership. The provision that "so long as you hold the property in trust, you are authorized to manage and maintain the same" is limited to the property held in trust and the trust provided for covers only the interests of the Signal stockholders. If Bayly was required to turn over to Bayly Bros. any compensation acquired by him in this transaction, his taking and holding it under this letter of December 15, 1932, was plainly an act of dominion over it, and, if it was a subject of conversion, constituted a conversion, which occurred more than three years before suit was brought. Plaintiffs' action is therefore barred, if their action is properly one in conversion.

[4, 5] It may be questionable whether these oil royalties could be the subject of an action in conversion. Their exact nature does not appear, but they are obviously of some intangible nature and apparently personal property. Such an action lies for shares of stock in a corporation (Payne v. Elliot, 1880, 54 Cal. 339, 35 Am. Rep. 80), but not for every species of intangible personal property. Olschewski v. Hudson, 1927, 87 Cal.App. 282, 262 P. 43; Adkins v. Model Laundry Co., 1928, 92 Cal.App. 575, 583, 268 P. 939; Vuich v. Smith, 1934, 140 Cal.App. 453, 455, 35 P. 2d 365. But if not a conversion, the acts of defendants, in taking the royalties for themselves, on plaintiffs' theory of the rights of the corporation, constituted a breach of defendants' duty to it as officers and directors and amounted to a fraud, and the period of limitation for bringing an action for relief on that ground is fixed by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure at three years from the discovery of the fraud. Bainbridge v. Stoner, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 423, 430, 106 P.2d 423. Here no question of delayed discovery arises, for both plaintiffs, and, as far as appears, everyone else connected with Bayly Bros. knew of all defendants' acts at the time they were done.

[6, 7] If there were stockholders who had not such knowledge, the burden was on plaintiffs to allege and prove such fact.

Moreover, a party having knowledge of facts which would reasonably put him on inquiry, where the inquiry, if pursued, would have led to a discovery of the fraud of which he complains, will be charged with having discovered that fraud as of the time he would have discovered it if he had with reasonable diligence pursued the inquiry when he should have done so (Consolidated R. & P. Co. v. Scarborough, 1932, 216 Cal. 698, 704, 16 P.2d 268; Nighbert v. First Nat. Bk. of Bakersfield, 1938, 26 Cal. App.2d 624, 635, 79 P.2d 1105), and a motion for nonsuit is properly granted where the plaintiff fails to show that under this rule his discovery was within the period of limitation before his action was brought. See Haley v. Santa Fe Land Imp. Co., 1935, 5 Cal.App.2d 415, 425, 42 P.2d 1078. Here there was no secrecy or concealment about the execution or contents of the agreement between the Signal stockholders and Bayly and McCollum, set forth in the letter of December 15, 1932, but, upon the contrary, a widespread knowledge thereof. Plaintiffs have not alleged or proved anything to show that the corporation for which they sue or any of its stockholders, was not chargeable with knowledge of the agreement more than three years before this action was brought.

[8] Plaintiffs call attention to testimony that one of them discussed with Harold Bayly, before the letter of December 15, 1932, was signed, the provision therein that McCollum and Bayly were to have for themselves a share of the oil royalties, and objected to it, and that Bayly replied that Bayly Bros. was entitled to half of this "bonus," and contend that by reason thereof Bayly received this stock as trustee for Bayly Bros. and there was no repudiation of the trust until the stock transfers of May 23, 1933, already mentioned. The plaintiff who had this conversation with Bayly was not then a stockholder of Bayly Bros., although a director and vice president, and while he was its employee it does not appear that he was acting or authorized to act for it in the matter, or that Bayly was talking to him as representing Bayly Bros. In other words, this conversation cannot be regarded as one addressed to the corporation, and can have no more effect than any statement of his intentions which Bayly might have addressed to any other person. It was insufficient to make Bayly a trustee of an express trust.

Plaintiffs also invoke the rule that an agent may not deal with himself, and contend that because Harold Bayly signed the letter of December 15, 1932, for the corporations holding Bayly Bros. stock, the agreement contained in that letter is void as to Bayly Bros. This contention, if upheld, could result only in decreeing to Bayly Bros. such portion of the "bonus" as was derived from its Signal stock, whereas plaintiffs' claim is for all of it. But passing that point, it is not apparent why the matter referred to would affect or delay the running of the statute of limitations. Harold Bayly could have been sued for his breach of duty as soon as he obtained the royalties.

[9, 10] If on any view of the case Harold Bayly held in trust for Bayly Bros. the royalty share which, according to the letter of December 15, 1932, was to "belong" to him, such trust was not an express trust, for the letter clearly excludes any intention to create any such trust, or a resulting trust, for the same reason, but was an involuntary or constructive trust. Civil Code, §§ 2223, 2224; Lezinsky v. Mason Malt W. D. Co., 1921, 185 Cal. 240, 251, 252, 196 P. 884; Bainbridge v. Stoner, supra, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 423, 429, 106 P.2d 423. In case of such a trust where there is no concealment and the facts are known or should have been known to the claimant, the statute of limitations begins to run when the so-called trustee acquires the property in question in violation of his duty, no repudiation of the trust by the trustee being necessary for that purpose. Bainbridge v. Stoner, supra; Leviston v. Tonningsen, 1931, 212 Cal. 656, 664, 299 P. 724; Benoist v. Benoist, 1918, 178 Cal. 234, 237, 172 P. 1109.

[11] If Harold Bayly thus committed a breach of trust, by appropriating to his own use the royalties he acquired, and thereby started the running of the statute, its running is not suspended by the fact that he later exchanged that property for stock and refused or failed to deliver the stock to the corporation. Plaintiffs cannot evade the bar of the statute by skipping lightly over the first breach of duty and claiming to found their action on some subsequent conduct in line with it. If this could be done the process could be repeated every time one who converted property exchanged it for something else, and thus the operation of the statute of limitations could be entirely defeated.

The judgment is affirmed.

PECK v. MUNICIPAL COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 12187.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 6, 1942.

As Corrected July 28, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1

Whether an appeal is a plain, speedy and adequate remedy is to be determined on the circumstances of each case.

2. Prohibition 🔑3(3)

A petition for a writ of prohibition for relief from an ex parte order of the municipal court appointing a receiver in an action to dissolve a partnership would be denied where petitioner failed to show that his right of appeal to superior court was not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy.

Original proceedings in prohibition by Arthur K. Peck, petitioner, against the Municipal Court of the City and County of San Francisco and another, respondents, to restrain respondents from taking further proceedings under an order appointing a receiver in an action to dissolve a partnership. An alternative writ of prohibition was issued.

Petition denied, and alternative writ discharged.

Simeon E. Sheffey, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

James M. Thomas and Edmund J. Holl, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

[1, 2] An alternative writ of prohibition was issued to restrain further proceedings under an ex parte order appointing a receiver in an action to dissolve a partnership pending in the municipal court. The alternative writ was issued and heard upon the authority of A. G. Col Co. v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 604, 238 P. 926; Evans v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 563, 96 P.2d 107, and similar cases holding that prohibition was an appropriate remedy where the order was in excess of the court's jurisdiction, though a remedy by appeal was provided by statute. The question whether an appeal is "a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy" is one to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each case. The petitioner has failed to show that his right of appeal to the superior court is not such a remedy.

For these reasons, the petition is denied and the alternative writ is discharged.

Supreme Court of California.
July 11, 1942.

1. Elections 🔑121(1)

A political party may maintain an action in its own name in California courts.

2. Action 🔑6

Under statute, the court may refuse in its discretion to grant the relief sought in an action for a declaratory judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 1061.

3. Action 🔑6

Where it appeared from face of complaint in action for a declaratory judgment respecting constitutionality of statutes concerning elections that a speedy and adequate remedy was provided plaintiffs by the Elections Code, refusal to grant declaratory relief was not an abuse of discretion. St.1939, p. 159, § 2900; Code Civ.Proc. § 1061.

4. Mandamus 🔑12

Where plaintiffs sought in their petition for a writ of mandate to compel performance of future acts which, it was alleged, defendants would refuse to perform when performance became due, it was proper to sustain general demurrers to petition, since mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of future acts.

5. Elections 🔑7

The right of suffrage is guaranteed and secured by the constitution of California to all citizens who are within the requirements therein provided, and the individual citizen's constitutional right of suffrage includes the right to vote at all elections now or hereafter authorized by law, including the right to vote at primary elections. Const. art. 2, § 1.

6. Elections 🔑15

The right to vote is recognized as one of the highest privileges of the citizen, and any infringement by legislative power upon that right as granted by the constitution is idle legislation. Const. art. 2, § 1.

7. Elections 🔑21

In any election where the party system furnishes the means by which the citizen's right of suffrage is made effective, denial of his party's right to participate in the election accomplishes the "disfranchisement of voters" or compels them, if they vote, to vote for representatives of political parties other than that to which they belong, and the deprivation of the right of selection is a deprivation of the right of franchise.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Disfranchisement of Voters"

That certain offices may be made nonpartisan does not warrant conclusion that the party system is not a part of the citizen's constitutional right of suffrage. Const. art. 2, §§ 1, 2¾.

9. Elections 🔑21

Under constitutional provisions giving legislature power to determine conditions upon which electors and political parties may participate in primary elections, the legislature has power to exclude both individual citizens and political parties from participation in such elections upon certain conditions, but the power thereby conferred upon legislature is limited to prescribing reasonable tests and conditions for participation in elections. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

10. Elections 🔑21

The purpose of the constitutional amendment giving legislature power to determine conditions upon which electors and political parties may participate in primary elections is to give the legislature a free hand in dealing with the evils which were formerly prevalent in such elections, even to the extent of excluding parties and individuals from participation therein. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

11. Constitutional law 🔑48

In considering the validity of a provision in a statute respecting elections, the Supreme Court could not interfere with the provision if there was any theory upon which such provision could reasonably have been concluded by the legislature to be essential.

12. Elections 🔑21

The statute providing that no political party which uses as part of its party designation the word "Communist" shall be qualified to participate in any primary election is invalid as attempting to prescribe an unreasonable condition for participation by parties and individuals in primary elections, since there is no reasonable ground upon which such a restriction of the constitutional right of suffrage can be justified. St. 1940, 4th Ex.Sess., p. 362, § 2540.3; Const. art. 2, §§ 1, 2½; art. 20, § 11.

13. Evidence 🔑1

The doctrine of "judicial notice" was adopted as a judicial shortcut to avoid necessity for the formal introduction of evidence in certain cases where there is no real need for such evidence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Notice".

14. Evidence 🔑4

Before a court will take "judicial notice" of any fact, that fact must be a matter of common and general knowledge, well established and authoritatively settled, and the test is whether sufficient notoriety attaches to the fact to make it proper to assume its existence without proof.

15. Evidence 🔑4

If there is any possibility of dispute of a fact such fact cannot be judicially noticed.

16. Evidence 🔑4

The power of judicial notice is, as to matters claimed to be matters of general knowledge, one to be used with caution, and if there is any doubt, either as to the fact itself or as to its being a matter of common knowledge, evidence should be required.

17. Evidence 🔑5(2)

The Supreme Court would not take "judicial notice" of the alleged fact that the Communist Party advocates overthrow of the government of the United States by force and violence, especially where such fact was denied by plaintiffs.

18. Elections 🔑21

The statute providing that no political party which uses as any part of its party designation the word "Communist" shall be qualified to participate in primary elections cannot be sustained on theory that the statute contains an implied finding by the legislature that the Communist Party advocates forceful overthrow of the government. St. 1940, 4th Ex.Sess., p. 362, § 2540.3.

19. Constitutional law 🔑52

It is not the function of the legislature to determine whether a statute declaring a general policy has been violated in a particular case, that being a "judicial function".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Function".

20. Statutes 🔑77(1)

A statute which purports to determine that a particular person or group has violated a general law is a "special law" in nature and violates the constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from passing special laws in enumerated cases. Const. art. 4, § 25.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Law".

Statutes 🔑101(1)

The legislature may investigate elections and determine that the public interest requires that any party advocating the forceful overthrow of government shall be denied a place on the ballot at primary elections, and a finding of the legislature that the problem requires restrictive legislation is conclusive on courts, but the legislature cannot determine that a particular person or group has advocated the doctrine which violates the policy laid down by statute providing that no party which uses as part of its party designation the word "Communist" shall be qualified to participate in primary elections. St.1940, 4th Ex.Sess., p. 362, § 2540.3; Const. art. 2, §§ 1, 2½; art. 20, § 11.

22. Statutes 🔑101(1)

While it is within the legislative power to determine that, in the public interest, any political party advocating the forceful overthrow of the Government of the United States should be denied a place on the ballot at primary elections, it is not within the legislature's power to determine that the Communist Party advocates the forceful overthrow of the government. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

23. Statutes 🔑77(1)

A law is a "special law" and unconstitutional if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar disabilities in the exercise of a common right upon a single person or group arbitrarily selected. Const. art. 4, § 25.

24. Statutes 🔑101(1)

While the legislature may properly deny a place on the ballot at primary elections to any political party advocating the forceful overthrow of government, the legislature may not, constitutionally, determine that a specified party advocates the doctrine of forceful overthrow of government without violating the constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from passing local or special laws providing for conducting elections. Const. art. 2, § 2½; art. 4, § 25, subd. 11.

25. Elections ⚷21

In so far as the statute respecting primary elections prohibits the qualification of any political party which is directly or indirectly affiliated with the Communist Party, the Third Communist International or with any other foreign agency, political party, organization or government, the statute is invalid as prescribing unreasonable conditions for participation in primary elections and as "special legislation" in violation of constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from passing special laws providing for conducting elections, but the remainder of such statute is valid. St.1940, 4th Ex.Sess., p. 362, § 2540.4; Const. art. 2, § 2½; art. 4, § 25, subd. 11.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Legislation".

The legislature's power to prescribe tests and conditions for participation in primary elections includes the right to adopt tests designed to exclude those political parties advocating overthrow of the government by unlawful means or those parties carrying on a program of sabotage, force and violence, sedition or treason. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

27. Elections ⚷21

The legislature has power to establish tests for participation in a primary election based upon the number of votes cast for candidates of a particular political party in the last preceding election, but in adopting such a test of participation, it is the legislature's duty to preserve the integrity of the party system. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

28. Elections ⚷21

Any test prescribed by legislature for participation in primary elections based upon numerical data depends for its validity upon theory that legislature is seeking to exclude from participation in the election, thus infringing rights of suffrage, only insubstantial groups, the deprivation of whose rights can be justified by the larger good derived from a more efficient operation of the primary system. Const. art. 2, § 2½.

29. Elections ⚷21

The statute attempting to deny participation in primary elections to a political party unless it appears to the Secretary of State, as a result of information transmitted to him, 25 days prior to the last preceding primary election, that not less than 2,500 voters have declared their intention of affiliating with such party is invalid on ground that the statute is not a reasonable exercise of the legislature's power to establish tests and conditions for participation in primary elections. St.1941, p. 3036, § 2540.5; Const. art. 2, § 2½.

30. Elections ⚷88

Before the constitutional right to vote may be taken away from a citizen, he must be given an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf. Const. art. 2, § 1.

31. Elections ⚷21

The statute vesting in the Secretary of State, with advice and consent of the Attorney General, power to determine what political parties are qualified to participate in primary elections without provision for notice and hearing is invalid. St.1940, 4th Ex.Sess., p. 362, § 2540.9.

The right of any political party to participate in a primary election, if it is thought that provisions of statute attempting to deny participation in primary elections to any political party affiliated with the Communist Party might bar such participation, may be tested by a court proceeding brought under provisions of the Elections Code. Fourth Extra Session 1940, page 362, and Stats.1941, page 3036, which added sections 2540.3, 2540.4, 2540.5 and 2540.9 to the Elections Code. Plaintiffs are the Communist Party of the United States and three individual members thereof. The right of a political party to maintain an action in this state in its own name is no longer open to question. Independence League v. Taylor, 154 Cal. 179, 97 P. 303; see, also, Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 103 P. 181. Plaintiffs' amended complaint sets forth three causes of action: the first, an action for declaratory relief seeking to have it adjudged that these statutes are unconstitutional; the second, a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the named defendants to perform the statutory duties necessary to qualify the plaintiff Communist Party to participate in the primary election of August, 1942; and the third, an action under Elections Code, section 2900, St.1939, p. 159, alleging that an error or omission is about to occur in the conduct of a primary election and seeking an order directing the defendants to correct the error. The superior court of Los Angeles county sustained without leave to amend general demurrers which were interposed to each of the causes of action by the defendant Paul Peek, as secretary of state, the defendant Earl Warren, as attorney general, and the defendant William M. Kerr, as registrar of voters of the county of Los Angeles. Plaintiffs bring this appeal from a judgment thereafter entered for defendants. The defendant William M. Kerr has since died and his successor, Michael J. Donoghue, has been substituted as registrar of voters of Los Angeles county.

[2-4] We find no error in the trial court's ruling as to the first two causes of action. Under Code of Civil Procedure, section 1061, the court may refuse in its discretion to grant the relief sought in an action for a declaratory judgment. It appears from the face of the pleading that a speedy and adequate remedy for this purpose is provided by Elections Code, section 2900. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant declaratory relief. See Borchard, Declaratory Judgments (1941), p. 357, et seq. Neither can the court's order sustaining general demurrers to the petition for a writ of mandate be challenged successfully. Plaintiffs sought in their petition to compel the performance of future acts which, it was alleged, the defendants would refuse to perform when performance became due. Mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of future acts, and for that reason the general demurrers to the petition for the writ were properly sustained. McGinnis v. City of San Jose, 153 Cal. 711, 96 P. 367; McMullen v. Glenn-Colusa Irr. District, 17 Cal.App.2d 696, 62 P.2d 1083.

In their third cause of action, however, plaintiffs sought to set forth facts entitling them to relief under Elections Code, section 2900. That section provides: "Whenever it is made to appear by affidavit to the Supreme Court, district courts of appeal, or superior court of the proper county that an error or omission has occurred or is about to occur in the placing of any name on, or in the printing of, an official primary election ballot, or that any wrongful act has been or is about to be done by any person charged with any duty concerning the primary election, or that any neglect of duty has occurred or is about to occur, such court shall order the officer or person charged with such error, wrong or neglect forthwith to correct the error, desist from the wrongful act or perform the duty, or show cause why he should not do so. Any person who fails to obey the order of such court shall be cited to show cause why he is not in contempt of court." By affidavits of the individual plaintiffs Whitney, Yates and Perry it is alleged that an error or omission is about to occur in the placing of a name on an official primary ballot and that a wrongful act and neglect of duty is about to occur on the part of persons charged with a duty concerning a primary election. Defendants interposed general demurrers to this cause of action which were sustained by the trial court. Plaintiffs allege that the Communist Party and the individual plaintiffs will be denied the right to participate in the primary election of August, 1942, and that defendants have declared their intention to refuse to take any steps to qualify the Communist Party and its nominees for a place on the ballot at the primary election. This refusal, it is said, is made in reliance upon the provisions of Elections Code, sections 2540.3, 2540.4, 2540.5 and 2540.9. On appeal plaintiffs argue that these sections of the Elections Code are unconstitutional, and for that reason urge that the conduct of defendants will result in an error, omission or neglect of duty in connection with the primary election under the statutory provisions which are controlling. The question of the constitutionality of the challenged sections of the Elections Code is thus directly presented for consideration by this court.

The statutory provisions which are involved upon this appeal read as follows:

Elections Code, section 2540.3, added by Stats. Fourth Ex.Sess.1940, p. 362, § 1. "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this code, no party shall be recognized or qualified to participate in any primary election which uses or adopts as any part of its party designation the word 'communist' or any derivative of the word 'communist.' "

Elections Code, section 2540.4, added by Stats. Fourth Ex.Sess.1940, p. 362, § 2. "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this code, no party shall be recognized or qualified to participate in any primary election which is directly or indirectly affiliated, by any means whatsoever, with the Communist Party of the United States, the Third Communist International, or any other foreign agency, political party, organization or government or which either directly or indirectly carries on, advocates, teaches, justifies, aids, or abets the overthrow by any unlawful means of, or which directly or indirectly carries on, advocates, teaches, justifies, aids, or abets a program of sabotage, force and violence, sedition or treason against, the Government of the United States or of this State."

Elections Code, section 2540.5, added by Stats.1941, p. 3036. "Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 2540, no party shall be qualified to participate in any primary election unless it appears to the Secretary of State, as a result of examining and totaling the statements of registration of voters and their political affiliations transmitted to him by the county clerks 25 days prior to the last preceding primary election, that not less than 2,500 voters declared their intention of affiliating with that party."

Elections Code, section 2540.9, added by Stats. Fourth Ex.Sess.1940, p. 362, § 3. "The Secretary of State shall, with the advice and consent of the Attorney General, determine which parties are qualified to participate in any primary election. Such determination shall be subject to review by the courts in accordance with law."

The statutes challenged in this action constitute an attempted sweeping legislative revision of the provisions which for many years have governed the right of a political party to participate in primary elections in this state. Cf. Elections Code (1939), § 2540, Deering's Gen. Laws 1937, Act 2256, § 1, subd. 9, Stats.1913 p. 1379, § 1, subd. 9. Before entering upon the task of examining the constitutionality of this legislation, it would be well to set forth briefly certain of the fundamental principles which must guide our deliberations.

[5] First, the right of suffrage, everywhere recognized as one of the fundamental attributes of our form of government is guaranteed and secured by the Constitution of this state to all citizens who are within the requirements therein provided. Const. of Calif., art. II, § 1; Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 374, 52 P. 659, 41 L.R.A. 196; Britton v. Board of Election Com'rs, 129 Cal. 337, 340, 61 P. 1115, 51 L.R.A. 115; People v. Elkus, 59 Cal.App. 396, 398, 211 P. 34; Cohn v. Isensee, 45 Cal.App. 531, 538, 539, 188 P. 279. This constitutional right of the individual citizen includes the right to vote "at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law" (Const. of Calif., art. II, § 1), including the right to vote at primary elections. Spier v. Baker, supra, 120 Cal., page 375, 52 P. 659, 41 L.R.A. 196; Britton v. Board of Election Com'rs, supra, 129 Cal., page 341, 61 P. 1115, 51 L.R.A. 115.

[6] Second, although the Legislature's power to pass laws regulating the conduct of elections was conceded under Constitution, article XX, section 11 (cf. Bergevin v. Curtz, 127 Cal. 86, 88, 59 P. 312), the Legislature was wholly without power, prior to the adoption of article II, section 2½, in 1900, to exclude any citizen from participation in a primary election who was within the terms of the constitutional provision. Spier v. Baker, supra, 120 Cal., page 375, 52 P. 659, 41 L.R.A. 196. As the court said in the Spier case (page 375 of 120 Cal., page 661 of 52 P.), "* * * the legislature has no power to deprive any citizen of the state, who fills all the requirements demanded by the section of the constitution quoted, from voting at an election provided for by this act [a primary election law]. In this country, the right to vote is recognized as one of the highest privileges of the citizen. It is so recognized, not only by the citizen, but by the law; and any infringement by legislative power upon that right as granted by the constitution is idle legislation. If the legislature by this act has deprived citizens of the right to participate in the elections therein provided, who are qualified to participate under the constitution,—aye, even if the legislature has deprived one citizen so qualified of such right,—the act is void, as an attempted exercise of power it does not possess. As we have seen, section 11, art. 20, of the constitution, authorizes the legislature to pass laws in support of the privilege of free suffrage. This certainly does not mean the authorization of laws looking towards the curtailing and deprivation of free suffrage." In that case the court invalidated a legislative attempt to restrict the right to vote in a primary election to those voters registered at the prior general election, and held that the Legislature was without power to establish tests governing a citizen's right to vote in a primary election.

[7, 8] Third, the inability of the Legislature to infringe the citizen's constitutional right of suffrage prior to 1900 meant that, in any situation where the party system was an integral part of the elective machinery, the Legislature could not deny to a particular political party the right to participate in a given decision. Britton v. Board of Election Com'rs, supra; Eaton v. Brown, 96 Cal. 371, 373, 31 P. 250, 17 L.R.A. 697, 31 Am.St.Rep. 225. In any election where the party system furnishes the means by which the citizen's right of suffrage is made effective, denial of his party's right to participate in the election accomplishes, in the words of the court in the Britton case, "the disfranchisement of voters, or [compels] them, if they vote at all, to vote for representatives of political parties other than that to which they belong. The deprivation of the right of selection is a deprivation of the right of franchise." Britton v. Board of Election Com'rs, supra, 129 Cal., page 344, 61 P. page 1117, 51 L.R.A. 115; cf. People v. Election Com'rs, 221 Ill. 9, 18, 77 N.E. 321, 5 Ann.Cas. 562; State v. Phelps, 144 Wis. 1, 5, 33, 128 N.W. 1041, 35 L.R.A.,N.S., 353; see Starr "Legal Status of American Political Parties," (940) 34 Am.Pol. Science Rev. 439, 444. In some jurisdictions the basis for the citizen's right to exercise his franchise through political parties is also founded upon such fundamental doctrines as the constitutional right of assembly and the right of petition. See Starr, op. cit. supra, p. 444. Defendants argue that the fact that certain offices may be made non-partisan (Const. of Calif., art. II, § 2¾) indicates that the party system cannot be said to be a part of the citizen's constitutional right of suffrage. The obvious answer to this contention is that in a non-partisan election the party system is not an integral part of the elective machinery and the individual's right of suffrage is in no way impaired by the fact that he cannot exercise his right through a party organization.

[9-10] Fourth, since the adoption of article II, section 2½ of the Constitution of California in 1900, the Legislature has had power to exclude both individual citizens and political parties from participation in primary elections upon certain conditions. That section of the Constitution provides: "The Legislature shall have the power to enact laws * * * providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office * * * at elections to be known and designated as primary elections; also to determine the tests and conditions upon which electors, political parties, or organizations of electors may participate in any such primary election. * * *" (Italics added.) The purpose of this constitutional amendment was to give the Legislature a free hand in dealing with the evils which had formerly been prevalent in primary elections, even to the extent of excluding parties and individuals from participation therein. Schostag v. Cator, 151 Cal. 600, 605, 91 P. 502; Heney v. Jordan, 179 Cal. 24, 27, 175 P. 402. The power thus conferred upon the Legislature, however, to restrict the constitutional right of suffrage has not been construed to be unlimited in scope. In discussing this power the court said in Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, at page 792, 103 P. 181, at page 188, "The power is vested in the Legislature, under section 2½ of article 2, to determine the tests and conditions upon which participation in a primary election may be had, either by electors as voters thereat, or by electors as candidates thereunder. The right is thus conferred to prescribe any reasonable test, and it is the duty of the Legislature to prescribe one. * * * The obvious purpose of a primary law is to preserve the integrity of parties. The necessity for maintaining the integrity of such parties is recognized in the constitutional provision with reference to primary elections. * * * it is the duty of the Legislature, when legislating upon the subject of primaries, to so legislate as to maintain the integrity of parties, and the integrity of any political party * * *." Throughout the court's opinion in the Uhl case it is emphasized that the power of the Legislature to restrict the right of suffrage is limited to prescribing tests and conditions for participation in primary elections which are reasonable and not arbitrary. See Socialist Party v. Uhl, supra, 155 Cal., pages 785–787, 789–790, 792–794, 103 P. 181. In Schostag v. Cator, 151 Cal. 600, 91 P. 502, in which it was pointed out that the purpose of the constitutional amendment was to give the Legislature practically a free hand in dealing with primary elections, the court nevertheless emphasized that its power in restricting the right of suffrage was limited to setting up reasonable tests and conditions. See Schostag v. Cator, supra, 151 Cal., pages 603, 604, 91 P. 502; Katz v. Fitzgerald, 152 Cal. 433, 435, 436, 93 P. 112; Heney v. Jordan, 179 Cal. 24, 28, 175 P. 402. It follows, therefore, that the legislation challenged in this action is valid as a restriction upon the fundamental right of suffrage only if it comes within the limited power conferred upon the Legislature by California Constitution, article II, section 2½, to prescribe reasonable tests and conditions for participation by parties and individuals in primary elections.

[11, 12] In this section, Stats. Fourth Ex.Sess., 1940, p. 362, § 1, the Legislature provided that no party should be qualified to participate in any primary election "which uses or adopts as any part of its party designation the word 'communist' or any derivative of the word 'communist.'" In considering the validity of this legislation the court may not interfere "if there is any theory upon which the provision might reasonably have been concluded by the Legislature to be essential." Heney v. Jordan, supra, 179 Cal., page 27, 175 P. page 404. We can, however, find no reasonable ground upon which such a restriction of the constitutional right of suffrage can be justified. For the first time, in enacting conditions for participation in primary elections, the Legislature has departed from the tests of numerical strength and party registration which hitherto have been adopted as reasonable measures for improving the operation of the primary election as an instrument for expressing the desires of the individual voters. If we assume that the Legislature has power under the Constitution to deprive voters of their right of suffrage because of their political beliefs and assume, as argued by defendants, that the present statute proscribing any party designated by the word "communist" was designed to eliminate from the primary election those parties which advocated subversive doctrines, we cannot find that this statute has any reasonable relation to that purpose. The name adopted by a political party is frequently without any value in ascertaining the political beliefs of its adherents, and if the beliefs were pernicious, they would remain so despite a change in the name of the party. Reference to our own political history is sufficient to illustrate the utter impossibility of placing reliance upon the name currently used by a political party in so vital a matter as depriving it of a place on the primary ballot. Assuming for the moment, therefore, that the Legislature has power to deny the use of the primary election machinery to particular groups of dangerous citizens, it does not follow that it may do so by a statute which merely operates to deny to such groups the use of a particular name. Such legislation is particularly unfortunate when made the basis for restricting so fundamental a right as that of free suffrage. The statute has no reasonable relation to the goal at which the Legislature presumably aimed, and it must be held invalid as unreasonable.

[13-16] It is suggested that the Legislature might properly forbid the use of a particular name by political parties if some evil or unlawful connotation applies to that name. In apparent recognition of this theory defendants urge that this court can take judicial notice of the fact that the Communist Party advocates the overthrow of the government by force and violence. The doctrine of judicial notice was adopted as a judicial short-cut to avoid necessity for the formal introduction of evidence in certain cases where there is no real need for such evidence. Before a court will take judicial notice of any fact, however, that fact must be a matter of common and general knowledge, well established and authoritatively settled, not doubtful or uncertain. The test is whether sufficient notoriety attaches to the fact to make it proper to assume its existence without proof. See discussion 10 Cal.Jur. 693. As was pointed out in Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 344, 181 P. 223, 225, "if there were any possibility of dispute" the fact cannot be judicially noticed; and again (page 345 of 180 Cal., page 226 of 181 P.): "It is truly said that the power of judicial notice is, as to matters claimed to be matters of general knowledge, one to be used with caution. If there is any doubt whatever, either as to the fact itself or as to its being a matter of common knowledge, evidence should be required."

[17] Tested by these standards, the doctrine has no place in the present case. Not only do plaintiffs vigorously assert that the Communist Party does not advocate force and violence, but the decided cases have definitely demonstrated that the fact here alleged to exist is not the subject of judicial notice. In State v. Reeves, 5 Wash.2d 637, 106 P.2d 729, 130 A.L.R. 1465, the attorney general of Washington urged, as do defendants here, that the Communist Party should be kept off the ballot and that the courts could take judicial knowledge of the fact that the party advocated force and violence. The Supreme Court refused to take judicial notice of that fact for the reason that the litigants denied it. Furthermore, it was said, if the court in the election case were to make a judicial finding on the question it would be tantamount to holding all registered communists were guilty of violating the criminal syndicalism act in the absence of evidence on the question. The court pointed out that the cases relied upon by the attorney general in that case (as are most of the cases relied upon by defendants), dealt with the deportation of aliens, and were cases reviewing an administrative record which did not involve judicial notice at all. In Ex parte Fierstein, 41 F.2d 53, a similar contention was made before the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. There the court reversed an order of deportation which had been predicated on proof the alien was a communist. Judge Wilbur, speaking for a unanimous court, held that the court could not take judicial notice of the fact that the Communist Party advocates force and violence, and that the order could not stand in the absence of evidence of that fact. Referring to some of the cases relied upon by defendants in the present case, the court stated (page 54 of 41 F.2d): "While the character of this organization has frequently been considered by the court, and in some very recent cases, Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 47 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1095; Antolish v. Paul, [7 Cir.], 283 F. 957; Skeffington v. Katzeff, [1 Cir.], 277 F. 129; Ex parte Jurgans, D. C., 17 F.2d 507, the decisions in these cases are based upon the evidence adduced before the court with reference to the character of this organization, and the statements made in the opinions of the court with reference to that organization are based upon the testimony before the court, and in no instance has the court attempted to take judicial notice of the character of this organization."

None of the cases cited compel a contrary conclusion. Most, if not all, of the federal cases relied upon did not involve the question of judicial notice at all. They were cases involving reviews of determinations by the Department of Labor, which by law is vested with fact-finding power and whose determinations were predicated on evidence. These cases were so distinguished in the Reeves and Fierstein cases, supra. In the case of Ex parte Coon, 44 Cal.App.2d 531, page 543, 112 P.2d 767, at page 774, the appellate court did state: "It is a matter of common knowledge that the Communist Party comes within that category"—that is, within the group that advocates and practices the overthrow of government by subversive activities. The statement was not only dictum, but it had no reference to the doctrine of judicial knowledge which was not involved in the case. The same can be said of Field v. Hall, 201 Ark. 77, 143 S.W.2d 567. As was pointed out in the Reeves case, supra, to hold that this court will take judicial notice of the alleged fact that the Communist Party advocates force and violence, without any evidence of that fact, would not only require judicial notice of a fact which plaintiffs and their counsel vehemently deny, but it would also necessitate a finding that every registered communist is a felon and could be convicted of a violation of our criminal syndicalist law upon mere proof of membership in the Communist Party. That is not the law.

[18-20] Although not urged in the briefs, it was suggested at oral argument that the prohibition against use of the word "communist" may be sustained because the statute can be said to contain an implied finding by the Legislature that the Communist Party advocates the forceful overthrow of the government. It is said that this implied legislative finding, even though on a controversial issue, is binding on the courts. To state the contention is to refute it. Aside from the fact that it is not the function of the Legislature to determine whether a statute declaring a general policy has been violated in a particular case, that being a judicial function, it is clear that a statute which purports to determine that a particular person or group has violated a general law is special in nature, and violates article IV, section 25, subdivision 11, of the Constitution, which provides: "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases * * * Eleventh —Providing for conducting elections * * *."

[21-24] We have no doubt that it is within the Legislature's power to investigate elections and to determine that the public interest requires that any party advocating the forceful overthrow of government should be denied a place on the ballot. Neither have we any doubt that the finding of the Legislature that the problem requires restrictive legislation is conclusive on the courts. The Legislature, however, is without power to determine that a particular person or group has advocated the doctrine which violates the policy laid down in the statute. If the statute be interpreted to include the implied finding here in question, as contended by defendants, it would mean that the Legislature had determined that a special group had violated the general policy of the statute. Such legislation would clearly be unconstitutional. That this is so, can readily be demonstrated. For example, it is clearly within the power of the Legislature to determine as a fact that, in the public interest, all diseased cattle should be destroyed, but it is not within the legislative power to determine that John Smith's cattle are diseased. So, while it was clearly within the legislative power to determine that, in the public interest, any party advocating the forceful overthrow of the government of the United States should be denied a place on the ballot, it is not within the power of the Legislature to determine that the Communist Party advocates the doctrine in question. It is now too well settled to require extensive discussion that a law is special and unconstitutional if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar disabilities in the exercise of a common right upon a single person or group arbitrarily selected. City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604; Smith v. McDermott, 93 Cal. 421, 29 P. 34; Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 P. 500. It follows, that while the Legislature may properly deny a place on the ballot to any party advocating the forceful overthrow of the government, it may not, constitutionally, determine that a specified party advocates the doctrine in question without running afoul of the constitutional provision above quoted.

2. Act forbidding foreign affiliation or policy of violence. Elections Code, § 2540.4.

In this section of the Elections Code, added by Stats. Fourth Ex.Sess.1940, p. 362, sec. 2, the Legislature sought to deny participation in the primary elections to any political party affiliated with the Communist Party, the Third Communist International or any other foreign agency or political party. It also sought to deny participation to any party which advocates the overthrow of the government by unlawful means or carries on a program of sabotage or force and violence. The plaintiff Communist Party alleges that defendants, relying upon this statute, have declared their intention to refuse to take any steps to qualify the Communist Party or its nominees to appear on the primary ballot in August, 1942. While the allegations of the complaint do not indicate that the plaintiff party is subject to disqualification under each of the various clauses of this statute, we deem it necessary, in view of the fact that this cause must be remanded for further action by the trial court, to determine the constitutional issues raised by the statute as a whole for the guidance of the lower court.

[25] In so far as section 2540.4 prohibits the qualification of any party "which is directly or indirectly affiliated, by any means whatsoever, with the Communist Party of the United States [or with] the Third Communist International," it is subject to the defects already pointed out with reference to section 2540.3. It is special legislation and it attempts to bar political beliefs merely by reference to the particular name borne by groups at present thought to advocate objectionable doctrines. Such legislation has no rational basis. The change of a party name would satisfy the statute without altering the political doctrines at which the Legislature has aimed its restrictions. In this particular, therefore, section 2540.4 must also be held to have no reasonable relation to the purposes which the Legislature had in mind. The test is not a reasonable one and it is outside the power conferred upon the Legislature by article II, section 2½ of the Constitution. It is also invalid because it is special legislation.

The statute forbids the qualification of any party "which is directly or indirectly affiliated, by any means whatsoever, with * * * any other foreign agency, political party, organization or government." While we have no doubt that the Legislature might properly deny the right to participate in a primary election to any political party which has subordinated itself to the control and direction of a foreign government, the sweeping language of this prohibition we think places it beyond the bounds of reason in so far as the Legislature's power to prescribe tests for participation in primary elections is concerned. Such a prohibition would destroy the rights of suffrage of those members of any party which affiliated itself with a foreign organization however beneficial the purposes of such an organization or however far removed from the field of political action within this country. No attempt is made to limit the operation of this clause to those foreign agencies whose activities constitute a clear threat to the operation of our elective system, and we do not think that the Legislature's power to restrict the constitutional right of suffrage was intended to authorize the adoption of tests so far removed from the express purpose of improving the operation of the primary election system. This portion of the statute also must be held to exceed the power conferred upon the Legislature and to be invalid for that reason.

[26] There is no doubt, however, that the remainder of section 2540.4 comes within the Legislature's power to prescribe tests and conditions for participation in primary elections. This power certainly includes the right to adopt tests designed to exclude those political parties advocating the overthrow of the government by unlawful means or those parties carrying on a program of sabotage, force and violence, sedition or treason. Such groups constitute an immediate threat to the functioning of our institutions, including the continued exercise of the right of suffrage. Since it is within the power of the state as to such groups to restrict even the rights of free speech and free press (see, for example, Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 47 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1095; Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117, 73 A.L.R. 1484; De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364, 57 S.Ct. 255, 81 L.Ed. 278), it clearly was within the reasonable bounds of the Legislature's power to determine that these bodies should also be barred from the primary election ballot. Under such circumstances we have no doubt that the Legislature's power to exclude parties and individuals from participation in a primary election extends to those groups whose political beliefs create a clear danger to the continued existence of the institutions under which our constitutional form of government functions. Section 2540.4 of the Elections Code, omitting the invalid portions which are clearly severable, must be upheld as a proper condition for participation in primary elections in this state in the following form: "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this code, no party shall be recognized or qualified to participate in any primary election * * * which either directly or indirectly carries on, advocates, teaches, justifies, aids, or abets the overthrow by any unlawful means of, or which directly or indirectly carries on, advocates, teaches, justifies, aids, or abets a program of sabotage, force and violence, sedition or treason against, the Government of the United States or of this State."

3. Act requiring 2,500 registered members at the previous primary election. Elections Code, § 2540.5.

[27] In this statute, added by Stats. 1941, p. 3036, the Legislature sought to deny participation to political parties in any primary election "unless it appears to the Secretary of State, as a result of examining and totaling the statements of registration of voters and their political affiliations transmitted to him by the county clerks 25 days prior to the last preceding primary election, that not less than 2,500 voters declared their intention of affiliating with that party." (Italics added.) It is now well settled that the Legislature has power to establish tests for participation in a primary election based upon the number of votes cast for the candidates of a particular party in the last preceding election.

Katz v. Fitzgerald, supra. The present statute sets up a similar test of numerical strength, except that it provides an absolute requirement to be met by all parties rather than one of several alternative requirements any of which would qualify the party for participation. See Elections Code, § 2540(a), (b) and (c), St.1941, p. 1288.

In adopting such a test of participation it is the Legislature's duty to preserve the integrity of the party system (see Socialist Party v. Uhl, supra, 155 Cal. page 792, 103 P. 181), and tests based upon the numerical strength of the party are sustained upon the theory that the party system will function more effectively if the primary election machinery is denied to those political parties which are made up of exceedingly small bodies of citizens. See Katz v. Fitzgerald, supra, 152 Cal. page 436, 93 P. 112. So long as the tests for participation were stated alternatively, as in Elections Code, § 2540, it is clear that any substantial party could establish its right to participate in the primary election under some one of the various numerical tests therein provided. Thus, the party could qualify if it had cast for one of its candidates 3 per cent of the total vote at the last preceding gubernatorial election. Elections Code, § 2540(a). But failure to have cast this vote could not operate to deprive a substantial party of its present right to participate, however, since the party could also qualify by securing a petition signed by at least 10 per cent of the voters of the state at the last preceding gubernatorial election (§ 2540(c) or by establishing that at least 1 per cent of the entire voters of the state at the preceding gubernatorial election had declared their present intention to affiliate with that party. § 2540(b). The adoption of section 2540.5, however, as an absolute prerequisite to participation in a primary election introduces a new, and exceedingly stringent, element into the Legislature's requirements. Failure to meet the provisions of section 2540.5, in other words, cannot be obviated by compliance with any alternative test; and, in our opinion, this consideration is an important factor in determining the validity of this legislation.

[28] Any test based upon numerical data depends for its validity upon the theory that the Legislature is seeking to exclude from participation in the primary election (thus infringing rights of suffrage) only insubstantial groups the deprivation of whose rights can be justified by the larger good derived from a more efficient operation of the primary system. No one would contend that the Legislature has power under article II, section 2½, to adopt numerical tests which have the express purpose of ruling off the primary ballot those parties which clearly represent a large and substantial body of voters. If, therefore, the actual operation of section 2540.5 produces any such result, it cannot be held to be a test which is reasonably designed to accomplish the Legislature's purposes.

[29] The complaint in this case alleges that by virtue of the vote polled by the Communist Party for its candidates in the gubernatorial election of November, 1938, it was entitled to and did participate, in the primary election held in August, 1940. It is alleged that the plaintiff party has fully complied with the requirements imposed by Elections Code, § 2540, but that it did not have 2,500 registered voters who declared their intention to affiliate with the Communist Party 25 days prior to the primary election of August, 1940. It is apparent, therefore, that if the provisions of Elections Code, section 2540.5 are held valid, the Communist Party cannot qualify for participation in the primary election of August, 1942, despite its ability to meet the tests of numerical strength which have been applicable in this state for many years. It should be noted that, although Elections Code, §§ 2570 and 2571, St.1939, p. 122, require that data on the number of registered voters in each party be transmitted to the secretary of the state eighty days prior to each direct primary election and also twenty-five days prior thereto, the requirements for participation in section 2540.5 are measured by the information conveyed twenty-five days before the last preceding primary election, which ordinarily constitutes a period of two years. Since the provisions of section 2540.5 are made absolute, it is clear that no party, however substantial it might be, could participate in a primary election in this state unless it had 2,500 registered voters at a date two years prior to the time when it seeks to assert its right. In the case of a newly organized party the test imposes an absolute bar to participation in a primary election held after its organization because the right to participate is measured by events which transpired before it was in existence. Such a test cannot possibly avoid impairing constitutional rights of suffrage by barring from the ballot political parties which represent substantial numbers of citizens. Moreover, as already pointed out, the test applied must be reasonable. To adopt a test predicated upon the number of registered voters affiliated with a particular party two years in the past when information exists as to the present registration and where there is no alternative test, is to apply an arbitrary and unreasonable standard which does not tend to accomplish any proper legislative purpose. Section 2540.5 of the Elections Code, therefore, must be held to be invalid because it is not a reasonable exercise of the power possessed by the Legislature to establish tests and conditions for participation in primary elections.

4. Act conferring discretion to determine party doctrines. Elections Code, § 2540.9.

[30-32] This section of the statute, added by Stats.Fourth Ex.Sess.1940, p. 362, § 3, provides: "The Secretary of State shall, with the advice and consent of the Attorney General, determine which parties are qualified to participate in any primary election. Such determination shall be subject to review by the courts in accordance with law." In so far as this section applies to the numerical tests which are imposed upon any party seeking to participate in a primary election, it gives the same kind of power to the secretary of state which he already possesses under Elections Code, section 2540(b) and (c), where his duties are ministerial in nature. The power delegated under this section is applicable to the portions of section 2540.4 which we have held valid, however, and there different considerations are controlling. When construed in conjunction with Elections Code, § 2540.4, it is apparent that the effect of section 2540.9 is to vest in the secretary of state and the attorney general discretion to determine what political parties come within the prohibition of the statute as bodies which advocate the overthrow of the government or which are engaged in a program of force and violence. It has been held that before the constitutional right to vote may be taken away from a citizen, he must be given an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf. Pierce v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 759, 762, 37 P.2d 453, 460, 96 A.L.R. 1020; Ash v. Superior Court, 33 Cal.App. 800, 166 P. 841. We have held that where the party system is made an integral part of the elective machinery any attempt to bar a particular party from the ballot results in an infringement of the individual voter's right of suffrage. Supra. It follows that if the effect of the present statute is to restrict the constitutional right of suffrage and if such restrictions are made to depend upon an administrative determination as to the doctrines and beliefs of the political parties whose right to participate is challenged, an opportunity to be heard must be afforded those whose rights are subjected to attack. Elections Code, section 2540.9 vests in the secretary of state, with the advice and consent of the attorney general, the full power to determine what parties are qualified to participate in any primary election. No provision whatever is made for notice and hearing, nor is any time specified during which such a determination must be made. The provision that the determination "shall be subject to review by the courts" furnishes no protection to the political group which is disqualified if the disqualification is made immedately before the election, as is possible under the statute. Under such circumstances, if the determination as to a particular group were erroneous, the court's action could not repair the damage which would result from the temporary suspension of the party's right to participate in the election. It is our conclusion, therefore, that although the Legislature might properly bar from the primary ballot those parties which are described in the portions of section 2540.4 which we have held to be valid, the administrative provisions contained in section 2540.9 cannot be sustained as a proper means of ascertaining whether a particular party should be disqualified for its doctrines where fundamental rights of suffrage are involved. Cf. Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 451, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949. That section must therefore be held to be invalid. It does not follow, however, that the provisions of section 2540.4 are thus rendered ineffective. The right of any party to participate in a primary election, if it is thought that the provisions of that section might operate to bar such participation, can be tested by a court proceeding brought under the provisions of Elections Code, section 2900. This, in effect, is the result of the present action brought under that section.

For the reasons stated, the court erred in sustaining general demurrers to the complaint. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the trial court is directed to issue its order to show cause as provided in section 2900 of the Elections Code.

July 10, 1942.

1. Specific performance 🔑13

If vendor has no title or interest in the land that he contracts to convey, he will not be required specifically to perform as equity will not compel him to obtain title and a decree of specific performance would be of no avail.

2. Specific performance 🔑14

If vendor is the equitable owner of land which he contracts to convey and has the right to call for the legal title, specific performance will be decreed at the suit of his vendee.

3. Escrows 🔑8(1)

Where vendors agreed to convey real property to vendee and deposited deed thereto in escrow with the intention of passing title, the vendee became the "equitable owner" of the land and vendors held the legal title in trust for vendee as purchaser.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Equitable Owner".

4. Specific performance 🔑10(1)

Where vendor contracted to sell to purchaser property which vendor was purchasing from third parties and deed to which had been deposited in escrow with intention of passing title, vendor had an "equitable title" therein which he could be compelled to convey in purchaser's action for specific performance.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Equitable Title".

5. Specific performance 🔑10(1), 129

Vendor could not defend purchaser's action for specific performance on the ground that vendor's title was not as complete as the one he agreed to convey, since if vendor had any interest in the property the purchaser, at his option, may enforce the contract with respect to whatever interest vendor possesses, and may also receive compensation for deficiency in performance.

6. Specific performance 🔑6

The provisions in statute that "neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compellable specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation" is a codification of the rule of mutuality of remedy, which rule was not applicable where the unavailability of the remedy to the party against whom relief was sought resulted from his own default.

7. Specific performance 🔑106(1)

Where vendor contracted to convey property which she was purchasing from third parties, who had deposited deed in escrow with intention of passing title, purchaser's complaint in action for specific performance stated a cause of action against third parties even though they were not parties to the contract as they held legal title in trust for vendor, a conveyance of which title as well as vendor's equitable title could be compelled in same action, since equity avoids "circuity of action".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Circuity of Action".

8. Specific performance 🔑106(1)

In action for specific performance of contract for exchange of realty, complaint stated cause of action against a title company and a loan association where title company held proceeds of loan for benefit of party entitled thereto under contract and the loan association made the loan and held a trust deed on land involved, since their interests must be determined to give proper relief and to avoid "circuity of action".

9. Action 🔑38(2)

An action for specific performance of a contract for exchange of real estate and for damages for delay in performance was not uniting improperly a cause of action for specific performance and for breach of the agreement to convey real property as the repudiation of the contract gave rise to a single cause of action regardless of the remedies available.

10. Specific performance ⚿12

A written contract for the exchange of real estate was not made unenforceable because a supplementary oral agreement to make up in cash the amount of a loan deducted by the lender may be unenforceable. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 4.

Action by Curtis E. Miller and others against Mabelle M. Dyer and others for specific performance of a contract for exchange of real property and for damages occasioned by delay in performance. General and special demurrers to the complaint were sustained with leave to amend. From judgments of dismissal entered upon their refusal to amend, plaintiffs appeal.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

In this action for specific performance of a contract for the exchange of real property and for damages occasioned by delay in performance, the trial court sustained general and special demurrers to the second amended complaint with leave to amend. Plaintiffs have appealed from judgments of dismissal entered upon their refusal to amend.

The complaint sets forth the following allegations: Defendant Mabelle Dyer agreed by written contract to pay the plaintiffs $250, to convey to them certain real property that she owned, to negotiate a loan of $2,000 on a parcel of realty owned by defendants Hector and Elizabeth Dyer, and to transfer both the amount of the loan and the realty to plaintiffs in return for a conveyance to her of certain real property owned by one of the plaintiffs. The value of the latter property approximates that of the properties and the cash that she was to transfer to them. Mabelle Dyer at the same time entered into a written contract with Hector and Elizabeth Dyer whereby the latter agreed to convey to her their real property, and she agreed to pay for it by executing and delivering to them a $3,000 trust deed on the property that she was to receive from plaintiffs. Appropriate deeds were deposited in escrow including one executed and delivered by Hector and Elizabeth Dyer "with the intention of passing title" to their property to Mabelle Dyer. The escrow clerk, however, returned that deed to Hector Dyer for a clerical correction without the knowledge or consent of plaintiffs. Mabelle Dyer obtained a loan of $2,000 from the defendant Laguna Federal Savings and Loan Association secured by a trust deed on the property. The lender required, however, that $500 of the loan be deducted and retained to cover the cost of repairs it deemed necessary. Mabelle Dyer agreed orally with the plaintiffs to make up the deduction in cash. The balance of the loan was transmitted to the defendant Title Insurance & Guarantee Company to be held by it for the parties entitled thereto upon the completion of the entire transaction. Defendants Mabelle, Hector, and Elizabeth Dyer have repudiated the transaction. Hector and Elizabeth Dyer refuse to redeliver their deed in escrow and Mabelle Dyer has instructed the title company not to pay to plaintiffs the loan funds it has on hand. The title company and the loan association claim to have an interest in the property adverse to plaintiffs.

[1-4] In support of their general demurrers respondents contend that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against Mabelle Dyer since it shows that she has no title to the land she contracted to convey and that she cannot perform her agreement to borrow $2,000 on the property and pay that sum to plaintiffs. If the vendor has no title or interests in the land that he contracts to convey he will not be required specifically to perform. The decree would be of no avail for equity will not compel him to obtain title. Title Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Henry, 208 Cal. 185, 280 P. 959; Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 P. 689, 28 L.R.A.,N.S., 522. If, however, the vendor is the equitable owner and has the right to call for the legal title, specific performance will be decreed at the suit of his vendee. Farnum v. Clarke, 148 Cal. 610, 84 P. 166; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 P. 280, 25 Am.St.Rep. 123; Mc-

Donald v. Yungbluth, C.C., 46 F. 836; Miedema v. Wormhoudt, 288 Ill. 537, 123 N.E. 596; Cutler v. Lovinger, 212 Mich. 272, 180 N.W. 462. See, also, Pomeroy, Specific Performance of Contracts, 3d ed., p. 667. When Hector and Elizabeth Dyer agreed to convey their real property to Mabelle Dyer, and deposited the deed to such property in escrow, "with the intention of passing title," Mabelle Dyer became the equitable owner of the land and Hector and Elizabeth Dyer held the legal title in trust for her as purchaser. Keese v. Beardsley, 190 Cal. 465, 213 P. 500, 26 A.L.R. 1538; Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 P. 695; Gilbert v. Sleeper, 71 Cal. 290, 12 P. 172. Mabelle Dyer could convey that equitable interest or title (Rogers, etc., Co. v. Southern California, etc., Co., 159 Cal. 735, 115 P. 934, 35 L.R.A.,N.S., 543; Easton v. Montgomery, supra), and she can be compelled to do so in this action for specific performance.

[5, 6] Mabelle Dyer's inability to convey to plaintiffs complete title to the land that she contracted to purchase from Hector and Elizabeth Dyer, and her inability to transfer to plaintiffs the entire proceeds of the loan would prevent her from specifically enforcing her contract with plaintiffs since a vendor may not force a defective title on an unwilling purchaser or compel performance while conditions precedent to his recovery remain for him to perform. Civ.Code §§ 3394, 3392. See, also, 23 Cal. Jur. 474. She cannot, however, defend this action on the ground that her title is not so complete as the one she agreed to convey. If the vendor has any interest in the property that he has contracted to convey, the vendee, at his option, may enforce the contract with respect to whatever interest the vendor possesses, and may also receive compensation for the deficiency in performance. Smiddy v. Grafton, 163 Cal. 16, 124 P. 433, Ann.Cas.1913E 921; Farnum v. Clarke, supra; McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 299, 81 P. 958; Easton v. Montgomery, supra; Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 18 P. 394; Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611. See, also, Pomeroy, Specific Performance of Contracts, 3d Ed., p. 900. In Linehan v. Devincense, 170 Cal. 307, 149 P. 584, 586, the vendee failed to show an existing contract and his unexplained laches precluded any right to specific performance. The statement in the opinion that "as she [the vendor] could not have compelled specific performance of the contract, so specific performance may not be enforced against her * * * [citing Civ.Code § 3386]" was not necessary to the decision of the case, and is without support in the authorities. It is therefore disapproved by our decision herein. Section 3386 of the Civil Code, which states that "Neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compellable specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation * * *" codifies the rule of mutuality of remedy that was well established in equity jurisprudence at the time of the adoption of the code." See 23 Cal.Jur. 448. That rule was never considered applicable where the unavailability of the remedy to the party against whom relief was sought resulted from his own default. Smiddy v. Grafton, supra; Farnum v. Clarke, supra; McCowen v. Pew, supra; Easton v. Montgomery, supra; Swain v. Burnette, supra; Marshall v. Caldwell, supra; Armstrong v. Sacramento V. R. Co., 52 Cal.App. 110, 198 P. 217. See, also, 28 Calif.L.Rev. 503; 16 Calif.L.Rev. 541; Pomeroy, Specific Performance, 3d Ed., p. 903 (1926); 2 Story, Equity Jurisprudence, 4th Ed., p. 457 (1918).

[7] It is contended that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against Hector and Elizabeth Dyer since they were not parties to the contract that plaintiffs seek specifically to enforce. They hold the legal title of the land sought to be conveyed, however, as trustees for Mabelle Dyer. Since the latter may be compelled to convey her equitable interest in the land to plaintiffs and since equity avoids circuity of action, Hector and Elizabeth Dyer may be compelled to convey the legal title to them. McDonald v. Yungbluth, supra; Miedema v. Wormhoudt, supra; see 33 Harv.L.Rev. 822.

[8] It is also contended that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against the title company and the loan association. The title company holds the proceeds of the loan for the benefit of the party entitled thereto upon the completion of the transaction. The loan association made the loan, transmitted the proceeds to the title company, and received a trust deed on the land involved. The asserted adverse interests of both defendants in the property arise out of transactions with the principal defendant, Mabelle Dyer, concerning her contract with the plaintiffs. Those interests must be determined to give plaintiffs proper relief and to avoid circuity of action.

[9, 10] The special demurrer of defendants title company and loan association on the grounds of misjoinder of parties defendant and of improper uniting of several causes of action fails to specify wherein the alleged misjoinder exists. Healy v. Visalia & T. R. Co., 101 Cal. 585, 36 P. 125. The special demurrer of defendants Dyer on the ground that causes of action for specific performance and for breach of an agreement to convey real property have been united improperly fails to take into account that the repudiation of the contract gave rise to a single cause of action regardless of the remedies available to plaintiffs. Abbott v. 76 Land & Water Co., 161 Cal. 42, 118 P. 425; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 108 Cal. 549, 41 P. 495, 29 L.R.A. 839. The contention that the alleged cause of action is barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1624 of the Civil Code because a part of the alleged agreement for the exchange of real property was not in writing is untenable. The fact that Mabelle Dyer's supplementary oral agreement to make up in cash the amount of the loan deducted by the lender may be unenforceable does not prevent enforcement of the written contract. See cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 925.

The judgments are reversed.

WILKERSON v. SEIB et al.

L.A. 17975.

Supreme Court of California.

July 15, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑917(1)

On appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining general and special demurrers to amended complaint without leave to amend, allegations of complaint were required to be regarded as true.

2. Deeds 🔑61

A grantor's irrevocable delivery of a deed to a third person, with instructions that it be given to the grantee on the grantor's death, has the effect of vesting title to the property immediately in the grantee, qualified only by a life tenancy in the grantor, and the depositary thereby becomes the "trustee" of the deed for the grantee.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trustee."

3. Deeds 🔑61

Grantor's absolute and unconditional delivery of deed to third person, with instructions to hold the deed without recording and to deliver it on the grantor's death to the grantee, had the effect of vesting title to the realty immediately in the grantee, qualified only by a life estate in the grantor, and on the grantor's death, the grantee was entitled to receive the deed from the third person, and when the third person failed to make delivery as instructed, the third person continued to hold the deed in trust for the grantee, and the grantor's administratrix received the realty subject to the same trust, though the administratrix had no knowledge of the trust.

4. Money received 🔑17(1)
Trusts 🔑371(1)

In action to establish a trust and for money had and received, plaintiff's allegations that one defendant, as administratrix with will annexed, delivered to other defendants a portion of aggregate amount received by administratrix as trustee, without consideration paid by the other defendants and without change of position in any respect on the part of the other defendants, negatived receipt of any part of the trust funds by the other defendants as innocent third persons and for value, and overcame any presumption that such money was disbursed pursuant to court orders made concerning administration of testatrix' estate, either in extinguishment of a just and legally established claim or of rights under will.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑102(1)

Cause of action to establish a trust and for money had and received, was not barred by limitations, regardless of whether the facts alleged constituted a voluntary or involuntary trust insofar as defendants were concerned, where plaintiff made demand for payment of the trust funds on defendants four days after discovering the existence of the trust, and filed his action a few weeks after defendants' refusal to comply with the demand.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑103(2)

The statute of limitations does not begin to run in case of a voluntary trust until defendant repudiates the trust or at least until owner of property has knowledge of trustee's intention to repudiate the trust.

7. Limitation of actions 🔑103(2, 4)

In case of an involuntary trust, the statute of limitations begins to run, regardless of repudiation of the trust, from time when the wrongful or fraudulent acts are performed by the trustee, except that the statute is tolled as to the owner of the property until he actually acquires knowledge of the wrongful acts, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, until he is charged with such notice.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑315(6)

Action to establish a trust and for money had and received from rentals and sale of realty which testatrix had conveyed to plaintiff by deed which testatrix had delivered to a third person with instructions to deliver deed to plaintiff on testatrix' death, was not a "collateral attack" on probate court's final decree of distribution of testatrix' estate, where the theory of the action was based on alleged fiduciary relationship existing between plaintiff and defendant by reason of defendant's coming into possession of the money, and no redress was sought against defendant in her representative capacity as administratrix with will annexed.

9. Trusts 🔑363

Probate court had no power to try question of ownership of money received by administratrix with will annexed from rentals and sale of realty which testatrix had conveyed to a grantee by deed which testatrix had delivered to a third person with instructions to deliver the deed to the grantee on testatrix' death.

10. Courts 🔑200½

The Superior Court, sitting in probate, is without jurisdiction to try the question of title to property as between a representative of the estate and strangers to the estate.

11. Parties 🔑92(3)

In action to establish a trust and for money had and received, complaint alleging that testatrix executed a deed naming plaintiff as grantee and irrevocably delivered it to a third person with instructions to deliver it on testatrix' death to the plaintiff, and that after testatrix' death a defendant, who was administratrix with will annexed of testatrix' estate, collected income from the realty in question and also sold the realty, and from the proceeds gave to other defendants a certain sum without consideration, was not demurrable on ground of misjoinder of parties defendant.

12. Pleading 🔑193(6)

Complaint was not demurrable on ground that several causes of action were improperly united and were not separately stated, where each count was complete within itself, and arose out of the same transaction, since a cause of action arising out of the same transaction may be separately stated in different ways, even though inconsistent with each other.

13. Pleading 🔑193(1)

The fact that second count of complaint reciting that within two years last past, alleged indebtedness was incurred, was in part at variance with the time element entering into the plaintiff's statement of the first cause of action arising out of same transaction did not render the pleading demurrable.

14. Pleading 🔑225(1)

Though court was entitled to have a clarification of first cause of action which allegedly contained uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible portions, yet where complaint was not fatally defective in its statement of a cause of action, it was improper to sustain a special demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to meet the objections advanced so that the litigation might be decided upon its merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Herbert Wilkerson against Etta B. Seib and others to establish a trust and for money had and received. From a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining general and special demurrers to plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

Prior opinion, 119 P.2d 28.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Millard M. Mier and William C. Schaper in pro. per., Mier & Schaper, and E. L. Overholt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

The plaintiff, in an action to establish a trust and for money had and received, appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining general and special demurrers to the plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend.

[1] The complaint in question, the allegations of which must be regarded as true on this appeal from a judgment after demurrers, contains two counts. The basis of the plaintiff's claim is stated in the first cause of action substantially as follows: One Elizabeth J. Herbst, now deceased, owned a house and lot in Los Angeles. In January, 1931, she executed a deed of this property naming the plaintiff as grantee and irrevocably delivered it to one Mitchell, who as notary had taken her acknowledgment of it, with instructions to hold it without recording and to deliver it upon her death to the plaintiff. The plaintiff is alleged to have been "well acquainted" with Mrs. Herbst and to have "rendered and performed acts and deeds for her." Mrs. Herbst died in October, 1932, leaving a will nominating Mitchell as executor. The will was admitted to probate, Mitchell was appointed executor, and he acted as such until his death in August, 1936. Mitchell did not deliver the deed to the plaintiff but treated the property as part of the estate, collecting the sum of $1,632.29 as rentals and depositing this amount to the credit of the estate. In December, 1936, the defendant Seib, a niece of Mrs. Herbst, was appointed administratrix with the will annexed of the Herbst estate, and she continued to act as such until August, 1939. She took over the real property and the past revenue therefrom and collected current income amounting to $957.50 until her conveyance of the property to one Zillotto for a consideration of $2,400. She thus received from the property the total sum of $4,989.79, from which, it is alleged, she gave without consideration to the other defendants, Mier and Schaper, some unknown amount in excess of $2,000. The plaintiff's attorney in June, 1939, while going through Mitchell's papers relative to the Herbst estate, discovered the instrument executed in 1931. He immediately communicated with the plaintiff, who, on calling at the attorney's office on July 29, 1939, learned for the first time of the execution and delivery of this deed. On August 2, 1939, the plaintiff made demand upon the defendants for the money derived from the property subject of the 1931 conveyance. The plaintiff proceeds upon the theory that the property had been held by Mitchell in trust for the plaintiff, that the defendants in like manner now hold the receipts from the property—the aggregate sum of $4,989.79—and that they have refused to comply with his demand therefor. The second cause of action is merely a common count for money had and received, in the same amount.

This action was commenced in September, 1939. The complaint here in question was attacked by demurrers upon the following grounds: (1) failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) bar of the statute of limitations; (3) lack of jurisdiction of the court over the subject of the action; (4) misjoinder of parties defendant; (5) improper joinder of several causes of action; and (6) features of uncertainty, unintelligibility and ambiguity as to the statement of the first cause of action. The order of the court sustaining the demurrers was general in its terms. Accordingly, the defendants contend that if the demurrers were well taken as to any of the grounds urged therein, the judgment based on the court's order must be affirmed. Haddad v. McDowell, 213 Cal. 690, 691, 3 P.2d 550; Feldesman v. McGovern, 44 Cal.App.2d 566, 568, 112 P.2d 645. However, this principle is unavailing to the demurrants here in view of the following considerations determinative of the impropriety of the trial court's ruling.

[2, 3] The precise basis of the plaintiff's claim nullifies the force of the defendants' first objection challenging the sufficiency of the statement of facts in the complaint in question. By his first cause of action the plaintiff traced the real property and the earlier proceeds therefrom into the hands of the defendant Seib at a time when she was acting in her representative capacity as administratrix with the will annexed of the Herbst estate, but alleged that she received the property and income as trustee for the plaintiff and not as administratrix. This averment is in accord with the rule established by a long line of decisions in this state headed by the pioneer case of Bury v.

Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 P. 338, 35 Am.St. Rep. 186, that the grantor's irrevocable delivery of a deed to a third person, with instructions that it be given to the grantee upon the grantor's death, has the effect of vesting the title to the property immediately in the grantee, qualified only by a life tenancy in the grantor, and the depositary thereby becomes the trustee of the deed for the grantee. See, also, Moore v. Trott, 156 Cal. 353, 104 P. 578, 134 Am.St.Rep. 131; Husheon v. Kelley, 162 Cal. 656, 124 P. 231; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann.Cas.1916E, 703, and Hunt v. Wicht, 174 Cal. 205, 162 P. 639, L.R.A.1917C, 961. Commensurate with this principle, when Mrs. Herbst in 1931 made an absolute and unconditional delivery of the deed to Mitchell, title to the property involved passed at once to the plaintiff, the grantee, subject to a life estate in the grantor. Upon the death of Mrs. Herbst in 1932 the plaintiff, as owner in fee of the property, was entitled to receive the deed from Mitchell. When Mitchell failed to make delivery as instructed, he continued to hold the deed in trust for the plaintiff, and the defendant Seib received the property subject to the same trust. The fact that she had no knowledge of the trust could not destroy the plaintiff's rights under it.

In so replying upon the immediate passage of title under this deed to sustain his claim to the moneys accruing from the use of the property and its sale, the plaintiff does not dispute the doctrine of Green v. Skinner, 185 Cal. 435, 197 P. 60, holding that acceptance by the grantee is a condition precedent to the passage of title and his assent will be presumed and given retroactive effect only if the rights of third parties have not intervened. The plaintiff concedes that since the deed of 1931 was not recorded, the position of Zillotto, the innocent purchaser of the real property, cannot be attacked, and in this connection he merely seeks the proceeds from the sale, which, with the rentals previously collected, the defendant Seib continued to hold subject to the trust.

[4] According to the plaintiff's allegations, the defendant Seib delivered to the defendants Mier and Schaper a portion of the aggregate amount received by her as trustee, which transfer was without consideration and involved no change of position in any respect upon their part. This direct pleading of the defendants' status in relation to the plaintiff's claim negatives their receipt of any part of the total sum of $4,989.39 here in controversy as innocent third persons and for value, and overcomes any presumption that such money was disbursed pursuant to orders of court made concerning the administration of the Herbst estate, either in extinguishment of a just and legally established claim or of rights under the will. In consequence of these averments, it would appear that the defendants are holding the entire proceeds derived from the management and disposition of the property since the death of the grantor in 1932 for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, and the fact that there is no allegation that the defendant Seib knowingly received the property subject to the trust is immaterial under the circumstances.

[5-7] Nor can it be said that the cause of action so stated by the plaintiff is barred by the statute of limitations, regardless of whether the facts alleged constitute a voluntary or involuntary trust in so far as the defendants are concerned. In either case the determinative factors here are the plaintiff's lack of knowledge of the existence of the deed until July 29, 1939, his demand made four days later upon the defendants for payment of the moneys derived from the use and sale of the property in question, and his filing of this action on September 8, 1939, a few weeks following their refusal to comply with his demand. The principles conclusive of this point in favor of the plaintiff are concisely stated in Truesdail v. Lewis, 45 Cal.App.2d 718, at page 723, 115 P.2d 218, at page 221: "The rule is well established that the statute of limitations does not begin to run in the case of a voluntary trust until the defendant repudiates the trust or at least until the owner of the property has knowledge of the trustee's intention to repudiate the trust. Leviston v. Tonningsen, 212 Cal. 656, 664, 299 P. 724; 25 Cal. Jur. 271, sec. 133. In the case of an involuntary trust the statute of limitations begins to run, regardless of repudiation thereof, from the time when the wrongful or fraudulent acts are performed by the trustee, except that the statute is tolled as to the owner of the property until he actually acquires knowledge of the wrongful acts, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, until he is charged with such notice. Neilsen v. Neilsen, 216 Cal. 150, 13 P.2d 715; 25 Cal. Jur. 274, sec. 135." Consistent with this settled law, the circumstances referable to the plaintiff's discovery of the conveyance and his prompt assertion of his rights thereunder demonstrate beyond dispute that the statute of limitations will not preclude his prosecution of the present action.

[8-10] Likewise without merit is the ground of demurrer based upon the premise that the court sitting in equity is without power to determine the present case, but that such matter is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the probate court. In this connection the defendants urge that all issues relative to the ownership of the moneys now claimed by the plaintiff were conclusively adjudicated in favor of the Herbst estate pursuant to the probate court's decree of distribution of these proceeds, and that such final order is valid on its face and therefore not subject to this collateral attack by the plaintiff. This argument disregards entirely the theory of the plaintiff's action based fundamentally on an alleged fiduciary relationship existing between the plaintiff and the defendant Seib by reason of her coming into possession of certain trust moneys. The plaintiff does not seek redress against the defendant Seib in her representative capacity, and the complaint in question contains no reference to the probate proceedings incidental to the closing of the Herbst estate. Therefore, the defendants' claim that the plaintiff's action constitutes a collateral attack on a final decree of distribution transcends the scope of the record presented on this appeal. Furthermore, it should be noted that under the circumstances here detailed the probate court in no event would have the power to try the question of the ownership of the moneys averred to be the subject of trust. The well-defined limits of that forum's jurisdiction in this regard are stated in Re Estate of Vucinich, 3 Cal.2d 235, at page 243, 44 P.2d 567, at page 570: "The superior court sitting in probate has jurisdiction to determine as against an executor the amount of money or property of the estate that has come into his hands, for the purpose of charging him therewith, and in determining that question to determine all issues necessarily incidental thereto. The power to determine as against the executor what money or other property belonging to the estate has come into his hands is implied in the power to settle his accounts and determine what remains in his hands to be distributed. [In re] Estate of Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734; Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512. This power, however, is limited, in cases where title thereto is in controversy, to those where the executor or other personal representative claims the property in his individual capacity. In re Estate of Kelpsch, 203 Cal. 613, 265 P. 214; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820; In re Estate of Roach, 208 Cal. 394, 281 P. 607. It is undoubtedly the rule that the superior court sitting in probate is without jurisdiction to try the question of title to property as between a representative of the estate and strangers to the estate. Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 P. 118; [In re] Estate of Haas, 97 Cal. 232, 31 P. 893, 32 P. 327." From this summarization of the rules affecting the power of the probate court to determine what money or property, title to which is disputed, belongs to the estate, it is manifest that the plaintiff's status as a stranger to the Herbst estate is decisive of that forum's lack of jurisdiction in the matter.

[11] The remaining grounds of demurrer presented for consideration on this appeal require but brief discussion. The specification of misjoinder of parties defendant is clearly refuted by the allegations of the complaint in question detailing the plaintiff's theory of the individual liability of the defendants by reason of their receipt of the proceeds of trust property without having given consideration therefor and without change of position on their part. Where under the facts as stated the defendants appear to be responsible for the satisfaction of the claim in litigation, the objection that they are not proper parties is of no avail on demurrer. 20 Cal.Jur. 571, § 54.

[12, 13] There is nothing in the point that several causes of action are improperly united and are not separately stated. Each count is complete within itself, and there is "no reason why a cause of action arising out of the same transaction may not be separately stated in different ways, even though they are inconsistent with each other. The defendant is permitted to plead inconsistent defenses [Code Civ.Proc. § 441]; and there can be no good reason why the same rule should not apply to different counts of a complaint as well as to the answer." Stockton Combined Harvester, etc., Works v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 171, 53 P. 565, 566. As was said in Cowan v. Abbott, 92 Cal. 100, at page 102, 28 P. 213: "Theoretically, they are distinct causes of action, and there is no requirement that they shall correspond or be consistent with each other." In the case of Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, at page 273, 159 P. 709, 711, the court stated that inconsistent counts could be used "when for any reason the pleader thinks it desirable so to do." Accordingly, the fact that the second or common count, reciting that "within two years last past" the alleged indebtedness was incurred, is in part at variance with the time element entering into the plaintiff's statement of the first cause of action does not render the pleading in question demurrable.

[14] Various portions of the first cause of action are cited by the defendants as uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible, and it is urged that these faults concern material matters and therefore constitute a sufficient basis to support the court's adverse ruling to the plaintiff's claim. Although the court is entitled to have a clarification of the pleading in the particulars specified, yet where the complaint is not fatally defective in its statement of a cause of action, it is improper to sustain a special demurrer without leave to amend. In such case the plaintiff should be given the opportunity to meet the objections advanced in order that the litigation may be decided upon its merits. Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 579, 122 P.2d 564; Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 104, 114 P.2d 1; Payne v. Baehr, 153 Cal. 441, 447, 95 P. 895; Starr v. Slaney, 11 Cal.App.2d 311, 314, 53 P.2d 395; 21 Cal.Jur. 120, 121.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

THOMPSON v. COOK et al.

L.A. 17983.

Supreme Court of California.

July 15, 1942.

1. Judgment 🔑113

The statute providing that where defendant has not appeared, service of notice of papers need not be made upon him means that notice of papers need not be served on a defaulting party if his rights are not thereby affected. Code Civ.Proc. § 1014.

2. Judgment 🔑102

A defaulting defendant is entitled to be served by an amended complaint when the amendment is as to a matter of substance and not a mere matter of form, since a defendant is entitled to opportunity to be heard upon the allegations of a complaint on which judgment is sought against him.

3. Judgment 🔑868(2), 898(4)

After a default judgment has been entered against a defendant and satisfied by levy of execution upon property belonging to him or in which he has an interest, the satisfaction of judgment may not be vacated and the judgment revived without giving him notice of proceedings to restore the judgment. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 708, 1014.

4. Judgment 🔑868(2)

A motion to revive a judgment satisfied of record is not a "paper" within statute providing that service of notice of papers need not be made upon a defendant who has not appeared and hence where motion to revive a default judgment satisfied of record was made without notice to debtor, trial court was without jurisdiction to act thereon and order granting the motion was void. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 708, 1014.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Paper".

5. Judgment 🔑386(1, 3)

The trial court has no power to set aside on motion a judgment or order not void on its face unless the motion is made within a reasonable time not exceeding six months from date of entry of the judgment or order attacked except where the party in whose favor a judgment or order valid on its face runs admits facts or fails to dispute evidence showing its invalidity when the trial court must declare the judgment or order void. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 708.

6. Judgment 🔑868(1)

Where plaintiff did not deny judgment debtors' averment that no notice of plaintiff's motion to revive default judgment had been given judgment debtors or that neither debtor had appeared and plaintiff did not claim that debtors had appeared, but that debtors were not entitled to notice, trial court erred in refusing debtors' motion to set aside the prima facie valid order of revival notwithstanding lapse of more than two years between date thereof and date of debtors' motion. Code Civ.Proc §§ 473, 708, 1014.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action by Leonard B. Colton against Marie E. Cook and others on two notes wherein K. W. Thompson was substituted as plaintiff. From an order denying defendants' motion to vacate an order reviving a default judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Geo. W. Zent, of Hollywood, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

On February 13, 1936, Leonard B. Colton recovered a money judgment against the defendants in the sum of $4,012.29 by default. Upon this judgment an execution was issued and certain real property situated in the county of Glenn was sold under said execution to the said Leonard B. Colton for the full amount of said judgment, and said judgment was duly satisfied of record. Thereafter Leonard B. Colton moved the superior court to set aside the satisfaction of said judgment and to revive said judgment on the ground that the real property purchased by him at said execution sale was not subject to execution and sale, and that he recovered nothing in satisfaction of said judgment as a result of the sale of said real property under said execution. Said motion was granted on June 9, 1938. Thereafter and on March 17, 1941, defendants, after due notice to the plaintiff, moved the court to vacate and declare void said order of June 9, 1938. Said last named motion was made on the ground that said order of June 9, 1938, was made without notice to the said defendants, or either of them, and for that reason said order was void for "lack of notice and lack of jurisdiction of said defendants or either of them." This motion was denied by the trial court, and the present appeal is from this order of denial. At the date of the denial of said motion, the court made its order substituting as the plaintiff in said action K. W. Thompson in the place of the original plaintiff, Leonard B. Colton. Plaintiff as hereinafter mentioned refers either to the original or the substituted plaintiff.

The order granting plaintiff's motion to revive said judgment of date June 9, 1938, consists of a clerk's entry in the minutes of the court, which contains no recital of service of notice of the motion upon the defendants, and the record contains no proof of any service of any notice of said motion upon the defendants. The motion of defendants to vacate said order of June 9, 1938, reviving said judgment was supported by the affidavits of each of the defendants that no notice of the motion to revive said judgment was served on either of them. The plaintiff in resisting said motion made no denial of these allegations of defendants in their affidavits. The only fact set forth in the plaintiff's opposition affidavit which might in any way be considered material at the hearing of said motion was that the plaintiff on October 15, 1938, over four months after the motion to revive the judgment had been made, had sent by registered mail to the defendants a notice that the court by its order dated June 9, 1938, had reivived the original judgment in said action.

Respondent in his brief filed herein asserts that there are really two questions before the court on this appeal and they are stated as follows: (1) Under the facts of this case was the plaintiff required to give defendants notice of his motion to revive judgment after defendants had defaulted in the original action, never appearing therein in any way; and (2) if there was no service of process or of notice on defendants, were they entitled to have the said order of revival vacated on motion (respondent's emphasis) after nearly three years intervened between the time of making said order of revival and the date of defendants' motion to vacate the same? The appellants contend that there is only one question presented here for determination: Did the court at the time it made its order for revival of the judgment without notice to the defendants have jurisdiction to make said order? In our opinion a consideration of the two questions which respondent claims are before the court on this appeal will entirely answer this question of the appellants, and we will therefore confine our opinion to the discussion of the two questions propounded by the respondent.

[1] The motion to revive the judgment was made and granted by the court in pursuance of section 708 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides, among other matters, that "the court having jurisdiction thereof [the action in which the original judgment was rendered] must, after notice and on motion of such party in interest [the party recovering the judgment], or his attorney, revive the original judgment in the name of the petitioner." The position of the respondent is that while this section applies generally to ordinary judgments, this section is not controlling in a case wherein the original judgment is by default. He relies upon section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "where a defendant has not appeared, service of notice of papers need not be made upon him." The only authority cited by respondent in support of his position is the case of Strong v. Shatto, 201 Cal. 555, 258 P. 71. In that action this court held that where a cross-complaint filed by one of the defendants sought only remedies related to the property of the plaintiff, and did not affect in any degree the rights and interests of the other defendants, the defendants who had defaulted in the action prior to the filing of the cross-complaint were not injuriously affected by it or the judgment in favor of the cross-complainant; and they were neither entitled to be served with such cross-complaint nor were they entitled to appeal from the judgment for the reason that they were not "aggrieved thereby." It cannot with any reason be contended that the appellants in this case were not aggrieved by the order reviving the judgment against them and vacating the satisfaction thereof. Before the order of revival there was nothing of record to show that they owed anything on the judgment; after its revival, if legally secured, the record in the case showed that they owed the entire amount of the judgment. The meaning of section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure as construed by the case of Strong v. Shatto, supra, appears to be that "notice of papers" need not be served on a defaulting party if his rights are not thereby affected.

[2] It has been repeatedly held that a defaulting defendant is entitled to be served by an amended complaint when the amendment is as to a matter of substance and not a mere matter of form. Lubarsky v. Richardson, 218 Cal. 27, 31, 21 P.2d 557; 14 Cal.Jur. 889. In Cole v. Roebling Construction Co., 156 Cal. 443, at page 446, 105 P. 255, 257, a clear statement of the rule is found: "As we have seen, an amended complaint was filed subsequent to the entry of the default, which was never served upon appellant. It is earnestly urged that the effect of this was to open the default and make the judgment entered irregular, one inadvertently rendered, and one given without jurisdiction. It is settled by a long line of decisions that where, after the default of a defendant has been entered, a complaint is amended in matter of substance as distinguished from mere matter of form, the amendment opens the default, and unless the amended pleading be served on the defaulting defendant, no judgment can properly be entered on the default. See Thompson v. Johnson, 60 Cal. 292; Reinhart v. Lugo, 86 Cal. [395], 399, 24 P. 1089, 21 Am.St.Rep. 52; Witter v. Bachman, 117 Cal. [318], 319, 49 P. 202; Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. [283], 304, 51 P. 2, 542, 63 Am.St.Rep. 108; Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 452, 453, 51 P. 687; Riverside County v. Stockman, 124 Cal. [222], 224, 56 P. 1027; Tappendorff v. Moranda, 134 Cal. [419], 421, 66 P. 491. The reason for this rule is plain. A defendant is entitled to opportunity to be heard upon the allegations of the complaint on which judgment is sought against him."

[3] If a defaulting party is entitled to service upon him of all amended pleadings which affect his rights, and no judgment rendered without such service "can properly be entered on the default," we think upon the same principle that after a default judgment has been entered against a defendant and satisfied by a levy of execution upon property belonging to him or in which he has an interest, said satisfaction of the judgment may not be vacated and the judgment revived without giving him notice of the proceeding to restore said judgment.

[4] In the recent case of McDonald v. Severy, 6 Cal.2d 629, 59 P.2d 98, this court had before it the question as to the proper construction to be given the words "service of notice of papers," as used in section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was there said at page 631 of 6 Cal.2d, at page 99 of 59 P.2d: "Moreover, section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure (as amended by St.1933, p. 1851, § 34), providing for vacating judgments, expressly requires notice to the adverse party. It is true that section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure dispenses with the requirement of 'service of notice of papers' where a defendant has not appeared. But a motion to set aside a dismissal with prejudice cannot be considered a 'paper' within the meaning of that section." In like manner it cannot be said that a notice of motion to revive a judgment satisfied of record is a "paper" within the meaning of said section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As the motion to revive the judgment was made without notice to the defendants, the court was without jurisdiction to act thereon and the order granting said motion was void. McDonald v. Severy, supra; Hitchcock v. Caruthers, 100 Cal. 100, 104, 34 P. 627; Kittridge v. Stevens, 16 Cal. 381, 382; Gill v. Peppin, 41 Cal.App. 487, 491, 182 P. 815; 14 Cal.Jur. 938.

We now approach the second question propounded by the respondent, that is, whether a motion to set aside said void order will lie after the lapse of over two years from the date it was granted. For the purpose of this discussion we will assume that the order reviving the judgment was valid on its face.

[5] It is well settled in this state that a court has no power to set aside on motion a judgment or order not void on its face unless the motion is made within a reasonable time, and it has been definitely determined that such time will not extend beyond the limited time fixed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure as at present in force. Smith v. Jones, 174 Cal. 513, 516, 163 P. 890; People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 447, 453, 37 P. 414; Richert v. Benson Lumber Co., 139 Cal.App. 671, 675, 34 P.2d 840; Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co., 89 Cal.App. 759, 761, 265 P. 491. However, to the rule just stated there is a well established exception which provides that although the judgment or order is valid on its face, if the party in favor of whom the judgment or order runs admits facts showing its invalidity, or, without objection on his part, evidence is admitted which clearly shows the existence of such facts, then it is the duty of the court to declare the judgment or order void. While the question before the court in the case of Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co, 79 Cal. 188, 21 P. 728, was not in all respects like that which we are called upon to answer, yet the principle of law announced therein is equally applicable to the question before us. The court had under discussion the rule that a defendant cannot collaterally assail a judgment unless it be void on its face. While adhering to that rule, the court applied the exception just referred to and held at page 191 of 79 Cal., at page 728 of 21 P.: "But this rule is not that a judgment which is void will be enforced as if it were valid, but that it cannot be shown to be void except in certain ways. If the party, however, should admit the facts which show the judgment to be void, or if he should allow them to be established without opposition, then, as a question of law, upon such facts, we do not see why the case is not like that where a judgment is void upon its face. In the present case the findings establish the fact that there was no service of summons upon or authorized appearance by the defendant. And none of the evidence is brought up, nor does the question appear to have been raised by exception or demurrer, or in any other way. The facts, therefore, must be taken to be established by the record beyond all controversy. And upon such facts the law is, that the judgment is void. Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. [368] 371, 372, 4 P. 232; Merced Co. v. Hicks, 67 Cal. [108] 109, 7 P. 179. The judgment sued on, being shown to be absolutely void, cannot be held to be valid, or to be a cause of action."

This language from the case of Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., supra, was quoted with approval by this court in the case of People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 546, 40 P. 956, which held that although a judgment not void on its face cannot be impeached by evidence showing a want of service of summons if such evidence is objected to, yet where the evidence is admitted to that effect without objection, or the parties stipulate or admit that there was in fact no service of summons, it is the duty of the court to declare the judgment void as a matter of law upon the admitted facts. The same principle of law was referred to in the case of Lake v. Bonynge, 161 Cal. 120, at page 133, 118 P. 535, at page 540, where the court stated: "We may assume, purely for the purposes of this decision, that, while a party relying on a judgment which is valid on its face may successfully resist any attack upon it which is collateral and not direct, still where the attack might be resisted as collateral, if he admits facts which show that a service of summons, constructive or personal, was not made on the defendant to the judgment, and allows evidence to be introduced without objection showing this fact, as it is then established that the judgment is void, it is the duty of the court to so declare. Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 188, 21 P. 728; People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 P. 956."

In Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 639, 209 P. 576, the three cases cited above were approved in language practically the same as that used in Lake v. Bonynge, supra. See, also, La Paloma Land Co. v. Shannon, 89 Cal.App. 469, 476, 265 P. 295, and In re Estate of Ivory, 37 Cal.App. 2d 22, 29, 31, 98 P.2d 761. In this last cited case we find this apt language at page 29 of 37 Cal.App.2d, at page 765 of 98 P.2d: "In the present case, when the order of May 8, 1936, was entered it showed on its face that the probate court had jurisdiction. Subsequently, by stipulation, the parties agreed that the recitals in the order were false and had been secured by the extrinsic fraud of appellant. The legal effect of such stipulation was to add to the judgment roll of that order the true facts. As so corrected, the legal situation is the same as if the order of May 8, 1936, when entered disclosed that there was a known heir whose address was known and that such heir had not been notified. By reason of the stipulation, the order of May 8, 1936, must be read as if it named the wife and mother as known heirs, and as if it recited that the mother had intentionally not been notified. If the order had so recited it would clearly be void on its face, and the probate court at any time, at least up to the time of the closing of the estate, would have power to set it aside."

[6] Applying to the facts in this case the rule announced and confirmed in the decisions just cited, we are of the opinion that although the order reviving the judgment was not void upon its face, nevertheless upon the showing made at the hearing of the motion to set aside said order, the court erred in refusing to grant said motion, notwithstanding the lapse of time intervening between the date of the order reviving said judgment and the motion of defendants to set aside and vacate said order. The facts supporting this conclusion beside those set forth above will be briefly stated. The order reviving said judgment, as stated before, was contained in a minute entry in the clerk's record and is as follows: "Motion of plaintiff to revive Judgment against Defendants, Marie E. and Charles R. Cook, comes on for hearing, H. L. Duckett, Jr., appearing as attorney for plaintiff; said motion is granted." Defendants, as recited above, moved to set aside said order on the ground that neither of the defendants was served with notice of said motion to revive said judgment and that neither of them ever appeared in said action, and for these reasons the court was without jurisdiction to grant said motion. In support of this motion each of the defendants filed an affidavit in which each stated that affiant was never served with notice of said motion to revive said judgment and did not appear at the hearing of said motion either personally or by attorney "or otherwise."

While the plaintiff in defense of said motion to vacate said order to revive said judgment opposed said motion and filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion, in which he alleged that some months after the granting of said motion he served by mail a notice to the defendants that the court had granted his motion to revive the judgment, he did not deny the averments of defendants in their affidavits that no notice of the motion to revive the judgment was ever given to defendants, or either of them, or that neither of said defendants appeared in court when said order of revival was made. At the hearing of said motion to vacate the order reviving the judgment, it is stated by appellants in their briefs, and not denied by respondent, that plaintiff made no objection to the affidavits of the defendants that no notice was given therein of the motion to revive said judgment; neither was any denial made of said allegations nor was any claim made that either of said defendants appeared at the hearing of said motion to revive said judgment. On the other hand, the plaintiff as a defense to defendants' motion claimed that under section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure defendants, having made default in said action, were not entitled to any notice of said motion to revive said judgment or of any other proceeding in said action taken subsequent to the entry of default against them.

This statement of facts, which is uncontroverted, brings this case squarely within the rule announced in the authorities hereinbefore cited, that when on a motion of the character of defendants' motion to vacate the order reviving the judgment, an affidavit is filed showing that no service at all was made on a moving defendant and no evidence is produced controverting this showing, and no objection or exception is taken to the introduction of such testimony, the fact is then established that the judgment is just as void as if its invalidity appeared on the face of the judgment. This precise situation was under discussion in the case of Smith v. Jones, supra, where the court at page 517 of its decision in 174 Cal., at page 891 of 163 P., made the following statement: "It is contended, however, by respondent that if by analogy the limitation of time specified in said section 473 be applied, yet the order made here may be sustained on another principle of law which he invokes. This is that when on a motion of this character an affidavit is filed showing that no service at all was made on a moving defendant, and no evidence is produced countervailing this showing, and no objection or exception is taken to the introduction of such testimony, the fact is then established without controversy and a simple question of law is thus presented, and such condition of undisputed facts establishes a judgment just as void as if its invalidity appears on the face of the judgment, and like such a judgment may be set aside at any time when the uncontroverted fact of the failure to serve process shows that the court was without jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment, citing Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 188, 21 P. 728; People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 P. 956." In that action, however, the court refused to follow the rule just stated for the reason that the facts before it did not bring that case within the requirements of said rule, as appears from the following excerpt from said decision immediately following the portion thereof quoted above: "But our examination of those cases shows a different condition from that presented here. Here the claim of respondent that no personal service was made on him does not stand uncontroverted. It appears from the judgment roll by the affidavit of King that defendant was personally served with process in the action, and the judgment so recites. It thus affirmatively appears from the judgment that the defendant was served. This fact he denies by his affidavit filed on the motion. But, certainly, there is thus presented a controverted fact of service and not an uncontradicted proof of nonservice, as claimed by respondent. Nor, is there anything to show that the hearing was without objection or exception on the part of plaintiff."

This last mentioned case makes a clear distinction between a factual situation wherein the rule announced in the authorities herein cited applies and a situation wherein the rule does not apply. As stated above, our conclusion is that the facts of this case clearly bring it within the terms of said rule.

Some suggestion is made in the briefs of counsel as to whether the plaintiff in his motion to revive the judgment in this action has brought himself within the terms of section 708 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitling him to the relief therein provided. This question is not before us in the present instance and cannot properly be determined until the defendants have had an opportunity to put in such defense as they may have to the motion of plaintiff to have said judgment revived.

It follows that the order denying the motion of the defendants to vacate the order of June 9, 1938, was erroneous and should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

MORENO v. CAIRNS et al.

L.A. 18222.

Supreme Court of California.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑218(11)

The section of Los Angeles city charter requiring any city employee claiming that he has been unlawfully suspended, laid off or discharged to file a written demand for reinstatement with Board of Civil Service Commissioners includes coerced resignations within group of involuntary severances. Los Angeles City Charter, § 112½.

A "resignation" is characteristically a voluntary surrender of a position by one resigning made freely and not under duress.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Resignation".

2. Municipal corporations ⚿198(5)

The resignation of assistant fire chief of city fire department, if voluntary, would preclude his subsequent reinstatement.

3. Municipal corporations ⚿198(5)

The resignation of assistant fire chief of city fire department, if coerced, was tantamount to an "unlawful discharge", within section of Los Angeles City Charter requiring any city employee claiming that he has been unlawfully suspended, laid off or discharged to file a written demand for reinstatement with Board of Civil Service Commissioners within 90 days following date of alleged unlawful discharge, and, hence, demand of assistant fire chief for reinstatement following severance from employment under such circumstances was required to meet conditions of such section. Los Angeles City Charter, § 112½.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Unlawful Discharge".

4. Municipal corporations ⚿198(5)

A discharge of city employee in violation of section of Los Angeles City Charter providing that no officer or employee of city fire department shall be suspended, removed, deprived of office or position, or otherwise separated from service of such department, other than by resignation, except for good and sufficient cause, would be an "unlawful discharge" under section of charter requiring employee claiming that he has been unlawfully suspended, laid off or discharged to file a written demand for reinstatement with Board of Civil Service Commissioners within 90 days following date of alleged unlawful discharge, and the 90-day period would run from date of such unlawful discharge. Los Angeles City Charter, §§ 112½, 135.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Proceeding by Manuel A. Moreno for a writ of mandate to compel James Cairns and others, constituting the Board of Fire Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, to reinstate petitioner as assistant fire chief of such city, restore his seniority rights and pay him back pay. From an adverse judgment, following an order sustaining a demurrer to petitioner's second amended petition without leave to amend, the petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 118 P.2d 357.

Joseph K. Coady and Arthur J. Mullen, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Geo. W. Adams and Marvin Chesebro, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Petitioner appeals from a judgment against him entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer, without leave to amend, to his second amended petition for writ of mandate to compel respondents, members of the Board of Fire Commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, to reinstate him to the position of assistant fire chief and to his seniority rights, and to pay the balance on back salary that he claimed due him. The second amended petition alleges that petitioners served in the fire department for forty-two years with an unblemished record, that he was adjudged in excellent health in the last health examination ordered by the board, and that he was summoned before the board and was forced under protest to resign. The circumstances attending this resignation are alleged to be as follows:

"VI. That your petitioner has not been unlawfully suspended, laid off, or discharged from his position as assistant chief of said Fire Department, but on the contrary, your petitioner under duress, misrepresentation, fraud and undue influence, in that he would be deprived of all pension rights, was forced against his will and desire, to resign from his position with said department; that on July 1, 1939, your petitioner, without any notice other than two hours, was summoned before the Board of Fire Commissioners; that at such time your petitioner was told that if he did not then and there, within two hours, resign from his position with the Fire Department, he would be summarily discharged, and that if he was so discharged he would suffer a complete loss of all pension rights; that because of the pressure of duress, misrepresentation, fraud, and undue influence of complete loss of all pension rights, your petitioner did resign under protest; that no just or reasonable cause existed that your petitioner should have been resigned, other than fear of loss of pension rights with which he was threatened; that no charges of any kind were ever preferred against him.

"VII. That at the time your petitioner was forced to retire, he was informed that four positions as assistant fire chief were to be eliminated, but the rules of seniority then in force and applicable to petitioner were not applied in the case of your petitioner.

"VIII. * * * That your petitioner was deprived of his position arbitrarily and summarily, in that the procedure required by section 135 of the City Charter was not followed, but by intimidations, duress and threat of loss of all pension rights, your petitioner, against his will and without advice of counsel, or allowance of time to secure such advice and counsel, was forced under protest to resign."

About a year after his resignation the petitioner filed a petition with the Board of Fire Commissioners for reinstatement to active service and for rehearing of "enforced retirement." The board demurred on the sole ground that the petition did not state a cause of action because the petitioner failed to file with the board, pursuant to section 112½ of the charter of the city of Los Angeles, a written demand for reinstatement within ninety days following the date on which it was claimed that he was first illegally, "laid off, suspended or discharged."

Section 112½ of the charter provides: "Whenever it is claimed by any person that he has been unlawfully suspended, laid off, or discharged, and that such lay off, suspension or discharge is ineffective for any reason, any claim for compensation must be made and demand for reinstatement must be presented in writing within ninety days following the date on which it is claimed that such person was first illegally, wrongfully or invalidly laid off, suspended, or discharged. Such demand for reinstatement must be filed with the board of civil service commissioners and such claim for compensation for such allegedly wrongful, illegal or erroneous discharge must be filed with the city clerk. Failure to file such demand for reinstatement within the time herein specified shall be a bar to any action to compel such reinstatement and proof of filing such a demand for reinstatement must be completed and proved a condition precedent to the maintenance of any action for reinstatement. Proof of filing the claim for compensation within the time and in the manner herein specified shall be a condition precedent to any recovery of wages or salary claimed to be due on account of said lay off, suspension or discharge."

[1] The petitioner contends that since his separation from the department was effected by resignation under duress, and not by unlawful suspension, lay off, or discharge, he was not required to present a written demand before filing his petition for a writ of mandate. This contention overlooks the fact that a resignation is characteristically the voluntary surrender of a position by the one resigning made freely and not under duress. People v. Marsh, 30 Cal.App. 424, 159 P. 191; State ex rel. Young v. Ladeen, 104 Minn. 252, 116 N.W. 486, 16 L.R.A.,N.S., 1058. The absence of any reference in section 112½ to resignations is attributable to the fact that they would ordinarily be voluntary and not succeeded by demands for reinstatement, not to an intention to exclude from the limitations of that section demands that follow resignations made under duress. Such resignations are akin to lay offs, suspensions, or discharges by virtue of the element of coercion and bear only a formal resemblance to voluntary resignations. Whenever a person is severed from his employment by coercion the severance is effected not by his own will but by the will of a superior. A person who is forced to resign is thus in the position of one who is discharged, not of one who exercises his own will to surrender his employment voluntarily. The tacit sense of section 112½ is not that the omission of resignations from the group of involuntary severances is an omission of coerced as well as voluntary resignations, but that coerced resignations fall within the group of involuntary severances.

It is clear from the second amended petition that respondents demanded petitioner's separation from the fire department, that he was given but two hours to choose between formal resignation and summary discharge, and that he could not choose between remaining with the department or leaving it. Respondents' and not petitioner's will effected his separation from the department. There is no allegation that the statements regarding pension rights, elimination of positions, or summary discharge were not true and there is therefore no essential allegation to support a charge of fraud. See cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 800 et seq. and 6 Cal.Jur.Supp. 61. Fraud is alleged only as a part of the allegations of duress and threatened loss of pension rights. The paragraphs of the second amended petition quoted above make it clear that the petition is based upon allegations of coercion and duress.

[2, 3] Petitioner's emphasis upon the coercion that forced his resignation is prompted by the fact that there can be no reinstatement after a voluntary resignation. Kramer v. Board of Police Commissioners, 39 Cal.App. 396, 179 P. 216. By his own allegations his severance from his position was a resignation in name only, and he seeks reinstatement on the ground that it was in effect not a resignation. His failure to comply with the conditions of section 112½ governing demands for reinstatement compels him to advance his involuntary severance of employment as a resignation exempt from those conditions. He cannot escape from the dilemma, however, that the coercion attending his nominal resignation, while affording him a ground for reinstatement, also identifies that resignation as an actual involuntary severance from employment tantamount to an unlawful discharge within the meaning of section 112½ of the city charter. A demand for reinstatement following severance from employment under such circumstances must therefore meet the conditions of that section.

[4] Petitioner argues that if the coerced resignation be deemed an unlawful discharge the ninety-day period under section 112½ does not commence to run until the board of fire commissioners has complied with section 135 of the city charter providing that a officer or employee cannot be deprived of the right to his position without "good and sufficient cause" and a hearing before a Board of Rights on charges preferred against him. A discharge in violation of section 135, however, would be an unlawful discharge under section 112½, which by its express terms applies to discharges claimed to be "ineffective for any reason," and the ninety-day period would run from the date of such unlawful discharge.

L. A. 18221.

Supreme Court of California.

July 28, 1942.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1942.

See 128 P.2d 537.

1. Municipal corporations ⚷220(9)

Pension laws should be liberally construed and applied to the end that the beneficent policy thereby established may be accorded proper recognition.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷187

The fact that chronic heart condition was a contributing cause of death of policeman who suffered heart attack after struggle with prisoner and who died two or three hours later after his automobile collided with a parked automobile as he was driving to his home, did not bar his dependents' right to pension under city charter providing for pension in case of death as result of injury received during performance of duty.

3. Municipal corporations ⚷187

The fact that a police officer had at the time of his injury a previous heart affliction does not of itself defeat his dependents' right to a pension if the injury precipitated his death by aggravating heart condition.

4. Municipal corporations ⚷187

Evidence that policeman had heart attack after violent struggle with a prisoner and that he sustained fatal injuries when his automobile collided with a parked automobile as he was driving to his home established his dependents' right to pension under city charter providing for pension in case of death of policeman as result of an injury received during performance of duty, notwithstanding that medical testimony was to effect that automobile accident resulted from either heart attack or intoxication, where policeman was sober when he started for home, since consumption of intoxicants thereafter resulted from injury as being an attempt by policeman to bolster his strength.

5. Municipal corporations ⚷187

Where policeman after violent struggle with prisoner had a heart attack and died after his automobile collided with a parked automobile as he was driving to his home, it would be presumed that policeman was not negligent at time of automobile accident, and his dependents would not be precluded from recovering pension on ground that accident occurred as result of his negligence. Code of Civ.Proc. § 1963(4).

6. Municipal corporations 🔑187

Where policeman after violent struggle with prisoner had a heart attack and was directed by his superior to return home before expiration of his regular period of duty, and policeman thereafter sustained fatal injuries when his automobile collided with a parked automobile while he was driving home, injuries sustained in automobile accident were injuries "arising out of and in course of employment" so as to entitle policeman's dependents to a pension under city charter providing for pension in case of death of policeman as result of injury during performance of his duty.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑187

Where policeman after violent struggle with prisoner had a heart attack and was directed by his superior to return home before expiration of his regular period of duty, but sustained fatal injuries in automobile accident while driving home, the so-called "going and coming rule" did not preclude policeman's dependents from recovering pension predicated on theory that injuries sustained in automobile accident were injuries sustained during performance of policeman's duty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Proceeding in mandamus by Eletha R. Dillard against the City of Los Angeles and others to compel the defendants to place the petitioner, who was the widow of a deceased police officer, and her child on the pension rolls. Judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Prior opinion, 118 P.2d 345.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Cryer & Jones, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl and Edward J. Olstyn, Deputies City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent city and the board of pension commissioners to place petitioner and her child on the pension rolls to which she claims she is entitled under the pension laws of the city by reason of her husband's death. The facts are undisputed.

Petitioner's husband, now deceased, was a regularly employed police officer of the city of Los Angeles. On the night of January 22, 1940, decedent, as a radio car patrolman, was on regular duty from 6 p. m. to 2 a. m.

At about 10:15 p. m. a suspect who was taken into custody while decedent and a fellow officer were patrolling, attempted to escape and in so doing struck decedent on the face and chest; the struggle extended over a considerable period of time. The prisoner was subdued and taken to a hospital where he and decedent were given medical care. They then proceeded to the central police station where the prisoner was left. While there decedent was pale and perspiring and appeared weak. His condition being observed by the desk sergeant, he was told to go home. He stated that he believed he could drive his own car home without assistance. He was taken by his fellow patrolman to a parking lot where his car was parked. He was left there about 12:10 a. m. At about 12:40 a. m. his car collided with an automobile parked at the curb about 40 feet south of an intersection. A person hearing the crash ran to the scene of the collision and found decedent slumped over his steering wheel unconscious but still alive. He died shortly thereafter.

The autopsy surgeon of Los Angeles found that decedent was bruised about the body and limbs and his ribs were fractured and his heart ruptured. The heart was fatty and the left descending coronary artery was sclerotic, its opening being reduced 95 per cent. A chemical analysis of the blood showed the presence of 25 per cent ethanol; that amount of ethanol indicated intoxication. He found the death to have been caused by "a crushing in of the chest and rupture of the heart, contributory to that being internal hemorrhage." In his opinion the decedent "had a chronic heart condition which had been developing over a period of years and was such as to render him subject to a heart attack at any time; that the amount of alcohol found was sufficient to indicate intoxication, and that there was no way to determine whether or not the accident could have been caused by the liquor or by the heart condition." Dr. Webb in his affidavit used on motion for a new trial stated that decedent's heart condition was such that he was subject to a heart attack at any time and under the facts as above stated the decedent was suffering from such an attack when he was at the central police station which "was the direct and natural result of the fight he had had with the prisoner in the radio car, in view of the heart condition revealed by the autopsy; that the deceased was so seriously ill at the time and in such precarious condition that he should never have been allowed to attempt to go home alone or to drive an automobile; that he was liable to lose consciousness at any moment and the collision which resulted in his death was what might well have been expected from a driver in his condition at the time." Dr. Anthony's affidavit was of similar report.

Decedent was sober and gave no indication whatsoever of having consumed any intoxicating beverage up to the time he was left at the parking lot. The presence of alcohol in his blood after the collision indicated that it must have been consumed in the thirty minutes from the time he was left at the parking lot until the collision. With reference thereto Dr. Anthony stated in his affidavit: "that in the opinion of affiant the taking of liquor under the circumstances was the not unnatural act of a man in the exhausted and weakened condition of said deceased at the time, in an effort to stimulate himself for the drive to his home; it was the act of a stricken and dying man to bolster his waning strength for further effort."

The city charter provision in question reads: "Whenever any member of the Fire or Police Department shall die as a result of any injury received during the performance of his duty, or from sickness caused by the discharge of such duty * * * then an annual pension shall be paid in monthly installments to his widow, or child or children. * * *" (Los Angeles City Charter, § 183.)

[1] Pension laws should be liberally construed and applied to the end that the beneficent policy thereby established may be accorded proper recognition. Casserly v. City of Oakland, 215 Cal. 600, 603, 12 P.2d 425; Klench v. Board of Pension Fund Com'rs, 79 Cal.App. 171, 249 P. 46; O'Dea v. Cook, 176 Cal. 659, 169 P. 366; Aitken v. Roche, 48 Cal.App. 753, 192 P. 464. That rule should be kept in mind in the determination of this appeal.

[2,3] Before considering the main point in question it should also be observed that under the circumstances here involved the fact that decedent's chronic heart condition from which he was suffering was a contributing cause which ultimately led to his death, does not bar the right to a pension where events occurring while in the performance of his duty caused the heart attack which led to his death. That is true regardless of whether or not the chronic condition originated while in the performance of his duty. The fact that a police officer had at the time of the injury a previous heart affliction does not of itself defeat his dependents' right to a pension if the injury precipitated his death by aggravating the heart condition. Buckley v. Roche, 214 Cal. 241, 4 P.2d 929; Peters v. Sacramento City E. R. System, 27 Cal.App.2d 10, 80 P.2d 179; Naughton v. Retirement Board of San Francisco, 43 Cal.App.2d 254, 110 P.2d 714. As seen from the foregoing recital of facts the evidence shows without contradiction that the altercation decedent had with the prisoner in his custody and the blows there received caused decedent to have a heart attack from which he was suffering when at the central police station and thereafter.

[4] Turning to the main contention in the case, that the evidence without dispute establishes that the case comes within the terms of the charter, that is, that decedent died as a result of an injury received during the performance of his duty, it is clear that the undisputed evidence leads to only one conclusion, that is, that the deceased died as the result of an injury received during the performance of his duty. The injury was received while decedent was struggling with a prisoner and endeavoring to retain him in custody. That he was in the performance of his duty when he received that injury cannot be questioned. That his death resulted from that injury is equally clear. While it is true that the immediate cause of his death was the injury he received in the automobile collision, that collision was the result of the injury which brought on the heart attack. His condition was such, when he left the central police station, that he was on the verge of death from the heart attack brought on by the injury. He was in no condition to operate an automobile and should not have been permitted to do so. The medical evidence establishes that the automobile accident resulted from either the heart attack or the decedent having consumed an alcoholic beverage. Respondents argue that there are two possible inferences deducible from the evidence, that is, that the automobile accident resulted from the heart attack or that it was caused by the intoxication of the decedent, and in the latter event no pension is allowable. They point to the medical testimony that it could not be ascertained whether the automobile accident was caused by decedent's intoxication or the heart attack. They assert that no pension may be allowed when death follows an injury caused by the misconduct of the officer, and that becoming intoxicated is such misconduct. Assuming, but not deciding, that intoxication is misconduct which will defeat the right to a pension, the conclusion is not affected thereby. The evidence shows without contradiction that the consumption of the alcohol by the decedent must necessarily have occurred during a period of not over thirty minutes transpiring from the time he was left at the parking lot by his associate to the time of the automobile accident. There is no dispute that up to the time he was left at the parking lot he was sober and had not consumed any intoxicating beverage. His consumption of that beverage during that time was the natural act, as expressed by Dr. Anthony, "of a stricken and dying man to bolster his waning strength for further effort." Therefore, it follows that the injury which caused the heart attack also caused the consumption of the beverage which resulted in the condition of intoxication. Thus, it is immaterial whether the automobile accident which was the immediate cause of the death was the result of intoxication or the heart attack. The former was the result of the latter which was caused by an injury received during the performance of duty. It is all traceable to the initial impetus, the injury, which brought on the heart attack. The situation is not dissimilar to the case of an employee who suffers an injury in the course of his employment and takes what he believes to be medicine to relieve his condition temporarily, but the medicine turns out to be a deleterious substance and causes serious injury or death. Such injury or death may be said to have occurred in or arose out of his employment.

Analogous to the case here presented are those cases in which the rule is stated to be that an employee is entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation laws for a new or aggravated injury which results from the medical or surgical treatment of an industrial injury, whether the doctor was furnished by the employer, his insurance carrier, or was selected by the employee. Fitzpatrick v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 7 Cal.2d 230, 60 P.2d 276; Sarber v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 9 Cir., 23 F.2d 434; cases collected 39 A.L.R. 1276; 127 A.L.R. 1108. If the intervening act of a physician selected by the employee causing a new injury does not break the chain of causation, it certainly is not broken where a person, stricken and dying from an injury received in his employment, is killed when endeavoring to reach a place of safety in his automobile. In the Fitzpatrick case the Sarber case is quoted with approval at page 234 of 7 Cal.2d, at page 278 of 60 P.2d: "* * * 'Under the great weight of authority the employer is liable for all legitimate consequences following an accident, including unskilfulness or error of judgment of the physician furnished as required, and the employee is entitled to recover under the schedule of compensation for the extent of his disability, based on the ultimate result of the accident, regardless of the fact that the disability has been aggravated and increased by the intervening negligence or carelessness of the employer's selected physician.' The reasonableness of this principle is patent." (Emphasis added.) In the case at bar the pension act is at least as comprehensive as the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the ultimate result, that is, death, caused by the injury sustained, is the natural consequence of that injury.

[6] In addition to the foregoing, petitioner's recovery may be predicated upon the occurrence of the automobile collision which was the immediate cause of the death of decedent, and that result should be reached even if it be assumed that under the charter provision the injury must have arisen out of and occurred in the course of employment. The undisputed facts show a series of compelling circumstances. Decedent became ill from a heart attack as the direct result of the struggle which occurred in the course of and while he was performing one of the duties incident to that employment, the taking into custody and retention of a person violating the law. As the direct result of the illness, decedent was forced to return home before the expiration of his regular period of duty; the automobile collision also occurred before the expiration of that time. He was directed by his superior to return to his home by reason of that illness. It was known that his means of transportation to his home was his car. While going to his home he would necessarily encounter the hazards incident to operating a motor vehicle on the public streets. When an employee becomes ill or incapacitated as the result of an injury which occurs in or arises out of the course of his employment, it may justly be said that he is still in the course of his employment when en route, at his employer's direction, from his place of employment to a place of safety or where he may receive care and treatment for the injury or illness during his regular hours of labor. An injury received while so en route certainly is an incident of the employment, as the injury initially received in the employment caused him to be on the way to receive attention. The mere fact that he used his automobile in seeking refuge is of no consequence; that was done with the implied assent of the employer inasmuch as the latter directed him to go home, knowing he would use that means of transportation. It may fairly be said that while so en route he is on the business of both the master and his own.

Principles applicable to workmens' compensation cases where it is necessary to show that the injury arose out of or occurred in the course of the employment, support the foregoing. An employee engaged in outside work does not step out of the course of his employment while seeking shelter from a storm. Western Pac. R. R. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754. The case falls within the rule that those acts of the employee necessary to his comfort, convenience, safety or welfare while at work are incidental to his employment, and an injury sustained in the performance of such acts arises out of and occurs in the course of employment. Whiting-Mead Com. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 178 Cal. 505, 173 P. 1105, 5 A.L.R. 1518; County of Los Angeles v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 89 Cal.App. 736, 265 P. 362. For illustration, in the case of Los Angeles County v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, an injury received by an employee while going from his place of employment to a service station to get water for a fellow employee who had fainted, was held to have arisen out of and occurred in the course of employment. That principle may well apply where the employee receives an injury in the course of his employment that compels him to seek treatment and care or a place of refuge away from his place of employment. In either case the act of seeking treatment, care or refuge is incidental to the employment and arises out of it.

[7] The so-called going and coming rule is not an obstacle to that conclusion. It has many exceptions, and under the circumstances here involved, it has no application. The employee is not going home after his day's work is completed. Rather he is compelled by reason of an injury which was incurred during the performance of his duty to seek treatment, care or refuge away from his place of employment.

For the foregoing reasons there was a clear abuse of discretion on the part of the pension board in refusing petitioner's application for a pension, and the superior court should as a matter of law, upon the undisputed evidence, have granted the writ of mandate prayed for by her.

The judgment is reversed.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

By this proceeding in mandamus, the petitioner, a qualified elector of the 67th Assembly District, which is within the 17th Congressional District, seeks to compel the respondent, as Registrar of Voters of the County of Los Angeles, to take all steps essential to the preparation and holding of a special election on August 25, 1942, in accordance with the proclamation of the governor calling such special election. Respondent has demurred generally to the petition.

At an election held in November, 1940, Lee E. Geyer was elected a representative or congressman from the 17th Congressional District to the 77th Congress of the United States for a term ending with the expiration of that Congress at the end of the year 1942. The boundaries of such district at the time of his election were fixed and established by section 117 of the Political Code, as amended in 1931, St.1931, p. 297, and the district then comprised the 66th, 67th and 68th Assembly Districts. On October 13, 1941, Geyer died and a vacancy thereby resulted, which now exists. Intermediate his election and death, however, the Legislature at its regular session held in 1941 adopted a new Apportionment Act which changed the boundaries of the 17th Congressional District. This was done by repealing section 117 of the Political Code and substituting therefor section 110 of that code (Stats.1941, ch. 696, p. 2209). The latter section delineated the 17th Congressional District as comprising the 66th, 67th, 68th Assembly Districts and the 46th Assembly District, the latter district being added to what formerly had constituted the boundaries of said congressional district. On April 8, 1942, the governor by proclamation ordered that a special election be held August 25, 1942, in the 17th Congressional District, to fill the vacancy there existing. The proclamation pursuant to opinion of the Attorney General first had and obtained, ordered that such special election be held in the 17th Congressional District "as the said district was constituted in 1940 and prior to the taking effect of the Reapportionment Act in 1941, to fill the vacancy * * * caused by the death of Lee E. Geyer."

The issue presented by this proceeding is whether the election was properly proclaimed to be held in the 17th Congressional District as it existed when Geyer was elected. Or, conversely, should the election have been proclaimed to be held in the enlarged district as it existed when the governor issued his proclamation.

A brief reference should first be had to the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to the election of Representatives to Congress.

Clause 1 of section 4 of article I of the federal Constitution provides that the Legislature of each state shall prescribe the times, places and manner of holding such elections, subject to the power of Congress to at any time make or alter such regulations.

Clause 4 of section 2 of article I of the same Constitution provides that "When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies." (It was pursuant to this authority that the governor issued the proclamation ordering the special election here involved.)

Pursuant to its constitutional authority, Congress has provided that "The time for holding elections in any State * * * for a Representative * * * to fill a vacancy * * * may be prescribed by the laws of the several States * * *." (2 U.S.C.A. § 8). The Legislature of this state has adopted no statute relating to the filling of such vacancies.

[1] We are satisfied that under the circumstances of this case the proclamation of the governor properly called for the election to be held in the old district. McCrary on Elections, 4th Ed., p. 141, states "The true rule, therefore, must be that a district once created, and having elected a Representative in Congress, should be allowed to continue intact for the purpose of filling any vacancy which may occur, until the end of the Congress in which it is represented."

In 20 Corpus Juris 89, section 67, it is said that "If after a congressional election the state is redistricted and a vacancy then occurs, such vacancy should be filled by the suffrage of the electors of the old district and not by that of the electors of the new district * * *." See, also, 29 C.J.S., Elections, § 54.

In Hunt v. Menard, reported in 2 Bartlett Contested Congressional Election Cases, p. 477, the House of Representatives, acting under clause 1, section 5 of article I of the federal Constitution which makes it the sole judge of the validity of elections of its members, refused seats to two persons who based their claims thereto upon a special election held in a new district. It was there said: "It would not be a preservation of the purity of the elective franchise, nor would it be a just guardianship of the republican principle that all shall have a right to be represented to admit the power of a State legislature to provide that a portion of the people should have two representatives in Congress, while another portion should have none, or not to be represented by the man of their choice * * *. It is, besides, in disregard of the law of Congress of June, 1842, which declares that no one district shall be entitled to two representatives."

It is true that the practice has not been uniform, such elections in some states having been ordered in the new district, in others in the old district. It is significant, however, that Perkins v. Morrison, 1 Bartlett Contested Congressional Election Cases 142, wherein it was held by the House of Representatives that a representative was entitled to be seated who had been elected to fill a vacancy at a special election held in the new district, was expressly disavowed by the House in Hunt v. Menard, supra, quoted from above. Other cases, such as Pool v. Skinner, reported in Mobley Contested Congressional Election Cases, p. 65, and People v. Voorhis, 222 N.Y. 494, 119 N.E. 106, 111, went off upon the proposition that courts are without jurisdiction to interfere with a governor's proclamation or to enjoin an election based thereon, upon which proposition we need not here express any opinion because of our conclusion on the ground first herein mentioned. Upon the merits, however, the four dissenting justices in the Voorhis case, supra, expressed views in accordance with our conclusion herein stating, "Thus the state could, by this reasoning, place the Seventh district over upon the territory of the Fourth, and direct that a vacancy occurring in the Seventh be filled from the new congressional district. The same territory and electors would thereupon have two representatives in Congress, the one elected in 1916 for the Fourth district still in office, and the one elected to fill the vacancy in the new Seventh, changed to the boundaries of the Fourth. This in part has been done here. * * * To shift that district during his term over upon the territory of some other district by simply changing the number and then permitting the vacancy to be filled from that other district is in effect, if not in theory, giving two Congressmen from the same district. A district represents a defined territory and not a mere number. It is a practical matter, and not one that yields to attenuated argument. I doubt whether the Legislature has power, in view of this act of Congress, to change the congressional district from which a Representative is elected during his term of office. However this may be, I am convinced that the Legislature in passing the acts of 1917 never intended to have them apply to vacancies, but that, as above stated, the intention was to have these new districts for the next regular congressional election."

While this appears to be the first instance in which this court has been called upon to determine whether under the circumstances here presented a special election to fill a vacancy is properly called in the old district, and not in the new district, it is not the first time the problem has arisen in this state. The attorney general states that similar problems have arisen with the adoption of each Apportionment Act by the Legislature and that his office uniformly has advised that the special election should be held in the old district, the new district being effective for the first time at the general election next following the adoption of the Apportionment Act. He cites us to five such opinions, exclusive of the one rendered to the governor in this instance, emanating from his office since 1929.

[2] Nothing in the Apportionment Act of 1941 indicates that it was intended to apply to special elections held to fill vacancies arising in terms occupied at the time of its passage. It was intended to apply to the next general election and succeeding elections. That it could not have been intended to apply to a special election to fill a vacancy in the present Congress would appear from the fact that it provides for twenty-three congressional districts and the State, now represented by twenty congressmen, is entitled to twenty-three congressmen only in the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses for which the first election is the general election to be held in November of this year.

Moreover, to apply the Apportionment Act of 1941 to special elections held to fill vacancies arising in terms occupied at the time of its passage would lead to arbitrary and capricious results. To cite one: If the special election here involved were to be held in the new enlarged district, the voters of the 46th Assembly District, which district has been added to the old 17th Congressional District, would be accorded double representation in the present Congress for they are already represented by the congressman from their old district in whose selection they had a voice. As already shown, such double representation is improper. By the same token the voters of the 46th Assembly District are not disenfranchised by restricting the special election to fill the vacancy to the old district for, as stated, they are already represented in this Congress.

We are satisfied, therefore, that the only practical and sound conclusion is that regardless of the repeal of the act (§ 117, Pol.Code) creating and delineating the old district, the special election to fill the vacancy now existing should be held in the old district, thus retaining the same proportionate Congressional representation under the old Apportionment Act and giving to the new Apportionment Act application to the selection of representatives for the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, as intended.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue forthwith upon the filing of this decision.

LYONS et al. v. BRUNSWICK-BALKE-COLLENDER CO. et al.

L. A. 18265.

Supreme Court of California.

July 16, 1942.

1. Venue 🔑21

The section of the Code of Civil Procedure permitting the defendant to have certain actions tried in the county where he resides is "remedial" in nature and should be liberally construed to the end that a defendant may not be unjustly deprived of that right. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Remedial Statute".

2. Venue 🔑61

A motion for a change of venue on the ground of defendant's residence in another county should be filed at the time defendant demurs or answers. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

3. Venue 🔑77

The reasoning upon which cases holding that a motion for a change of venue on the ground of defendant's residence in another county should be filed at the time defendant demurs or answers is that the failure to move for a change of venue on the ground of residence at the time of the demurrer or answer constitutes a "waiver" of the right to have the venue changed. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

4. Venue ⚷77

Where change of venue is sought at the time the demurrer or answer is filed there is no "waiver" by defendant of his right to have venue changed to another county by subsequent conduct in the action unless he thereby evinces an intent to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is commenced for the determination of questions of fact or law or in effect consents to the trial of the case in such court. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

5. Estoppel ⚷119

"Waiver" is ordinarily a "question of fact".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

6. Venue ⚷61

The failure to institute proceedings for change of venue on the ground of residence at the time of filing a demurrer or answer standing alone requires that relief be denied when an attempt is made by later proceeding, but where there is a sufficient showing that there was no intent to waive the right or to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was commenced and the defendant has acted diligently and in good faith, relief should not be denied. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

7. Venue ⚷21

The right of defendant to have certain actions tried in the county of his residence is an ancient and valuable right which has always been safeguarded by statute and is supported by a long line of judicial decisions. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

8. Venue ⚷24

The right of a plaintiff to have an action tried in another county than that in which the defendant has his residence is exceptional and if plaintiff would claim such right, he must bring himself within the terms of the exception. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

9. Venue ⚷61

Where nonresident defendant filed an affidavit of merits consenting that action be transferred to co-defendant's county which adjoined defendant's county, whereupon plaintiffs dismissed action as to codefendant, a prompt motion by defendant for change of venue accompanied by amended demurrer was properly allowed. Code Civ.Proc. § 396b.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action by M. L. Lyons and others against the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and another. From an order granting defendant Bowell's motion for a change of venue, the plaintiffs appeal.

Order affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from an order of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County granting defendant Bowell's motion to change the place of trial of the above-entitled action from that county to the Superior Court for San Mateo County. It is conceded that the action is of a character which the defendants are entitled to have tried in the Superior Court for the county of their residence. Defendant Dooley resides in the City and County of San Francisco; defendant Bowell resides in San Mateo County; defendant, the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, is a foreign corporation authorized to transact business in this state. Bowell's motion was made upon the ground that the Superior Court for Los Angeles County was not the proper place of trial inasmuch as he is a resident of San Mateo County.

Plaintiffs commenced their action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on March 28, 1941. On April 29, 1941, defendants filed a joint demurrer to the complaint in the action, and at the same time defendant Dooley filed affidavits and notice of motion to change venue to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco on the ground of his residence there, and that defendant Bowell did not reside in Los Angeles County. Accompanying Dooley's motion was an affidavit of merits by defendant Bowell in which he stated that "he * * * consents that the place of trial * * * be changed to the Superior Court * * * for the City and County of San Francisco." The corporation defendant also consented to the change.

The motion for change of venue was set for hearing on May 9, 1941, but on May 7, 1941, plaintiffs dismissed the action as to defendant Dooley without prejudice.

On May 14, 1941, and before any hearing was had on the demurrer, defendant Bowell filed a notice of motion for change of venue to San Mateo County, on the ground that his residence was there, accompanied by affidavits stating that San Francisco City and County and San Mateo County are adjacent to each other, the situs of the courts of the respective counties being thirty miles apart; that he had theretofore consented to the change of venue to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco moved for by Dooley because of "the proximity of the City and County of San Francisco, to the County of San Mateo, the place of residence of affiant, and that the trial of the action in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco would not impose any undue hardship on affiant for the reasons stated"; that he did not, and never intended to consent to the trial of the action in Los Angeles County; that the corporation defendant consented to his requested change of venue. At the same time Bowell filed a separate amended demurrer. Plaintiffs moved to strike Bowell's motion on the ground that he had waived his right to have the venue changed. The court granted Bowell's motion, and the other motions and demurrers were ordered off the calendar.

Dooley's motion and Bowell's motion were made pursuant to sections 395, 396b and 397 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 396b reads in part:

"* * * if an action or proceeding is commenced in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter thereof, other than the court designated as the proper court for the trial thereof, * * * the action may, notwithstanding, be tried in the court where commenced, unless the defendant, at the time he answers or demurs, files with the clerk, * * * an affidavit of merits and notice of motion for an order transferring the action or proceeding to the proper court, together with proof of service, upon the adverse party, of a copy of such papers. Upon the hearing of such motion the court shall, if it appears that the action or proceeding was not commenced in the proper court, order the same transferred to the proper court." (Emphasis added.)

It is plaintiffs' contention that under that section a motion for change of venue must be filed at the time the answer or demurrer is filed, otherwise the right to change of venue is waived, and that here defendant Bowell did not file a notice of motion when the joint demurrer was filed and Dooley made his motion, but rather consented to have Dooley's motion for a transfer to the City and County of San Francisco granted; therefore Bowell waived his right to a change of venue in the first instance and his motion came too late.

[1] Section 396b of the Code of Civil Procedure permitting the defendant to have certain actions tried in the county where he resides is remedial in nature and should be liberally construed to the end that a defendant may not be unjustly deprived of that right. Lundy v. Lettunich, 50 Cal.App. 451, 195 P. 451; Code Civ. Proc. § 4. Therefore in considering this appeal we must be guided by that principle.

[2, 3] It has been stated frequently that a motion for a change of venue on the ground of defendant's residence in another county should be filed at the time defendant demurs or answers; that rule follows the wording of section 396b of the Code of Civil Procedure. Witter v. Phelps, 163 Cal. 655, 658, 126 P. 593; McNeill & Co. v. Doe, 163 Cal. 338, 340, 125 P. 345; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 147 Cal. 541, 82 P. 200; Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 245; Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642; Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209; Reyes v. Sanford, 5 Cal. 117; Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 438; Union Lumber Co. v. Metropolis Const. Co., 13 Cal.App. 584, 110 P. 329; Bell v. Camm, 10 Cal.App. 388, 102 P. 225; Powell v. Sutro, 80 Cal. 559, 22 P. 308; Remington S. M. Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 311, 318; Story v. Christin, 137 Cal.App. 484, 30 P.2d 1016; Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72. But the reasoning upon which those cases are based is that the failure to move for a change of venue on the ground of residence at the time of demurrer or answer constitutes a waiver of the right to have the venue changed. Wadleigh v. Phelps, supra; Cook v. Pendergast, supra; Jones v. Frost, supra; Pearkes v. Freer, supra; Bell v. Camm, supra; Pittman v. Carstenbrook, 11 Cal. App. 224, 104 P. 699; Howell v. Stetefeldt Furnace Co., 69 Cal. 153, 10 P. 390; Henry v. Willett, 60 Cal.App. 244, 212 P. 698; Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 129 P. 981; Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 65 P. 139; Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 321, 324; People v. Sterling Refining Co., 86 Cal. App. 558, 261 P. 1080; Bloom v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., 34 Cal.App.2d 102, 93 P.2d 164; see, also, Gallo v. Boyle Mfg. Co., Inc., 30 Cal.App.2d 653, 86 P.2d 1067. For illustration it is said in Howell v. Stetefeldt Furnace Co., supra, 69 Cal. at page 154, 10 P. at page 391:

"The object had in view by the legislature in enacting section 396 (now 396b), Code Civil Proc., was to prevent trials of actions in counties other than those in which defendants resided, unless they waived such right." And in Cook v. Pendergast, supra, 61 Cal. at page 78:

[4-6] "Section 396 (now 396b) of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in effect, that a defendant may be held to have waived his right to a change of the place of trial on the ground that the action has not been commenced in the proper county, unless at the time he first appears either by answer or demurrer, he files an affidavit of merits, and demands in writing a transfer to the proper county." (Emphasis added.) Furthermore it has been held, in cases where the change of venue was sought at the time the demurrer or answer was filed, that there was no waiver by defendant of his right by subsequent conduct in the action unless he thereby evinced an intent to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was commenced for the determination of questions of fact or law, or that he in effect consented to the trial of the case in such court. Pittman v. Carstenbrook, supra; Bloom v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., supra; Lundy v. Lettunich, supra; Goss v. Brown, 64 Cal.App. 381, 221 P. 683; Gallo v. Boyle Mfg. Co., Inc., supra; Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Herman Min. Co., 139 Cal. 713, 73 P. 588. It is true, as pointed out by plaintiffs, that in those cases the papers for change of venue were filed at the time specified in section 396b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the court was concerned with whether or not acts other than the failure to file the papers in time constituted an express or implied waiver, but as we have seen, the theory in either case is waiver on the part of defendant. Waiver is ordinarily a question of fact. 25 Cal. Jur. 932. While it may be true that the failure to institute proceedings for change of venue on the ground of residence at the time of filing a demurrer or answer, standing alone, requires as a matter of law that relief be denied when an attempt to obtain it is made by later proceedings, there is nothing in section 396b or the cases heretofore cited, which compels a holding that such waiver occurs as a matter of law where, as in this case, there is a sufficient showing that there was no intent to waive the right or to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is commenced, and the defendant has acted in good faith and with diligence. To blind one's self to the realities by a slavish adherence to technicalities is not consonant with justice or the liberal tendencies with respect to rules of procedure and practice. To give the construction to section 396b contended for by plaintiffs would be unreasonable and out of line with the rules pertaining to waiver. Furthermore, it would require a strict and literal, rather than a liberal interpretation of that section.

[7-9] The right of the defendant to have certain actions tried in the county of his residence "is an ancient and valuable right, which has always been safeguarded by statute and is supported by a long line of judicial decisions. 'The right of a plaintiff to have an action tried in another county than that in which the defendant has his residence is exceptional, and, if the plaintiff would claim such right, he must bring himself within the terms of the exception.' Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209." Brown v. Happy Valley Fruit Growers, 206 Cal. 515, 522, 274 P. 977, 979. The facts of this case clearly present a situation in which it should be said that defendant Bowell has not waived that right as was found by the trial court. His residence being near the city and county of San Francisco there was no reason for him to insist on a trial in San Mateo County. He did not at any time consent that the Superior Court of Los Angeles County should retain the right to try the action. When his co-defendant Dooley demanded a transfer to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, he naturally agreed that that court could try the case; it was not equivalent to his consent that the case be tried in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Plaintiffs then, without prior notice to defendants of their intention to do so, dismissed the action as to defendant Dooley. The reason therefore may reasonably be said to have been to prevent the transfer of the case from Los Angeles. Defendant Bowell was then placed in a position where he had to make his motion for a transfer if he wished to preserve his right. He acted promptly, a week after the dismissal, and filed an amended demurrer at the same time. As far as appears, the demurrer had not been submitted to the court for decision nor ruled upon when he filed his motion for a transfer. Plaintiffs have suffered no prejudice.

The order is affirmed.

An appeal can only be taken from a final judgment.

3. Appeal and error ⚷80(6)

Where no issue was joined as to one cause of action in cross-complaint, judgments for cross-defendants, entered on cross-complainant's failure to amend cross-complaint after demurrers and motion to strike had been sustained in part as to other causes of action, were not "final" or appealable, but were premature and void. Code Civ. Proc. § 956.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert L. McWilliams, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by the Provident Land Corporation against Louis Bartlett, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and others. From adverse judgments, defendant appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

Paul A. McCarthy and Louis Bartlett, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, both of Willows, and Leander L. James, of San Francisco, for plaintiff and respondent.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, both of Willows, and Joseph Wahrhaftig and Gregory, Hunt & Melvin, all of San Francisco, for cross-defendants and respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

Provident Irrigation District, a corporation, heretofore issued and there were outstanding a large number of its bonds. The corporation became embarrassed financially. The plaintiff, another corporation, Provident Land Corporation, hereinafter called the Provident, was formed for the purpose of acquiring said bonds and protecting the rights of the holders thereof. George H. McKaig, W. G. Aldenhagen, and E. O. Kaufmann were the directors of the Provident. George H. McKaig, Fred G. Stevenot, and E. O. Kaufmann were the members of and constituted the Bondholders' Protective Committee of the Provident Irrigation District. The defendant Louis Bartlett, Esq., was employed to render legal services. He entered upon the discharge of the employment and performed valuable services which were terminated by the settlement of all matters in controversy.

The Provident commenced an action against the defendant Louis Bartlett to obtain declaratory relief. The defendant appeared and answered and at the same time filed a cross-complaint. He named as defendants the Provident, the directors thereof, and the members of the Bondholders' Protective Committee of Provident Irrigation District. The cross-complaint contained two counts. Later he filed an amendment as of course, adding certain defendants. He also amended the second count. On April 17, 1941, he filed a second amendment adding a third cause of action which is a common count for services rendered. Counsel treated all three counts as but different statements of one and the same claim. On April 7, 1941, George H. McKaig demurred to the cross-complaint and to counts one and two; on April 15, E. O. Kaufmann demurred to the cross-complaint and to counts one and two; on April 7, 1941, W. G. Aldenhagen demurred to the cross-complaint and to counts one and two. The record does not show that a demurrer or answer was filed by the Provident. However, it does show that the Provident made a motion to strike and, as will hereinafter be noted, the motion was granted.

The record shows that on November 19, 1941, the trial court made the following nunc pro tunc order as of May 8, 1941: "Demurrer of cross-defendant Provident Land Corporation to the cross-complaint is overruled; demurrers of cross-defendants George H. McKaig and E. O. Kaufmann, as members of Bondholders' Protective Committee of Provident Irrigation District are overruled as to the first cause of action and sustained as to the second cause of action; demurrers of George H. McKaig, W. G. Aldenhagen and E. O. Kaufmann individually to first and second causes of action sustained; leave is granted to cross-complainant to file amended cross-complaint if so advised."

After the entry of the order just quoted the record stood as follows: The demurrer of the Provident was overruled; the demurrers of McKaig and Kaufmann, as members of the Bondholders' Committee, were overruled as to the first cause of action and sustained as to the second; the demurrers of McKaig, Aldenhagen and Kaufmann, individually, to the first and second causes of action were sustained. No issue was joined as to the third cause of action. Notice of the entry of said orders was duly given, no amendment was made, and purported judgments were separately entered in favor of Aldenhagen, Kaufmann and McKaig. From each of said judgments the cross-complainant has appealed.

On March 12, 1942, on the motion of the Provident, the trial court ordered paragraphs one to twelve, inclusive, of the second cause of action stricken out. No amendment being made, on May 29, 1942, a purported judgment was entered in favor of the Provident against the cross-complainant, on the second count. June 5, 1942, the cross-complainant appealed therefrom.

[1-3] A consideration of the foregoing facts shows that all of said appeals must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction in this court to hear the same. As to the third cause of action issue has not been joined on law or fact as between the cross-complainant and any one of the cross-defendants. As to the first cause of action, since the above rulings were made, we may assume that all of the cross-defendants have now answered and that the action is now at issue on said count. After the issues of law have been disposed of and after issue has been joined on questions of fact, the action will be in a condition to be tried and thereafter for a final judgment to be entered. That is, for a judgment to be entered which ends the suit. Guaranty Trust, etc., Bank v. City of Los Angeles, 186 Cal. 110, 116, 199 P. 35. An appeal from that judgment is the only one that the parties may legally be subjected to. Gunder v. Gunder, 208 Cal. 559, 561, 282 P. 794. All of the above-mentioned rulings may be reviewed on that appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 956; 2 Cal. Jur. 816. These propositions are applicable to rulings on demurrer and motions to strike when several counts are contained in the pleadings under attack. Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 231, 93 P.2d 100. When, as here, a final judgment has not been rendered, purported judgments such as were entered in the instant case are premature and void. De Vally v. Kendall De Vally O. Co., Ltd., 220 Cal. 742, 745, 32 P.2d 638.

A controversy involving similar questions was before the court in Mather v. Mather, 5 Cal.2d 617, 55 P.2d 1174. At page 618 of 5 Cal.2d, at page 1174 of 55 P.2d, Mr. Chief Justice Waste, speaking for the court, had this to say: "It is evident that the cause was attempted to be disposed of piecemeal—that a single object, although stated in several counts, was sought to be attained by the action, and that this single and unseverable object was arbitrarily attempted to be split up as the basis for two distinct judgments. It is at once apparent that no final judgment was entered in the action until March 14, 1935. The judgment of January 4, 1935, was not a final judgment and is not appealable under the terms of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or otherwise. Our conclusion is fully supported by the leading case of Gunder v. Gunder, 208 Cal. 559, 282 P. 794, and the many cases which follow it, notably De Vally v. Kendall De Vally, etc., Co., 220 Cal. 742, 32 P.2d 638; Middleton v. Finney, 214 Cal. 523, 6 P.2d 938 [78 A.L.R. 1104], and Potvin v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 130 Cal.App. 510, 20 P.2d 129."

Neither party to this record has mentioned the applicability of the above-mentioned rule to the facts of this case. That was also true in De Vally v. Kendall De Vally O. Co., Ltd., supra. But referring to such a record, Mr. Justice Preston, speaking for the court, on page 745 of 220 Cal., on page 639 of 32 P.2d had this to say:

"Although the matter is not mentioned by counsel for either side, it appears that the court should not have given a judgment herein until the final disposition of the entire cause. The law contemplates but one final judgment in a cause. As stated in the case of Nolan v. Smith, 137 Cal. 360, 361, 70 P. 166, quoting from Stockton, etc., Works v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. [557], 577, 33 P. 633: 'There can be but one final judgment in an action, and that is one which, in effect, ends the suit in the court in which it was entered, and finally determines the rights of the parties in relation to the matter in controversy. (Citing authorities.)' See, also, Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 114 P. 579; Middleton v. Finney, 214 Cal. 523, 6 P.2d 938 [78 A.L.R. 1104], and Potvin v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Inc., 130 Cal.App. 510, 512, 20 P.2d 129."

The appeals from the judgments are dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Emilie A. Lawrence against the City of Los Angeles, and others, to require respondents to make an order allowing petitioner a pension because of the death of her husband who was a police officer of the city. From an adverse judgment, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Paul Taylor and Bartlett & Kearney, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl and Edward J. Olstyn, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of respondents after the trial court entered a judgment denying petitioner's application for a writ of mandate requiring respondents to make an order allowing her a pension because of the death of her husband, a police officer of defendant city, petitioner appeals.

The essential facts are:

November 1, 1939, at approximately 5:30 p. m. petitioner's husband, a police officer of the city of Los Angeles, left the central police station in a Ford automobile owned by defendant city apparently en route home. At approximately 6:10 p. m. of the same day while driving in an easterly direction on the wrong side of Alhambra avenue he collided head-on with a truck being driven in a westerly direction upon the same highway. As a result of the accident petitioner's husband received injuries from which he died. At the time of the accident decedent was under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Petitioner urges three propositions for reversal of the judgment, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

First: The trial court committed prejudicial error in receiving in evidence opinions of doctors that petitioner's husband was at the time of his death under the influence of an intoxicating beverage, which opinions were based solely upon the results of tests of the blood of decedent taken from him after his death.

[1] This proposition is untenable. Opinions of qualified medical doctors as to whether an individual was intoxicated or not predicated upon the percentage of alcohol in the individual's blood, though not conclusive, are admissible when there is a proper preliminary showing that the blood tests upon which such opinions have been predicated have been properly conducted (State v. Duguid, 50 Ariz. 276, 72 P.2d 435, 437; Kuroske v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 234 Wis. 394, 291 N.W. 384, 387, 127 A.L.R. 1505; Commonwealth v. Capalbo, 308 Mass. 376, 32 N.E.2d 225, 228.

[2] In the present case no objection was made that a preliminary foundation had not been laid for the admission of the testimony of Drs. Louis J. Gogol and J. Dryden Davenport. Therefore, the trial court properly permitted them to testify that in their opinion decedent was intoxicated at the time of his death, since an analysis of his blood disclosed that it contained 0.28% ethanol.[1]

[3, 4] Second: There is not any substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's findings that:

(a) The death of petitioner's husband was not the result of an injury received

---

[1] It appears to be the consensus of the medical profession that when the blood alcohol concentrate of the driver of an automobile is 0.15% (by weight) such fact is conclusive evidence that the driver is under the influence of alcohol. (Committee on Tests for Intoxication of the National Safety Council, Chemical Tests for Intoxication (1938) p. 5; see also for an excellent discussion of the subject "The Medico-Legal Aspects of the Blood Test to Determine Intoxication," by Professors Mason Ladd and Robert B. Gibson, The Iowa Law Review, January, 1939, Vol. XXIV, No. 2, p. 191, et seq.; and "Alcohol in Relation to Traffic Accidents," by Richard L. Holcomb, Vol. III, No. 12, The Journal of the American Medical Association, September 17, 1938, p. 1076.) The Committee on Tests for Intoxication in its 1940 report thus graphically illustrates the relationship between alcohol in the blood and the degree of intoxication:

THERE IS A DEFINITE RELATION BETWEEN ALCOHOL IN THE BLOOD AND DEGREE OF INTOXICATION by him in the course of the discharge of his duties as a police officer; and

(b) Petitioner's husband was intoxicated at the time of his death.

This proposition is likewise untenable.

(a) Based on the testimony of eyewitnesses it appears that decedent had been driving on the wrong side of the street for approximately a block before the automobile which he was driving collided head-on with a truck coming in the opposite direction. This testimony, coupled with that of Drs. Gogol and Davenport to the effect that in their opinion decedent was intoxicated at the time of his death, in the absence of any evidence that petitioner's husband was engaged in the pursuit of his duties at the time of the unfortunate accident, resulted in a failure by petitioner to sustain the burden of proving that deceased met his death as a result of his employment, and the trial court's finding that petitioner's husband did not receive injuries in the course of his employment which resulted in his death was correct.

[5, 6] (b) As we have heretofore determined that the trial court properly admitted the testimony of Drs. Gogol and Davenport that decedent was intoxicated at the time of his death, such testimony is substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's finding upon this issue and also that the death of petitioner's husband resulted from his operating an automobile while intoxicated. Petitioner's argument based upon statements of the trial judge during the trial contrary to the findings is unavailable to petitioner, since the rule is settled in California that the opinion of the trial judge will not be considered by this court for the purpose of determining that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence (Cohen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 32 Cal.App.2d 337, 342, 89 P.2d 732).

[7] Third: It is immaterial whether the decedent was under the influence of an intoxicating beverage or not, since he died as a result of an injury received during the performance of his duty.

This proposition is untenable. Section 183 of the charter of the city of Los Angeles reads in part thus:

"Whenever any member of the Fire or Police Department shall die as a result of any injury received during the performance of his duty, or from sickness caused by the discharge of such duty, or after retirement, or while eligible to retirement from such department on account of years of service, then an annual pension shall be paid in equal monthly installments to his widow. * * *"

The words, "shall die as a result of any injury received during the performance of his duty," as used in the foregoing section means that there must have been a causal relation, mediate or immediate, between the duty performed by the deceased and the injury, which has resulted in his death. (See Rhodes v. United States, 8 Cir., 79 F. 740, 743, 25 C.C.A. 186; 48 C.J. (1929), 788, § 9.)

[8] In view of the finding of the trial court supra, which we have held finds substantial support in the evidence, there can be no question that there was no causal connection between the duty which decedent was employed to perform and the injury which resulted in his death. When decedent became intoxicated, that became a proximate cause of the injury which he subsequently received and which caused his death, and therefore neither he nor his widow was entitled to a pension. The law is accurately stated by Mr. Justice Ward in MacIntyre v. Retirement Board of San Francisco, 42 Cal.App.2d 734, 735, 109 P.2d 962, 963, thus:

"The right to a pension is not indefeasible, and an employee, though otherwise entitled thereto, may not be guilty of misconduct in his position and maintain his rights notwithstanding such dereliction of duty."

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action by Lois E. Wuest against William O. Wuest to vacate and modify in part a judgment entered in an action for divorce instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant. From a judgment of dismissal predicated upon an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cook & Obeji, of Van Nuys, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Plaintiff herein filed an action for separate maintenance. Subsequently, by an amendment to her complaint, she sought a divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, asked for a reasonable amount of the community property, custody of the minor children and allowance for their support and maintenance, together with alimony for herself, court costs, and attorney's fees. Defendant answered and cross-complained for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, sought custody of the minor children, and an equitable division of the community property. After a trial, plaintiff was granted a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. Custody of the children was awarded jointly to the parties, with actual custody in the defendant husband, with right of visitation to the plaintiff wife. An award also was made in favor of the wife for alimony and attorney's fees.

In connection with the community property of the parties, the court determined that the same was of the value of $34,165.25, and ordered that one-half of this amount, or $17,082.62, be paid by defendant husband to the plaintiff over a period of not to exceed 23.73 years at the rate of $50 per month. The judgment further enjoined defendant husband from disposing of any of the community property until plaintiff had been paid in full for her share thereof and impressed upon such real property a lien in favor of plaintiff until she had received the value of her one-half interest therein. An interlocutory judgment of divorce in accordance with the foregoing was thereupon entered on May 31, 1940.

It appears from the record that the determination of the value of the community property, as well as the method by which plaintiff was to be paid her share, resulted from a stipulation entered into during the trial between the parties litigant and their respective counsel which was filed with and approved by the court, the terms of which stipulation, so far as the community interests of the parties were involved, being incorporated in the interlocutory judgment of divorce.

On May 27, 1941, and prior to the entry of a final judgment of divorce, plaintiff in the last-mentioned proceeding commenced an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County to vacate and modify in part the judgment entered in the divorce case. By her complaint filed in the last-named action plaintiff alleged that prior to and during the trial of the divorce action she was in an enfeebled condition mentally and physically, due to the cruel and inhuman treatment inflicted upon her by her husband, coupled with the strain under which she labored by reason of being subjected to investigations by court assistants and psychiatrists appointed by the court after the commencement of the divorce action and prior to the entry of the interlocutory judgment therein. Plaintiff then alleged in her complaint that she was informed by her attorney, who is not her present counsel, that the judge presiding in the divorce trial (who was not the judge presiding in the instant proceeding) had informed said attorney that the judge "might not grant the plaintiff a divorce if she refused to sign the stipulation attached to 'Exhibit A' and that she insisted upon the stipulation being signed by both parties to said action and their respective attorneys, so that neither party could appeal; and said judge also made the statement in open court before said stipulation was signed, that it must be signed by both parties and their attorneys so that no appeal could be taken from any judgment entered in said action; that because of these representations to plaintiff and her weakened mind, due to the said assaults of her husband and the passing through the change of life, she reluctantly signed said stipulation."

The complaint further charged: "That plaintiff was not informed before signing said stipulation that she would be deprived of making any application to the court which rendered said judgment, for a modification thereof with reference to the property rights of plaintiff, and if she had been so informed she would not have signed said stipulation; nor was plaintiff ever informed that she might have applied to the court for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California until long after the expiration of six months after the entry of said judgment, Exhibit A."

It was further alleged in plaintiff's complaint, upon information and belief, that the judge presiding at the divorce trial "conferred in her chambers with the attorneys for plaintiff and defendant during the trial of said action No. D-183,252, and in the absence of the parties; and in said conferences that said judge informed said attorneys that she would not divide the community property in kind, because she felt that because of the unstable mental condition of plaintiff she might not be able to hold said property or the proceeds derived from a sale thereof, if awarded to her, and hence that whatever amount that would be awarded to plaintiff should be based upon her life-expectancy and paid to plaintiff in monthly installments, so that no part of the principal could be expended by plaintiff during her lifetime, except said monthly installments of $50.00 each; that plaintiff was not informed of these conferences prior to the entry of said judgment, nor until the verification of this complaint; that if plaintiff had been informed of the effect of said judgment of depriving her of her property rights in the community property of the plaintiff and the defendant, she would not have signed said stipulation attached hereto as a part of said 'Exhibit A.'

"Plaintiff alleges that she never authorized her attorney to waive written findings of fact in said action No. D-183,252 and she had no information about the legal effect of said waiver until a very recent date."

Defendant interposed a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint upon the ground that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that there was a misjoinder of parties, in that the County Clerk of Los Angeles County was made a party defendant; that several causes of action were alleged but not separately stated in the complaint, and finally, that the pleading was ambiguous, unintelligible and uncertain. After hearing on the demurrer, the trial court made its order sustaining the same without leave to amend, and from the judgment of dismissal predicated thereon plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1-5] Whether the demurrer should have been sustained is the only question to be decided. We are persuaded that the demurrer should have been overruled. Concerning defendant's claim of misjoinder of parties by naming the county clerk as a defendant, it may well be said that this ground of demurrer, while available to the county clerk, did not furnish defendant Wuest with a legal or valid objection to the complaint. It was not open to defendant Wuest to demur for misjoinder of parties where the action properly lay against him and his interests were not affected by the joinder of the county clerk. Madary v. City of Fresno, 20 Cal.App. 91, 98, 128 P. 340; Gardner v. Samuels, 116 Cal. 84, 90, 47 P. 935, 58 Am.St.Rep. 135. Furthermore, it is asserted in appellant's brief, and not denied by respondent, that the defendant county clerk, through the medium of a stipulation filed in the action, made no objection to his being named a party defendant. Respondent's claim that the complaint includes several causes of action without separately stating them is equally without merit. The pleading states but a single cause of action, viz., that the interlocutory judgment of divorce entered by the superior court was beyond its jurisdiction. Other allegations as to the manner in which the claimed absence of jurisdiction was brought about may be regarded as mere matters of inducement to the main cause of action. Nor does the fact that certain allegations of the complaint are based upon information and belief militate against the sufficiency of the pleading. Because pleadings are meant to be self-serving, it has been held that basing them on hearsay is expressly authorized. Davis v. City of San Diego, 33 Cal.App.2d 190, 193, 91 P.2d 640. Nor was the complaint ambiguous, unintelligible or uncertain. It fully met the requirements of section 426 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[6] We come now to a consideration of respondent's claim that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In effect, the complaint charged that during the trial the judge informed plaintiff's counsel that unless she signed a stipulation to dispose of the community property in a certain manner the court "might not" grant her a decree, and also alleged that the court further insisted that findings be waived, to the end that no appeal might be prosecuted from the interlocutory judgment. This the trial judge certainly had no right to do. The right of appeal is as sacred and inviolable as the right to a trial, and when by judicial oppression such right is violated or vitiated, the guaranteed and substantial rights of a party have been materially affected thereby. The trial judge certainly had no right to advise plaintiff through her counsel, in effect, as appears from the allegations of the complaint, that although plaintiff had established and proved a case entitling her to an interlocutory judgment of divorce on the ground of cruelty, nevertheless such a judgment would not be granted unless the plaintiff stipulated to accept her share of the community property on an amortized plan extending over a period in excess of 23 years, and further that plaintiff waive findings so that an appeal might not be taken from the judgment. The fact that plaintiff's attorney on her behalf agreed to the stipulation does not aid respondent in justifying the means by which such stipulation was brought into being. It is a cardinal rule that an attorney cannot by virtue of his general authority bind his client by any act which amounts to a surrender in whole or in part of any substantial right. 3 Cal.Jur. 667. If the trial judge was convinced by the evidence that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment, the same should have been granted her, and she should have been left free to appeal from that portion of the judgment which divided the community property of the parties, if she so desired. In making the waiver of appeal by plaintiff from any portion of the judgment the price of obtaining a judgment to which she was entitled, the trial judge materially prejudiced a substantial right belonging to plaintiff. The trial of a case should not only be fair in fact, but it should also appear to be fair, and where the contrary appears it shocks the judicial instinct and conscience to allow the judgment to stand. To countenance the destruction of a litigant's fundamental right by a process such as that which appears from the complaint with which we are here concerned would be to validate and recognize a rule that would be most disastrous in its results, so far as order and system in the administration of justice are concerned.

[7, 8] The means by which appellant was compelled to abdicate the rightful exercise of her historic right to appeal constituted an excess of power by the court, and the jurisdiction of the court was thereby overreached. As a consequence thereof, a judgment was rendered (if the allegations of the complaint be true, and we must as the trial court should, in passing upon a demurrer to a pleading, assume the verity thereof) with reference to the division of the community property that was of no force or effect, because the means adopted to compel plaintiff's acquiescence in that portion of the judgment affecting the disposition of the community property transgressed the fundamental right guaranteed every litigant in a court of justice to appeal from a judgment affecting his liberty or his property. As was said in McClatchy v. Superior Court, 119 Cal. 413, 418, 51 P. 696, 698, 39 L.R.A. 691, "Any departure from those recognized and established requirements of law, however close the apparent adherence to mere form in method of procedure, which has the effect to deprive one of a constitutional right, is as much an excess of jurisdiction as where there exists an inceptive lack of power. 'The substance and not the shadow determines the validity of the exercise of the power.' Postal Telegraph, etc., Co. v. Adams, 155 U.S. [688], 689, 698, 15 S.Ct. 268, 360, [39 L.Ed. 311]."

[9, 10] That the broad and flexible powers of a court of equity may be invoked to right the wrong allegedly done appellant here is well established. § 3523, Civ. Code. Living as we do in a world of change, equitable remedies have necessarily and steadily been expanded to meet increasing complexities of such changing times, and no inflexible rule has been permitted to circumscribe the power of equity to do justice. As has been well said, equity has contrived its remedies "so that they shall correspond both to the primary right of the injured party, and to the wrong by which that right has been violated," and "has always preserved the elements of flexibility and expansiveness, so that new ones may be invented, or old ones modified, in order to meet the requirements of every case, and to satisfy the needs of a progressive social condition, in which new primary rights and duties are constantly arising, and new kinds of wrongs are constantly committed." 1 Pom.Eq.Jur., 4th Ed., p. 125, § 111. As was said in Bechtel v. Wier, 152 Cal. 443, 93 P. 75, 77, 15 L.R.A., N.S., 549, "the powers of a court of equity, dealing with the subject-matters within its jurisdiction, are not cribbed or confined by the rigid rules of law. From the very nature of equity a wide play is left to the conscience of the chancellor in formulating his decrees, that justice may be effectually carried out. It is of the very essence of equity that its powers should be so broad as to be capable of dealing with novel conditions." See, also, 10 Cal.Jur., p. 463, § 6, p. 559, § 96. The allegations of the complaint herein present a situation for the application of the well known powers of a court of equity to find a remedy for every wrong.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule defendant Wuest's demurrer and to afford him a reasonable time within which to answer plaintiff's complaint should he be so advised.

WUEST v. WUEST.

Civ. 13549.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 9, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⚷907(3)

On an appeal on the judgment roll alone the appellate court must assume that the trial judge in settling the record on appeal caused to be inserted therein all matters relevant to the ruling to which exception has been made or which will explain the same.

2. Appeal and error ⚷907(3)

On an appeal on the judgment roll alone, where the appellate court was not furnished with any record of what occurred at the hearing other than the order involved, the appellate court would assume that the motion was presented to the trial court and determined upon factual issues raised by the motion and supporting affidavit.

3. Appeal and error ⚷934(1)

Every intendment is in favor of the order or judgment made by the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Lois E. Wuest against William O. Wuest for divorce. From an order refusing to modify the interlocutory judgment of divorce, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Newby & Newby and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cook & Obeji, of Van Nuys, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Plaintiff and defendant are wife and husband. The former instituted an action against the latter for separate maintenance and later, by amendment to her complaint, sought a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. Following trial, an interlocutory judgment of divorce was granted to plaintiff wife and the same was entered May 31, 1940. In her divorce complaint plaintiff sought a division of the community property belonging to the parties. The portion of the interlocutory judgment affecting distribution of the community property, the manner of payment to the wife for her share thereof, as well as the provisions of a stipulation with reference thereto signed by the parties and incorporated in the interlocutory judgment, and the claimed conditions and circumstances which led up to the signing of such stipulation, are set forth in detail in an opinion this day filed, entitled Lois E. Wuest, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. William O. Wuest, Defendant and Respondent, Cal.App., 127 P.2d 934, to which reference is hereby made for a narration thereof.

In April, 1941, prior to the entry of the final judgment of divorce, the wife filed in the superior court a notice of motion by which she sought "an order that the interlocutory decree heretofore entered in the within action, on or about the 31st day of May, 1940 * * * insofar as said interlocutory decree concerns itself with the community rights of the parties hereto, be modified and the rights of the parties in the community property be fixed and determined in pursuance of said interlocutory decree as modified in the following respects:

"(1) That the community property of the parties be sold" and the proceeds be divided between the parties;

(2) That in lieu of a sale, the property be partitioned in kind;

(3) Or in lieu of either of the above, the parties be determined to hold the property as tenants in common in such proportions as the court might deem equitable and just.

On May 9, 1941, the court made its order denying the aforesaid motion of plaintiff to modify the interlocutory judgment. From the order denying her motion plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant contends that the court below denied her motion on the ground that it was without jurisdiction "to do anything whatsoever concerning the interlocutory decree," and her briefs in their entirety are devoted to an argument in support of the claim that by the terms of the interlocutory judgment the court reserved unto itself and possessed jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. Respondent on the other hand contends that the granting or denial of the relief sought by the appellant in the superior court was a matter of fact to be determined by it, and the court's decision on the merits will not therefore be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing that such decision was erroneous.

[1-3] This appeal comes before us on the judgment roll alone. Contained therein is the notice of motion to modify the interlocutory decree and the plaintiff's affidavit in support thereof. The only reference in the clerk's transcript as to what transpired in the trial court following hearing of plaintiff's motion is the following order made by the court on May 9, 1941: "Motion by plaintiff to modify interlocutory decree of divorce heretofore submitted April 18, 1941, is denied." Nowhere in the record on appeal do we find any intimation that the order of the court was based upon a belief that it was without jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. We are not furnished with any record of what transpired at the hearing other than the order of the court just set forth. We must assume that the trial judge in settling the record on appeal caused to be inserted therein all matters relevant to the ruling to which exception has been taken or which will explain the same. In the light of the record before us, we are required to assume that plaintiff's motion was presented to the court and determined upon factual issues raised by plaintiff's motion and supporting affidavit. We cannot indulge in the assumption that such motion was denied on the ground that the court believed it was without jurisdiction in the premises. Every intendment is in favor of the order or judgment made by the trial court, and appellant does not question the correctness of the order if made after consideration of a factual situation, but contends only that the court denied her relief solely because of lack of jurisdiction. The record does not sustain appellant in this contention. Therefore the order must be, and it is, affirmed.

GRIFFIN v. LOS ANGELES CITY HIGH SCHOOL DIST. et al.

Civ.13701.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied Sept. 3, 1942.

1. Schools and school districts ⚿133

A noncertificated high school principal, having been demoted to a high school teacher, could not compel restoration to position as principal and recover principal's salary since under tenure law no person employed in an administrative or supervisory position requiring certification could be classified as a permanent employee other than as a classroom teacher. School Code, § 5.502, as amended by St.1935, p. 1881.

2. Schools and school districts ⚿141(5)

The demotion of a high school principal to the position of high school teacher was not illegal on the ground that principal had not been given the right to a hearing as provided by the rules of the board of education where the rule was applicable to permanent employees and did not apply to principals who had not been accorded tenure, and the action of the board in adopting the rule could not be construed as giving tenure to principals who were not accorded tenure by the general law. School Code, § 5.502, as amended by St.1935, p. 1881.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Clementina De Forrest Griffin against the Los Angeles City High School District and another to compel petitioner's reinstatement as principal in a high school. From a judgment for respondent, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Milton M. Cohen, Arthur E. Briggs, Carl B. Sturzenacker, and Milton M. Cohen, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and W. B. McKesson, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

In this proceeding petitioner asked the lower court to issue a writ of mandate commanding respondent high school district and the Board of Education of the City of Los Angeles to reinstate her as principal in one of the high schools of respondent district. The trial court sustained a demurrer to her petition without leave to amend and petitioner has appealed from the ensuing judgment.

It is alleged in the petition that petitioner for more than 20 years was successfully employed as a principal in the high schools of the respondent district, her last work in that capacity having been performed throughout the school year 1940–41 and that during this entire period her work was not criticized by any superior; that on or about May 2, 1941, the respondent board of education took action by which it preceeded to "demote" her to the position of a high school teacher; that her salary as principal for the school year 1940–41 was $5,100 per year and that other high school principals are being paid the same salaries for the school year 1941–42 as for the school year 1940–41. In addition to asking restoration to her position as principal, petitioner asked for payment of her salary as such principal for the months of the school year 1941–42. She attached to her petition a copy of a rule of the board of education which she claims afforded her the right of a hearing before her assignment to the position of high school teacher and contends that she was improperly denied a hearing before action was taken by the board.

[1] It is conceded that petitioner has not held a city certificate and that her petition does not come within the ruling of Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 P. 1042. In 1921 the Legislature enacted a state-wide teachers' tenure law, which was so amended in 1927, St.1921, p. 1664, St.1927, p. 1913, as to provide that "no person employed in an administrative or supervisory position requiring certification qualifications shall be classified as a permanent employee other than as a classroom teacher." It has been held that tenure was not given to principals by the statewide tenure law. Bland v. Board of Trustees, 67 Cal.App. 784, 228 P. 395; Work v. Central Union H. School Dist., 6 Cal.App. 2d 626, 44 P.2d 1047. In 1929 the School Code was adopted but we find that, rather than giving tenure to principals, section 5.502 provides that no person employed in an administrative or supervisory position requiring certification shall be classified as a permanent employee other than as a classroom teacher. The section specifically provides that a person so employed shall "be classified as and shall become a permanent employee as a classroom teacher." St. 1935, p. 1881. The decision in Anderson v. Board of Education, 126 Cal.App. 514, 15 P.2d 774, 775, 16 P.2d 272, is not of aid to petitioner, for in that case tenure was accorded a principal in the city of San Francisco because of a charter provision applicable only to that city. In ruling in favor of the petitioner in the Anderson case the court said: "In this case we purposely refrain from determining the application of the School Code to the principals in districts outside of San Francisco and confine our judgment to the facts presented in the petition."

[2] Paragraph X of the petition is as follows: "That on or about May 2nd, 1940, by resolution of said Board of Education, said board duly and regularly adopted and enacted a rule and procedure to be applicable to all of the certified personnel of said school district, a copy of which rule is hereto attached, marked, 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this petition." According to the copy of the rule attached to the petition provisions are made for the appointment of committees for the purpose of hearing charges against certificated employees. The action of the board of education in adopting a rule providing for hearings of charges against certificated employees cannot be construed as giving tenure to principals, who are not accorded tenure by the general law. Respondents argue that the rule itself does not give an employee against whom charges may be filed the absolute right to demand a hearing. Consideration of this point would require a lengthy discussion of the elaborate procedure set up in the rules, a discussion which we consider unnecessary in view of our conclusion that the rule has no application to principals. Preceding a statement of the steps to be taken for the hearings provided by the rule we find the heading: "Certificated Personnel. Re: Preliminary Hearing Procedure for Certificated Personnel." Then follows this discussion: "The California School Code provides a procedure for the dismissal of both probationary and permanent certificated employees. When and if this procedure is to be followed, it is essential that a thorough investigation of the facts in each case has been made to warrant the filing of charges against an employee.

* * *" In the steps outlined for the "preliminary hearing" it is provided that charges shall be filed by the assistant superintendent in charge of the school "to which the certificated employee is assigned." It is at once apparent that the rule is applicable to "probationary and permanent certificated employees." Principals are not permanent employees. There is nothing in the rule which gives a principal, who has not been accorded tenure, a right to demand a hearing before any committee referred to in the rule. Petitioner's rights as a classroom teacher are not involved in this proceeding.

BURFORD et al. v. BAKER.

Civ. 13212.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 8, 1942.

1. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

Where plaintiff, who had been treated since August, 1936, for a pituitary gland deficiency and other ailments, received a hip injury causing a noticeable limp, and physician failed to X-ray, and in October, 1938, upon termination of services X-ray revealed a separation of the epiphysis of right femur, in malpractice action, finding that such separation occurred during the time plaintiff was under defendant's care was supported.

2. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

In action for malpractice in treating a hip injury, where X-rays taken after termination of defendant's services revealed an epiphyseal separation, plaintiff was not required to prove conclusively and beyond the possibility of doubt that such separation occurred during the time plaintiff was under defendant physician's care, but it was sufficient to establish a reasonable probability of the origin and existence of the injury during that time, and the court could draw reasonable inferences from the circumstances established and base its findings thereon.

3. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)

After verdict or decision of the court has been fairly rendered, all circumstances of case, together with any reasonable inference which may be drawn therefrom, will be marshaled in support of judgment.

4. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

In action against osteopathic physician for malpractice in treating hip injury as a bruise or arthritis and in failing to have X-rays taken which subsequently revealed a separation of the epiphysis of the right femur, a finding that physician was negligent was supported by substantial evidence.

5. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)

In action for malpractice in treating a hip injury as a bruise or arthritis and directing exercise of the hip without having an X-ray taken which, upon being subsequently taken, revealed a separation of the epiphysis of the femur, evidence was sufficient to establish that physician's negligence in failing to have X-ray taken and in directing exercise of the hip, rather than immobilization, was the proximate cause of the damage suffered by plaintiff.

6. Physicians and surgeons 🔑15

In action for malpractice in treatment of hip injury, where X-ray subsequently taken revealed an epiphyseal separation of femur which physician had not discovered, the fact that a glandular deficiency with which plaintiff was suffering may have caused or contributed to separation would not free physician from liability, since physician was not charged with having caused separation, but with failure to discover and properly treat the injury.

7. Torts 🔑21

One who contributes to damage cannot escape liability because the proportionate contribution may not be accurately measured.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1051(1)

In action for malpractice in treatment of hip injury, overruling of objections to questions asked of plaintiff's expert witness was not reversible error, although the questions were subject to criticism in that certain elements present in plaintiff's case were not included and that proper treatment and diagnosis were not defined, where there was other evidence sufficient to sustain finding, and it was not reasonable to conclude that the court was misled or that any other findings would have been made if the question had been free from criticism.

9. Evidence ⚷506

In action for malpractice in treatment of hip injury in failing to discover and treat an epiphyseal separation of the femur, subsequently revealed by X-rays, permitting an expert to state his opinion that the separation occurred on the day plaintiff received injury in an automobile accident was not invading province of the trier of facts, where testimony was manifestly for the purpose of proving that separation could have existed while plaintiff was under defendant's care.

10. Pleading ⚷237(7)

In action for malpractice in treatment of hip injury, permitting plaintiff at the close of the trial to amend complaint by changing date of termination of defendant's employment to conform to the proof was not an abuse of court's discretion.

11. Physicians and surgeons ⚷18(7)

In action for malpractice in treatment of hip injury in failing to take X-ray of the injury and discover that plaintiff was suffering from an epiphyseal separation of the femur and in failing to properly treat the same, defendant's offer to prove that during the period plaintiff's injury was being treated he caused 41 X-rays to be taken of various other patients was properly rejected as immaterial, since whether defendant believed in the use of X-ray or not or had taken X-rays of other patients was not in issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by George W. Burford and others against Dr. W. Donald Baker to recover damages for the alleged malpractice of defendant. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff named, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Parker & Stanbury and Raymond G. Stanbury, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Desimone and S. L. Kurland, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff commenced this action to recover damages for the malpractice of defendant physician. Defendant has appealed from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in the sum of $7,500. The parents of the minor plaintiff joined with him in the action but no judgment was entered in their favor and they are not parties to the appeal.

Plaintiff, who was a minor of the age of fourteen years at the time of the treatment complained of, for some time had been suffering from a pituitary disturbance which rendered his growth and development abnormal. Defendant, an osteopathic physician and surgeon, became the family physician in August, 1936, and undertook to treat plaintiff for his glandular deficiency. The treatment consisted of frequent injections, which course of treatment was continued until October, 1938, when defendant's services were terminated. In addition to caring for the glandular disturbance defendant also gave medical attention to all other ailments of plaintiff, including the removal of his tonsils, treatment for an attack of appendicitis and care of an injured wrist. On December 20, 1937, plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident, as a result of which he received injuries to his right hip. On the day of the accident plaintiff was taken to defendant's office by his father and for the first time walked with a noticeable limp. Defendant's examination disclosed that plaintiff's hip was painful and reddish blue and swollen in an area about twelve inches in diameter. Plaintiff's father suggested that an X-ray be taken of the injured area but defendant stated that it was unnecessary because the injury was only a bruise or muscle strain and recommended the application of hot towels. The pain and discomfort did not subside under this treatment and plaintiff returned to defendant a week or two later, but defendant stated he could do nothing for him. Plaintiff's condition failed to improve and each time he went to defendant to be treated for his glandular condition he walked with an obvious limp and complained of the pain in his hip and leg. On several occasions defendant stated that arthritis had developed and advised plaintiff to exercise his leg as much as possible and to refrain from favoring the leg. Despite several requests by plaintiff's father, no X-rays of the injured hip were taken by defendant. Plaintiff continued to complain of intense pain and informed defendant that he could not put on or take off his right shoe or stocking and that he could not walk steadily. Several light treatments were administered by defendant during the period plaintiff remained in his care but no other treatment was given. Defendant insisted that the leg should be exercised and that plaintiff should be prevented from forming the habit of favoring the right leg.

Plaintiff went to a Dr. Bailey in July, 1938, for relief from a pain which had developed in his back and informed Dr. Bailey of the history of the case and of the fact that defendant was treating his hip joint for arthritis. Dr. Bailey gave plaintiff osteopathic, manipulative treatments designed to relieve the back ache, but apparently did nothing for the hip injury. In October, 1938, an X-ray was taken of plaintiff's right hip and it was then discovered for the first time that he was suffering from a separation of the epiphysis of the right femur. Dr. Bailey attempted to reduce the separation, or fracture, as it was sometimes referred to by the witnesses, and placed plaintiff's right hip and leg in a cast. After the removal of the cast plaintiff was required to wear a built-up shoe and to walk on crutches. Dr. Bailey's treatment was unavailing, however, because the injured hip joint had already ankylosed, making an abnormal union. Plaintiff will, according to his experts, be crippled for life and, from time to time, will have painful spasms and contractions of his muscles. Defendant's right leg is one inch shorter than his left leg and there is a permanent loss of motion in his right hip. As a secondary result of his condition, he has developed a lateral curvature of the spine, known as scoliosis.

[1-3] It is contended by defendant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the court's finding to the effect that the epiphyseal separation took place during the time when plaintiff was under defendant's care. It was established by expert testimony that persons of plaintiff's type, i. e., the "fat boy" type, who are suffering from a pituitary gland deficiency, are liable to suffer an epiphyseal separation and that such a separation may be brought about with or without trauma of any character, but that trauma, such as that suffered by plaintiff, could have caused the separation. The expert witnesses further testified that the primary, most noticeable symptom of an epiphyseal separation is a limp. It was proved that immediately following the accident plaintiff developed a noticeable limp which was promptly brought to defendant's attention, and that he complained of pain in his hip, which condition continued during all of the time he was under defendant's care. After examining the X-rays of plaintiff's injured hip, numerous expert witnesses gave their opinions as to the approximate time when the separation first occurred, fixing the time of the origin of the injury as being from four to twelve months prior to October 10, 1938, the date on which the X-rays were taken. This evidence, when considered with other circumstances in the case, was sufficient to establish a reasonable probability of the origin and existence of the injury during the time that plaintiff was under defendant's care. Plaintiff was not required to prove conclusively and beyond the possibility of doubt that the epiphyseal separation occurred during that time. The court could draw reasonable inferences from the circumstances established and base its findings thereon. It is established that: "After the verdict of a jury [or decision of the court] has been fairly rendered, all the circumstances of the case, together with every reasonable inference which may be drawn therefrom, will be marshaled in support of the judgment. Because of the very subtleness of the origin and development of disease, less certainty is required in proof thereof." Sim v. Weeks, 7 Cal.App.2d 28, 40, 45 P.2d 350, 356; Barham v. Widing, 210 Cal. 206, 215, 291 P. 173.

[4] The finding that defendant was negligent is supported by substantial evidence. Several medical experts testified in effect that an osteopathic physician and surgeon who possessed the ordinary skill and knowledge of similar practitioners in the community in which defendant practiced, would under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence have had an X-ray taken of plaintiff's injured hip soon after plaintiff first developed the limp and complained of pain in his hip; that upon discovering the epiphyseal separation, such practitioner would have treated it by reducing the fracture, or separation, and would have created immobilization by applying a cast thus protecting the injured member from weight-bearing. Not only did defendant fail to have an X-ray taken, but he also failed to immobilize the injured hip. Instead, he directed plaintiff to exercise the hip as much as possible.

[5] Defendant argues that even if he was negligent, there is no evidence to establish that his negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Specifically, it is argued that there is no evidence to prove that proper diagnosis and treatment would have produced any result different from that which was shown to have existed at the time of trial. In support of his position defendant relies upon the testimony of some of the medical experts to the effect that plaintiff's glandular deficiency produced a calcium shortage in his bones and was a predisposing factor in the epiphyseal separation; that the end result in this case, as disclosed by the X-rays, was a composite consequence of various factors which were inherent in the preexisting disease, or glandular disturbance. We must, however, accept as true all evidence which is favorable to plaintiff and which supports the questioned finding, disregarding all evidence in conflict therewith. On behalf of plaintiff an expert witness testified that in case of a fracture or separation of the femoral epiphysis any weight-bearing or exercise of the injured member would tend to twist the head and neck of the femur and would be very detrimental; that upon discovery of such a separation rapid reduction and immobilization greatly enhance the probability of a good result; and where, as in this case, the patient has attempted to walk and perform the ordinary functions of life for ten months before the separation is discovered, the chances for success of attempted reduction and immobilization are "not so good." A physician testified that the destruction of the bone and distortion of the joint, as disclosed by the X-rays, was chiefly due to premature weight-bearing. Another expert testified that if the separated epiphysis had been recognized and adequate treatment instituted, particularly relief of weight-bearing, little or no ankylosis, narrowing of the joint space or shortening of the head or neck of the femur would have occurred; that deformity does not occur where proper treatment is instituted shortly after the fracture or separation and that the end result appearing from the X-rays in this case would probably not have appeared if early recognition of the condition had occurred and adequate treatment been instituted. One of defendant's experts was asked by defendant's counsel: "If a young man of Robert Buford's age were to have separation of the epiphysis in the upper femur as he did, and were to walk around on it without any care or support, can you tell us what effect, if any, it would have on him so far as the formation of callus is concerned at the site of the separation?" The witness replied: "It would eventually unite, but there would be more distortion in relation of the hip to the neck—more deformity." When asked his opinion as to the cause of the destruction of the bone in the head and neck of the femur, another expert testified: "My opinion is that this boy was permitted to walk upon his right leg, that thereby it would cause more or less of a wearing or destruction of the fragmented end of the neck of the femur, which would cause shortening of the bone." The testimony is sufficient to sustain the court's finding that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the damage suffered by plaintiff for which an award was given.

The facts of this case bear a striking similarity to the facts in Rankin v. Mills, 207 Cal. 438, 278 P. 1044. The Rankin case involved an action to recover for defendant's malpractice in failing to diagnose (no X-ray was taken) and treat plaintiff's fractured hip. It was proved that as a result of the failure to treat the injury the bone had made an abnormal, fibrous union, the leg was shortened and it was too late to secure a bony union. Evidence was introduced on behalf of defendant to the effect that due to the age of plaintiff, a bony union was very unlikely under any form of treatment and that in most cases such a fracture would result in the patient's becoming crippled for life regardless of the treatment used. In affirming the judgment in favor of plaintiff the court accepted testimony of plaintiff's expert witness to the effect that the end result would not have been the same if the fracture had been properly treated.

[6, 7] It is argued that the finding as to proximate cause cannot be sustained for an additional reason. Defendant contends that since plaintiff's glandular deficiency might have caused the epiphyseal separation without the intervention of any trauma and since the end result could have been the combined result of several factors, there is no proof as to what proportion of the total damage was caused by his negligence. This contention cannot be sustained, for defendant was not charged with having caused the epiphyseal separation, recovery being sought only for the damages resulting from his negligent failure to discover and treat the separation. The chief importance of the precise cause of the separation lies in the fact that it might be shown to prove that the separation occurred while plaintiff was under defendant's care. The fact that the glandular deficiency or other factors may have contributed to the ultimate damage suffered by plaintiff cannot free defendant from liability. "One who contributes to damage cannot escape liability because the proportionate contribution may not be accurately measured." City of Oakland v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 47 Cal.App.2d 444, 118 P.2d 328, 331.

[8] The action of the trial court in overruling defendant's objections to questions asked of plaintiff's expert witness Dr. Herbert Judson is assigned as error. The witness was asked if he had seen cases of the separation of the epiphysis in boys between 12 and 16 years of age, overweight, and suffering from glandular disturbances and what the effect of proper treatment and proper diagnosis had been in those cases. The question was subject to criticism in that certain elements present in plaintiff's case were not included and for the reason that proper treatment and proper diagnosis were not defined. However, there was other substantial evidence properly admitted which was sufficient to sustain the findings of the court. It is not reasonable to conclude that the court was in anywise misled or that any other findings would have been made if the question had been free from criticism.

[9] It is next contended that in permitting another of plaintiff's experts to state his opinion as to the time when the epiphyseal separation occurred, which he stated to be on the day of the automobile accident, the witness was allowed to invade the province of the court by testifying to the ultimate fact in issue. Defendant has not cited any authority which holds that an expert witness may not state his opinion, based on proven facts, as to the time when an injury occurred. The questioned testimony was manifestly introduced for the purpose of proving that the separation could have existed while plaintiff was under defendant's care. The court did not err in admitting it.

[10] At the conclusion of the trial plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint by changing the date of the termination of defendant's employment from July, 1938, to October, 1938. It is now contended that there was no evidence to justify the amendment. The record discloses ample evidence that defendant continued to treat plaintiff until October, 1938. The court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the amendment.

[11] The action of the trial court in rejecting defendant's offer to prove that during the period from December 20, 1937, to February 1, 1938, he caused forty-one X-rays to be taken of various other patients, is assigned as error. Whether defendant believed in the use of X-rays or had taken X-rays of other patients was not in issue. The proffered testimony was therefore not material and was properly excluded. The fact that defendant may have exercised ordinary care by taking X-rays of forty-one other patients has no bearing on the issue of negligence in the present case and cannot controvert the conclusive proof that he failed to take an X-ray of plaintiff's hip.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 10, 1942.
Hearing Denied Sept. 3, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑188

Whether a wife, against whom her husband has recovered an interlocutory divorce decree based upon her cruelty, is entitled to a family allowance upon husband's death within the statutory year is not determined by the time or cause of an earlier separation, since it cannot be presumed that separation was without justification on the part of the aggrieved spouse and by virtue of the interlocutory judgment the spouses were living separate by agreement.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑188

Surviving wife became "widow" on husband's death, notwithstanding that interlocutory divorce decree had been granted prior to his death. Probate Code, § 680.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Widow".

3. Executors and administrators 🔑188

A wife, against whom her husband had recovered an interlocutory divorce decree based upon her cruelty, is not entitled to a family allowance upon the husband's death within the statutory year, where the decree found her to be at fault, since the husband was then no longer liable for support.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑188

In determining status of spouses at time of husband's death as to whether there was then a family and whether husband was under obligation to support the wife, recourse may be had to the judgment roll in the divorce case, where interlocutory judgment of divorce had been entered.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Joe Ruiz, deceased, wherein Mary E. Ruiz filed a petition for family allowance which was granted, and Francis Cutting, executor, and others filed motion to vacate the order. From an order which vacated the earlier order granting the allowance, Mary E. Ruiz appeals.

Order affirmed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

O. C. Parkinson, of Stockton, for appellant.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

The appellant Mary E. Ruiz prosecutes this appeal from an order which vacated an earlier order granting her a family allowance of $150 per month. She and Joseph B. Ruiz were married on October 26, 1938, and on February 7, 1939, they separated. She instituted a suit for separate maintenance against him for extreme cruelty and he filed therein a cross-complaint for divorce alleging extreme cruelty. The case was tried, findings were made, and on June 21, 1940, an interlocutory judgment of divorce was awarded to the husband from which no appeal was taken. The findings negatived the wife's allegations of cruelty and found to be true the allegations of cruelty contained in the husband's cross-complaint.

On March 17, 1941, the husband died. On May 16, 1941, the appellant's ex parte petition for a family allowance was granted. On June 5, 1941, the executor joined with two residuary devisees and legatees in a motion to vacate the order, which motion was granted on August 15, 1941, and this appeal was taken.

The appellant states the question involved as follows: "Does a wife who has left her husband's house against her will upon his express order to get out and stay out lose her right to a family allowance from his estate by reason of an intervening interlocutory decree of divorce in his favor upon the ground of mental cruelty, no final decree having been entered, no agreement ever made by the wife to waive right to support, and the husband having died less than a year after entry of the interlocutory decree?"

[1] The first few words of the statement just quoted sound the keynote of the appellant's position on this appeal, namely, that the separation was against the wife's will and because of the husband's "express order to get out and stay out." Throughout her briefs the appellant stresses and reiterates the argument that the separation was caused by the decedent husband. She alleged in her complaint that the separation took place on June 19, 1939; this was denied by the husband, who pleaded that it took place on February 7, 1939, and the court found with him. Some of the acts of cruelty may have been before that date but some of them are definitely found to have taken place after that date, which circumstance makes no difference. 9 Cal.Jur. 661, § 33; see, also, Stitt v. Stitt, 8 Cal.2d 450, 452, 65 P.2d 1297, 1298, where it is said: "In the absence of allegations and proof, it cannot be presumed that the separation was without justification on the part of the aggrieved spouse." Moreover, it is settled law that the spouses were "by virtue of the interlocutory judgment, living separate by agreement." London G. & A. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 181 Cal. 460, 466, 184 P. 864, 867, followed in Stauter v. Carithers, 185 Cal. 160, 196 P. 37, 9 Cal.Jur. 758, § 109. The earlier separation, then, whenever it was, and whatever the cause, is of no legal significance.

The question, stripped of this collateral issue of separation, is whether a wife, against whom her husband has recovered an interlocutory judgment based upon her cruelty, is entitled to a family allowance upon the husband's death within the statutory year.

[2] Section 680 of the Probate Code reads as follows: "The widow and minor children are entitled to such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for their maintenance according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate * * *." The appellant is, of course, the decedent's widow (In re Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 P. 320) and she has no property of her own, and no income; she is therefore within the letter of section 680. On that claim of an absolute statutory right to family allowance she stands, and from that premise she argues that the denial of the family allowance is sheer judicial legislation. However, it is the function of the courts to ascertain and declare legislative intent, and with respect to the intent of this particular provision (formerly § 1466, Code Civ.Proc.) the Supreme Court over fifty years ago had this to say in In re Noah's Estate, 73 Cal. 583, 589, 15 P. 287, 290, 2 Am.St.Rep. 829: "We also think that, in enacting section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the legislature had in contemplation the ordinary case where 'the parties to the marriage relation live together until death severs the tie.' The letter of the statute may cover other cases. We are not to be understood as saying that, in every instance where the husband and wife have separated, the widow should be denied an allowance. * * *" (Emphasis ours.)

The judgment herein made no provision for the support or maintenance of the wife, and indeed it could not have done so, for it had been awarded to the husband for the wife's fault. In re Nielsen, 19 Cal.App.2d 305, 65 P.2d 360. Thus it is obvious that appellant now insists on her right to this family allowance despite the fact that for nine months preceding the husband's death he had been freed from all obligation to support her. See In re Noah's Estate, 73 Cal. 583, 588, 15 P. 287, 2 Am.St.Rep. 829, supra.

[3] The appellant argues that separation does not destroy the right to a family allowance, or, to put it another way, the right "is not conditioned upon her having lived in a family relation with her husband at the time of his death." It was so held in Re Estate of Gould, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146, 147, where the interlocutory judgment awarded part of the community property to the wife and part to the husband "free and clear of all claim of the defendant [wife]." The husband died just a week after the interlocutory judgment, and the wife was granted a family allowance. It was claimed, that because of the separation—which had continued for many years—there was no family at the time of the death, and that the award to the husband of such remaining community property free and clear of all claim of the wife, destroyed her right to a family allowance, but it was held otherwise. However, it must be borne in mind that in that case the judgment had been awarded to the wife for the fault of the husband. In Re Estate of Parkinson, 193 Cal. 354, 224 P. 453, also relied upon by appellant, a family allowance was upheld. The wife had been separated from her husband for many years. He had sued her for divorce in Michigan, but had lost. Later she obtained a decree against him for separate maintenance. He disposed of his estate by will to the exclusion of his wife. It will be observed, again, that the court had determined that the fault was the husband's. Indeed at the time of his death the decree in the separate maintenance case obligated the husband to support the wife. Another case relied upon by appellant is In re Estate of Henningsen, 199 Cal. 103, 247 P. 1082, where the Gould and Parkinson cases are followed. There the spouses had separated about three months before the wife's death. It was held that separation did not bar the surviving spouse —in that case, the husband—from asserting his right to a probate homestead. The question of fault was not adjudicated, for no suit had been brought for divorce. In Re Estate of Ehler, 115 Cal.App. 403, 1 P.2d 546, the wife was granted a family allowance. She had commenced a suit for divorce against her husband, who died while it was pending. There had been no adjudication as to fault. In re Estate of Hale, 117 Cal.App. 545, 4 P.2d 263, is substantially the same as the Ehler case. In both cases the husband was paying temporary support to the wife under a court order at the time of his death. No case has been cited by appellant holding that where there has been an adjudication fixing a spouse's guilt, such spouse is entitled, in spite of such adjudication, to a family allowance. On the contrary, In re Estate of Fulton, 15 Cal.App.2d 202, 59 P.2d 508, 510, holds that where a wife voluntarily abandoned her husband under conditions rendering him no longer liable for her support, and an interlocutory decree had been granted to him on the ground of her desertion, she lost her statutory right as a widow to a probate homestead. The comprehensive review in that opinion of the authorities on this general subject renders an extended discussion of them herein wholly unnecessary. It is difficult to find any distinction between that case and this. There the husband obtained the judgment on the ground of wilful desertion; here he obtained it on the ground of extreme cruelty. In both cases the court adjudicated the fault to be on the wife's side, and in both the court held that the marriage should be dissolved under conditions rendering the husband no longer liable for the wife's support. In the Fulton case the court says that in its opinion "the principles of law that are determinative * * * are laid down in Re Estate of Miller, 158 Cal. 420, 111 P. 255, 256 * * *." With this we agree. In the Miller case an order setting apart to the widow an estate under $1,500 in value was reversed because the court had shut out evidence designed to show that the wife had abandoned the decedent. The Miller case is quoted extensively in the Fulton case, supra, at pages 205–207 of 15 Cal.App.2d, 59 P.2d 508, and from such quotation it is clear that the court deemed crucial the status of the parties at the time of the decedent's death. The purpose of such inquiry is to determine whether there existed in fact a family relationship as defined In re Noah's Estate, supra, that is, whether the surviving spouse claiming post-mortem support out of the estate had been, to quote In re Noah's Estate, "in the receipt or in law entitled to demand of deceased a maintenance before his death."

[4] There can be no serious question that, in determining the status of the spouses at the time of the husband's death—whether, in other words, there was then a "family" and whether the husband was then under any obligation to support the wife—recourse may be had to the judgment-roll in the divorce case and that it, indeed, should be the sole source of information. Manifestly no higher, better, or more dependable evidence is obtainable. In Re Estate of Fulton, supra, in referring to the interlocutory judgment of divorce, the court said: "The judgment has become final, and this court is bound thereby." See, also, In re Estate of Breitter, 69 Cal.App. 424, 231 P. 351 (cited, by the way, by appellant), and Borg v. Borg, 25 Cal.App.2d 25, 76 P.2d 218, and Overell v. Superior Court, 29 Cal.App.2d 418, 84 P.2d 789.

The notice of motion for an order vacating the earlier order granting the family allowance was based upon the ground that the first order had been made "as a result of mistake, inadvertence, misapprehension and fraud on the part of said petitioner." In fairness to the appellant it should be said that the petition for family allowance showed on its face that the interlocutory decree had been granted to the decedent-husband against the petitioner-wife, and the record shows that the file in the divorce suit was produced before the judge who made the order, who read the findings and judgment and discussed the matter with appellant's counsel. No fraud, therefore, is attributable to the appellant.

For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 12092.

Executors and administrators ⇨188
Homestead ⇨141(1)

A wife, against whom husband has recovered an interlocutory judgment of divorce based upon her cruelty, is not entitled to a family allowance, the probate homestead, or assignment of personal property exempt from execution, since the judgment that the marriage be dissolved was based on the fault of the wife which rendered the husband no longer liable for her support. Probate Code, §§ 660, 680.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James M. Allen, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Robert E. Egeline, deceased, wherein Mazie Egeline filed petition for family allowance, the setting apart to her of the probate homestead, and of certain personal property exempt from execution, opposed by Wm. G. Hagelstein, as administrator with the will annexed. From orders denying her petition, petitioner appeals.

Orders affirmed.

Gerald L. Shannon, of Mount Shasta, for appellant.

Tebbe & Correia, of Yreka, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from orders denying the petitions of Mazie Egeline for (a) a family allowance, (b) the setting apart to her of a probate homestead, and (c) the setting apart to her of certain personal property exempt from execution.

The decedent, Robert E. Egeline, and the appellant Mazie Egeline, had been married for some years. In 1937 he filed a complaint for divorce against her. They were already separated, and summons was served upon the wife by publication. She defaulted, and on April 5, 1938, an interlocutory judgment was awarded to the husband on the ground of her extreme cruelty from which no appeal was taken. On March 16, 1939, the husband died.

As in Re Estate of Ruiz, Cal.App., 127 P.2d 945, just decided, the appellant is, of course, the decedent's widow, and the record shows that she has no income except that produced by her own labor; she is therefore within the letter of sections 660 and 680 of the Probate Code.

In this case a property settlement agreement was entered into the day after the hearing of the case, wherein the community property therein inventoried (with the exception of certain articles of wearing apparel and of personal adornment assigned to the wife), was transferred to the husband as his separate property. This was followed by a deed from wife to husband quitclaiming the same property. The agreement expressly provided for a separation of the parties. The interlocutory judgment approved and confirmed the settlement.

The appellant states the two questions involved herein as follows:

"1. Does a property settlement in which no specific waiver of widow's rights appear, forfeit the rights of the widow to a widow's allowance, probate homestead, and the setting aside of exempt property?

"2. Can a finding in a judgment in a divorce action, in which the defendant was served by publication, bind the defendant in a probate proceeding in which the defendant in the divorce action is the widow petitioning for a family allowance, setting aside the probate homestead, and the setting aside of exempt property?"

With respect to the first question: The language of the agreement is that the community property therein transferred to the husband "shall belong to the said husband as his personal estate and free from all rights of the said wife." It is not necessary to answer or decide this question for we are satisfied that the answer to the second—which must be in the affirmative—is decisive of this appeal. The respondent relies upon In re Estate of Fulton, 15 Cal.App.2d 202, 59 P.2d 508, cited and discussed by us in Re Estate of Ruiz, supra. In the Ruiz case, wherein the Fulton case was followed, we held that where it had been judicially determined that the marriage should be dissolved under conditions rendering the husband no longer liable for the wife's support, the surviving wife—although technically within the letter of section 680, Probate Code—was not entitled to a family allowance. Here, as in the Ruiz case, the husband was awarded the decree on the ground of his wife's extreme cruelty. The two cases are not distinguishable.

For the reasons and upon the authorities appearing in Re Estate of Ruiz, Cal.App., 127 P.2d 945, and in Re Estate of Fulton, supra, the three orders appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

MORTIMER v. YOUNG et al.

Civ. 13065.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 8, 1942.

1. Execution 🔑222(1)

Where plaintiff's cause of action against defendants was levied upon and sold under execution issued on judgment awarded to defendants for costs of appeal from an order granting defendants new trial, vacating execution sale on ground that plaintiff had no notice of sale was improper where plaintiff had made no demand that notice of sale be given to her by registered mail as provided by statute and in absence of such demand, no obligation rested on any one to give her notice. Code Civ.Proc. § 692a.

2. Execution 🔑251(2)

Where plaintiff's cause of action for damages for fraud was levied upon and sold under execution issued on judgment awarded to defendants for costs of appeal from order granting defendants new trial, setting aside sale on ground of palpable inadequacy of price and irregularity was not proper where the cause of action was of doubtful value, notice of such sale was sent to plaintiff although not required and dealings between plaintiff and defendants' counsel showed no obligation to delay or give further notice. Code Civ.Proc. § 692a.

3. Execution 🔑47, 132

A cause of action for a tort, not reduced to judgment, is not a "debt" within meaning of garnishment statute and such cause of action may be levied upon and sold on execution and the proper mode of levy is by notice to the person asserting the tort claim as owner thereof, since it is a "thing in action" within provision of statute for selling "things in action" of judgment debtor on execution. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 542, 691.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Debt" and "Thing in Action".

4. Execution 🔑3

The 1941 amendment to statute providing that no cause of action or judgment as such shall be subject to levy or sale on execution has no application to sales which took place before the act took effect. Code Civ.Proc. § 688.

5. Execution 🔑255

Where plaintiff's cause of action against defendants was levied upon and sold under execution issued on judgment awarded to defendants for costs of appeal from an order granting defendants new trial, and after satisfying judgment for costs the surplus was paid to plaintiff, in subsequent proceedings to vacate the sale plaintiff should be required as a condition of relief to return surplus to the purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Alice Mortimer against George D. B. Young and another wherein a judgment of nonsuit as to one defendant and order granting other defendant new trial were affirmed on appeal and upon obtaining judgment for costs of appeal, defendants had execution issued and levied on plaintiff's cause of action by service upon plaintiff and county clerk under which the causes of action were sold to one L. E. Alimisis. From orders denying motion of Alimisis to be substituted as plaintiff and sustaining a countermotion of plaintiff to vacate the execution sale, Alimisis appeals.

Orders reversed.

L. E. Alimisis, of Los Angeles, in pro. per., for appellant.

Y. B. Arsen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought this action against the defendants Young and Rodes and obtained judgment against Rodes, but was nonsuited as to Young. The trial court then granted a new trial to Rodes. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of nonsuit and the order granting a new trial. Both were affirmed and the defendants were awarded their costs of that appeal. See Mortimer v. Young, 1940, 37 Cal.App.2d 164, 98 P.2d 1061. The defendants had execution issued on their judgment for costs of appeal and levied it on the plaintiff's causes of action in this action by service of the execution and notice upon plaintiff and the county clerk. Following this levy the causes of action were sold to L. E. Alimisis, the appellant on the present appeal. Alimisis made a motion to be substituted as plaintiff herein and plaintiff made a counter motion to vacate the execution sale. Orders were made granting the plaintiff's motion and denying that of Alimisis, from which the latter appeals.

[1] The grounds of plaintiff's motion to vacate the sale, as stated in the notice thereof, were "that said sale was optained by fraud, misrepresentations, of the defendants and that no notice of such or any sale was ever given or served upon the plaintiff and that the plaintiff ha*ve* had no information or knowledge o*r* said sale or any sales of plaintiff's interests in said action, and for the further ground that said sale is oppressive, totally inadequate and inequitable." The motion was supported by plaintiff's affidavit that she had no notice of the sale until after it occurred and hence was not present. This fact does not show irregularity or unfairness. Under the provisions of section 692a of the Code of Civil Procedure she might have required notice of the sale to be given to her by registered mail, but her affidavit does not show that she did this. Unless she so demanded notice, no obligation rested on anyone to give her such notice, and her lack of it is no ground for vacating the sale, especially where a stranger to the proceedings is the purchaser. Rauer v. Hertweck, 1917, 175 Cal. 278, 282, 165 P. 946; Bock v. Losekamp, 1919, 179 Cal. 674, 179 P. 516.

[2] Plaintiff now defends the orders appealed from on the rule laid down in Odell v. Cox, 1907, 151 Cal. 70, 74, 90 P. 194, 196, that while an execution sale will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price, yet "where the inadequacy is palpable and great, very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to authorize the granting of the relief sought." The difficulty with plaintiff's argument is that the factors necessary to the application of this rule do not appear here. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for fraud and recovered on the first trial $3,210 from defendant Rodes. The new trial was granted for insufficiency of the evidence, and there was evidence tending to show that plaintiff suffered little damage, even if defrauded. The causes of action sold for $110. This is doubtful, as a showing that the price was grossly inadequate. But if it can be regarded as sufficient for that purpose, yet there was no evidence at all of unfairness or irregularity. On the contrary, it appears that advance notice of the sale was sent to plaintiff, in the manner provided by section 692a of the Code of Civil Procedure, above cited, although legally she was not entitled to it, and that it failed of its purpose only because she was absent from home and for that reason did not receive it in time. During the hearing plaintiff's counsel expressed a desire to become a witness and testify to certain facts which he now urges upon us as if they showed fraud or unfairness. He did not in fact testify at all. If the facts stated by him as those to which he would testify are to be regarded as before the court, they were merely that "some time in September" (the execution sale was on September 23) defendants' counsel called him by telephone and said, "Say, are you going to pay this judgment or not?" to which plaintiff's counsel replied, "Oh, why don't you wait until the case comes on for trial?", this being "very soon," and then defendants' counsel said, "No, I think you had better pay this judgment," to which plaintiff's counsel said, "Well, I think I can get in touch with my client and get the money for you. You are entitled to the judgment." Plaintiff's counsel tried to notify his client but failed to reach her. He did not say he communicated this fact to opposing counsel or asked for further time to pay. Nothing fraudulent or unfair appears here. Apparently defendants' counsel tried to get payment without execution, but failing in that and hearing nothing more from plaintiff's counsel, proceeded with an execution sale. The conversation as reported does not show any obligation resting on defendants' counsel to delay or to give further notice of his action in the matter.

[3, 4] One of the reasons urged on the trial court for granting the plaintiff's motion to vacate the sale was that her cause of action here was not subject to sale on execution, in support of which Sunset Realty Co. v. Dadmun, 1939, 34 Cal.App.2d Supp. 733, 88 P.2d 947, was cited, and this argument appears to have been given much weight by that court. The case at bar, however, is distinguishable from that just cited, and from the various other decisions therein cited and relied on, in that all of them concerned "debts," upon which levy had been made by giving notice to the persons owing the debts, and it was held that such debt, or in some of the cases the judgment evidencing it, could not be sold on execution. The mode of levy above mentioned is commonly called a garnishment, and it is limited in its application, by the terms of subdivision 6 of section 542 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to "debts." A cause of action for a tort, not reduced to judgment, is not a debt, within the meaning of such a statute. Johnson v. Lamping, 1867, 34 Cal. 293, 299; Arp v. Blake, 1923, 63 Cal.App. 362, 372, 218 P. 773; see, also, note in 93 A.L.R. 1088; 28 C.J. 137. In the case at bar the plaintiff's cause of action was for a tort, and the levy was made by notifying, not the supposed debtor, but the plaintiff herself. On these facts the case is substantially like Everts v. Will S. Fawcett Co., 1937, 24 Cal.App.2d 213, 74 P.2d 815, 816, where it was held that a cause of action for tort may be levied upon and sold on execution and that the proper mode of levy is that resorted to here, that is, a notice given to the person asserting the tort claim as owner thereof. This, the court held, is in accordance with the provisions of section 542 of the Code of Civil Procedure that a levy on property not capable of manual delivery, other than a debt, is to be made by giving notice to the person having such property "in his possession, or under his control," that person being, in the case of a cause of action, the plaintiff who is suing on it. A cause of action for tort is, as held in the case last cited, a "thing in action." It is therefore within the provision of section 691 of the Code of Civil Procedure for "selling the things in action" of the judgment debtor on execution. We see no good reason for refusing to follow Everts v. Will S. Fawcett Co., supra. It is plainly applicable here, and the case of Sunset Realty Co. v. Dadmun, 1939, supra, 34 Cal.App.2d Supp. 733, 88 P.2d 947, on which plaintiff relied below, distinguishes itself from the Everts case on the ground that in the Dadmun case the attempted levy was on a debt. The 1941 amendment of section 688 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that "no cause of action nor judgment as such, shall be subject to levy or sale on execution," took effect after the sale in question and is not applicable here. Under it, apparently no such case can arise in the future.

[5] The sheriff's return shows that after satisfying the judgment and costs he had a surplus of $4.87, which he paid to plaintiff, and apparently she still has it. If the court should on further proceedings again vacate the sale, it should require plaintiff, as a condition of relief, to return this amount to the purchaser. Stanley v. Westover, 1928, 93 Cal.App. 97, 110, 269 P. 468.

MILLER v. WALDEN et al.

Civ. 2740.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 9, 1942.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 6, 1942.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1942.

1. Bills and notes ⊂⇒103(1)

Where trial court did not find that payee of note representing money converted from payee or converter had made untrue statements to converter's relatives, the makers, or suppressed any true fact or acted to deceive makers and note was executed and security posted in belief that payee would refrain from instituting criminal proceedings, but there was no agreement to that effect, makers were not entitled to rescind on ground of fraud.

2. Bills and notes ⊂⇒104

Where there was no arrest or confinement of converter of money from payee, but note was executed and security posted by converter's relatives in the belief that payee would refrain from criminal proceedings, although there was no agreement to that effect, makers were not entitled to rescind on ground of "duress". Civ.Code, § 1570.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Duress".

3. Contracts ⊂⇒95(3)

Under statute defining "duress" as unlawful confinement of a party or his husband or wife, or fraudulent confinement lawful in form, and "menace" as a threat of duress or of injury to the character of the previously specified persons, duress and menace arise by virtue of unlawful action, and menace is made out by an unlawful threat which must be more than some statement or act from which the guilty party becomes apprehensive of prosecution and a threat to exercise a valid legal right is not duress. Civ.Code, §§ 1569, 1570.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Menace".

4. Bills and notes ⚷104

Where payee of note had employed an attorney, consulted the district attorney, and demanded payment of money converted from him but made no threats before posting of security and execution of note representing the money by converter's relatives in the belief that payee would refrain from instituting criminal proceedings, but there was no agreement to that effect, makers were not entitled to rescind on ground of "menace" under statute defining menace as a threat of duress or of injury to character. Civ.Code, §§ 1569, 1570.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by Herman Miller against Elton A. Walden and another on a note and to foreclose certain collateral security, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint against Lawrence Holzman, as trustee of Forrest C. Walden, a bankrupt, and as trustee of Bertha M. Murphy, a bankrupt. From an adverse judgment and order vacating a judgment previously rendered, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

J. L. Hofflund, of San Diego, for appellant.

Sloane & Steiner and Weinberger & Miller, all of San Diego, for respondents.

WEST, Justice pro tem.

Two appeals are involved in this matter. One is an appeal from a judgment in favor of Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden, who were defendants and cross-complainants, and in favor of Lawrence Holzman, Trustee, cross-defendant, and the other is an appeal from an order of the trial court, granting a motion to vacate a judgment previously made in favor of appellant, and entering a new judgment against such appellant. The appeals are taken on the judgment roll alone.

The facts as they appear are as follows:

Bertha M. Murphy, since about the year 1930, was the owner of all of the assets of the Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company, which company dealt in mortgage loans and acted as a mortgage broker, using as its capital therein monies furnished by Mrs. Murphy to Forrest C. Walden, who was the manager and operator of the organization.

The true nature of the business relation which existed on December 22, 1938, between Bertha M. Murphy and Forrest C. Walden is not entirely clear. It was found that Mrs. Murphy was the owner of all of the assets of the Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company on said date, and for some time thereafter, and that Forrest C. Walden operated the organization through the use of assets loaned to him by Mrs. Murphy, and that he was the sole manager, but without any actual ownership of the assets used in the business; nevertheless, other findings made clearly indicate that when the adjudications in bankruptcy of Mrs. Murphy and of Forrest C. Walden were made, both of said parties were treated as though each of them, individually, were doing business as Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company and Murphy Realty Company. It seems apparent that no point of such inconsistency was made in the trial court, in view of a stipulation signed by counsel for all parties that the findings prepared in such form and containing such apparent inconsistency might be signed by the trial court in the form as presented.

Appellant Miller had invested funds with the company over a period of years, subsequent to 1930. He had a total credit of $6,500 with the company, which sum Forrest C. Walden, without the knowledge or consent of appellant, had converted to his own use. Appellant from time to time demanded of Walden the return of this sum, and finally notified the office of the district attorney of San Diego County. Walden was called into the district attorney's office and was interrogated with respect to the money. He became impressed with the fear that Miller would cause criminal prosecution to be started, and thereupon communicated with Respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden and solicited their assistance in extricating himself from his difficulty. The trial court found that at no time did appellant or anyone on his behalf expressly agree or state that if the obligation owing him from Forrest C. Walden were paid or secured, he would refrain from instituting criminal proceedings. It was found that appellant by his words and conduct caused the Waldens and Mrs. Murphy to understand that immediate criminal prosecution would ensue unless the obligation were paid or secured. The record fails to disclose how such words and conduct on the part of the appellant were used, or what appellant said or did, but it does appear that acting in pursuance to the fear of prosecution and in the belief that if a note were executed and adequate security posted, prosecution would be avoided, Forrest C. Walden, Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden on the 22d day of December, 1938, made and executed a promissory note in the sum of $6,500, payable to appellant, and that contemporaneously respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden assigned in blank and delivered to appellant various stocks and bonds owned by them to secure the payment of the note. On the same day, the Waldens made an agreement with Bertha M. Murphy whereby Mrs. Murphy agreed to secure Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden against loss by causing certain real property, of which she was the beneficial owner, to be conveyed to them.

It appears clearly that the Waldens did not at the time of the execution of the note and the assignment of the collateral express to appellant that they were entering into the transaction in order to prevent the criminal prosecution of Forrest C. Walden, and likewise it appears that the agreement between the Waldens and Bertha M. Murphy with respect to the transfer of the real estate to the Waldens was without the knowledge of the appellant. It is true, however, that after appellant had received the note and stock, he notified the district attorney of San Diego County that satisfactory adjustment had been made, and that he did not thereafter communicate with the authorities regarding Forrest C. Walden's conversion of his money.

Shortly after the matters just referred to, and pursuant to her agreement, Bertha M. Murphy conveyed her real estate to Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden, which conveyance was accepted in trust by the grantees with the understanding that if Forrest C. Walden did not pay the promissory note theretofore delivered to appellant, the grantees should sell the real property and reimburse themselves as to any liability attaching to them upon the note, but that if the note were paid by Forrest C. Walden, they would convey the real estate back to Mrs. Murphy. This arrangement was likewise without the knowledge of the appellant.

On the 22d of December, 1938, Forrest C. Walden, Bertha M. Murphy and Murphy Mortgage Company were each and all insolvent, and each and all had been during all of that month. Forrest C. Walden was adjudicated a bankrupt in April, 1939, and Bertha M. Murphy, doing business as Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company and Murphy Realty Company was adjudicated bankrupt on June 22, 1939. Respondent Lawrence Holzman was appointed trustee in bankruptcy of both of said bankrupt estates. The bankrupt estates did not have assets sufficient to pay the claims of creditors.

The trial court found that on or about the 22d day of May, 1939, and with due promptness, respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden gave notice purporting to rescind their promissory note and deposit of security. No notice of rescission was given by Forrest C. Walden or by Holzman as trustee in bankruptcy of the estates of Forrest C. Walden and Bertha M. Murphy.

One other fact appears which might well be mentioned, and which throws some light upon the reason for the transactions out of which the litigation grew.

The wife of Forrest C. Walden is a sister of Bertha M. Murphy. Elton A. Walden is a second cousin of Forrest C. Walden, and Clara L. Walden is the wife of Elton A. Walden. Appellant after said notice of rescission was given filed his action to enforce the payment of his promissory note, together with interest and counsel fees, and to cause sale of the collateral. The only defendants named were respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden, who filed their answer to the complaint. They then secured an order of the Superior Court of San Diego County, joining as cross-defendants Lawrence Holzman, as trustee of Forrest C. Walden, doing business as Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company and Murphy Realty Company, a bankrupt, and Lawrence Holzman as Trustee of Bertha M. Murphy, a bankrupt. Respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden by their cross-complaint alleged that the bankrupts had created a preference by the conveyance of the real estate. They also alleged that they had executed their promissory note and pledged their security upon the representation of Forrest C. Walden and appellant Miller that if they did not do so, criminal charges would be brought against Forrest C. Walden. They prayed that cross-defendants be required to set forth the nature of their claims upon the real estate, for rescission of the promissory note and for the return of their security. Holzman, as trustee of the estates in bankruptcy of Forrest C. Walden and Bertha M. Murphy, appeared and alleged the insolvency of Forrest C. Walden and Bertha M. Murphy as of December 22, 1938, and thereafter and alleged that appellant Miller knew of the insolvency of Forrest C. Walden and of Bertha M. Murphy, and that the effect of the transfer of the real estate to Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden was to make a preference under the provisions of the Federal Bankruptcy Act. He concurred in the rescission of the note and assignment of security and prayed that the real property theretofore conveyed to respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden be recovered for administration of the bankruptcy estate being administered by him. The court concluded that the promissory note and assignment of personal property were valid and enforceable; that no rescission had been effectuated, and that no grounds therefor existed; that no preference or fraud of creditors resulted by virtue of the transaction; that appellant was entitled to judgment against Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden for the principal amount of the note, plus accrued interest and attorneys fees, and to have a sale made of the collateral security in enforcement of the judgment. A decree of foreclosure was thereupon made and entered.

Respondents Elton A. Walden, Clara L. Walden and Holzman, as trustee, thereafter, and in pursuance to sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, moved to set aside and vacate the judgment and to enter another and different judgment on the ground that the conclusion of law, upon which the judgment was based, were not consistent with and supported by the findings of fact. The trial court granted the motion and drew new conclusions of law to the effect that the promissory note and pledge of personal property were voidable; that Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden, Bertha M. Murphy and Forrest C. Walden, and each of them, were entitled to rescind the note and all transactions and conveyances, and that each did duly rescind the note and other transactions; that no preference or fraud of creditors resulted by virtue of the execution of the note or of any of the other transactions; that respondents were entitled to judgment against appellant for cancellation of the promissory note, the return to respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden of the securities posted by them as collateral to the note and for such interest as they had paid appellant on the note; that respondent Holzman was entitled to judgment against respondents Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden for delivery to him, as Trustee, of a quitclaim deed to the real property previously conveyed to indemnify Elton A. Walden and Clara L. Walden against loss. A judgment was duly entered in accordance with the new findings and the two appeals now before us followed.

Appellant attacks the judgment and order from which he has appealed on various grounds. However, in the absence of menace or duress or fraud, respondents cannot prevail. We deem it unnecessary to consider any questions other than the existence in or absence from the record of any finding of such elements.

If there is a finding of any one of them, the judgment appealed from must be affirmed. If there is not a finding of any of them, it follows that the first judgment which was vacated upon motion should be reinstated and the judgment and order appealed from reversed.

[1] The element of fraud may be easily disposed of. There was no finding made by the court that either appellant or Forrest C. Walden made any statement to the other Waldens either by way of suggestion, positive assertion or promise of that which was untrue, or that either of them suppressed any true fact or acted in a manner fitted to deceive as to the situation existing. On the contrary, it appears that the note was executed and the security posted because of the fear that the embezzler would be prosecuted and in the belief that if the security was given appellant would refrain from instituting criminal proceedings. It just as clearly appears, however, that appellant did not expressly agree or state that if the obligation were paid or secured he would refrain from instituting criminal proceedings, and if it were impliedly agreed, the findings do not disclose it. Nothing approaching fraud was found by the court.

[2] The question of duress is also one which can be quickly disposed of. There was no arrest and confinement of Forrest C. Walden on account of the transaction and therefore no duress. Civ.Code, § 1570;

Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 P. 1068, 27 Am.St.Rep. 207.

If respondents are to prevail, it must be because menace was exercised in the procurement of the promissory note and collateral security. Section 1569 of the Civil Code declares duress to consist in the "Unlawful confinement of the person of the party, or the husband or wife of such party," etc., or the "Confinement of such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained * * *." Section 1570 provides that menace consists in a threat of the duress above specified or of the threat of injury to the character of any such person. For the purpose of determining whether there was menace as contemplated by section 1570, supra, we will briefly review the statement of facts, insofar as it throws light on the acts and conduct of the parties to the action leading up to the execution of the note and the posting of the security.

Walden converted money belonging to the appellant who demanded its return and employed counsel to collect it. Next, appellant notified the district attorney of San Diego County, who questioned Walden with regard to his embezzlement. As a result, Walden became apprehensive of prosecution and conveyed his fears to his second cousin and his wife, without any knowledge on the part of the appellant. The next step was that the cousin and his wife came to San Diego and a conference was had with appellant, in which conference appellant again demanded payment, and in which conference by his words and conduct, the nature of which are not disclosed, caused the parties who were signatory to the note to understand that appellant would cause immediate prosecution, unless restoration of the sums taken was made, and also by his words and conduct, the nature of which are likewise not disclosed, led the parties to believe that if a note and security were posted, he would take no steps to press prosecution, although it was not expressly so stated. Induced solely by the fear thus created through words and conduct of some character, the transaction was made, following which appellant notified the district attorney that the matter had been adjusted. Respondents have directed our attention to a number of cases which they contend are authority for holding that duress and menace are present by virtue of what occurred between the parties here. However, in our opinion, all of these cases may be clearly distinguished. We will consider a few of them briefly.

In Morrill v. Nightingale, supra, the defense to an action upon a promissory note given was menace, and it appeared that plaintiffs had fraudulently and illegally procured a warrant for the arrest of the defendant, not for the purpose of prosecuting or convicting the defendant of any crime, but for the purpose of frightening and intimidating him, and execution of the note was induced solely by well-grounded belief that he would be prosecuted if he refused to execute the same. In Woodham v. Allen, 130 Cal. 194, 62 P. 398, it was held that a complaint which alleged that defendant threatened plaintiff that if money were not immediately paid he would procure the arrest of plaintiff's husband on a charge of felony stated a cause of action. In People v. Beggs, 178 Cal. 79, 172 P. 152, where the defendant was being prosecuted for the crime of extortion it appeared that there was a threat to prosecute clearly shown, and the menace exerted on his victim was clear. In Merchants' Collection Agency v. Roantree, 37 Cal.App. 88, 173 P. 600, the evidence showed that there was a threat to have the defendant arrested for embezzlement if he did not pay a sum claimed to have been taken. No exception can possibly be taken to the rule laid down in any of the cases cited by respondents, but in all of them there were wrongful threats and those threats clearly appeared either by virtue of having caused the issuance of criminal process or by specific language used to consummate the improper purpose of the guilty party. In the case before us, we have been unable to find any finding of any threat whatsoever. The real effect of the findings appearing in the judgment roll is that either the district attorney or the appellant said or did something which induced a fear of prosecution, and acting thereon the note was executed and the collateral deposited. We do not feel that any statement or act of appellant or of any other person acting in the matter comes within the legal definition of menace as contained in section 1570 of the Civil Code. Insofar as there was any action upon the part of appellant or any words used by him as reflected by the findings, the same is not with any degree of clarity shown to have been unlawful in any event. It is true that appellant employed counsel. It is true that he consulted the district attorney with regard to Forrest Walden's embezzlement. It is true that he demanded payment from Forrest Walden, and it is true that by some words and conduct of his all of the Waldens were led to the conclusion that whether or not the guilty party was prosecuted was dependent on the execution of the note, but certainly the threat which is necessary to constitute menace must be more than some statement or act from which a guilty party becomes apprehensive of prosecution. We are impelled to the conclusion that in this regard the findings of the court support the first conclusions of law drawn by the court, and do not support those drawn subsequently and upon which the judgment appealed from was predicated.

[3, 4] Sections 1569 and 1570 of the Civil Code make clear that duress and menace arise by virtue of unlawful action upon the part of some person, but we are unable to see where appellant indulged in anything unlawful or improper, so far as findings disclose. His visit to the district attorney, his employment of counsel, and his demand for the return of his money were all certainly proper and not in any manner inconsistent with his legal rights. If fear of prosecution resulted therefrom, and the execution of the note followed from such fear, no inference of illegality could arise therefrom. If thereafter there was other language used by appellant or other conduct on his part, unlawful either in form, or actually, the findings fail to express it. It might well be that knowing of the visit to the district attorney's office, the fear which induced the execution of the note could have followed any conduct or language, regardless of its character, even if such language merely was intended to and did constitute a threat to file a civil action. But it is the threat and not the apprehension which makes out the menace and that threat must be an unlawful and invalid one. A threat to exercise a valid legal right cannot be construed to be an act of duress. Santa Ana Sugar Co. v. Smith, 116 Cal.App. 422, 2 P.2d 866.

The situation reflected by the record here is somewhat similar to that found in the case of Murray Showcase & F. Co. v. Sullivan, 15 Cal.App. 475, 115 P. 259. There, one Sullivan, who was the manager of a business concern, appropriated goods and money of his employer, to which he was not entitled. He had procured a fidelity bond conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. After his employment had terminated, he was called upon to adjust his affairs with his former employer, and was advised that unless he arranged such adjustment the matter would be placed in the proper channels for collection, and that his bond would be relied upon to collect the amount due. He was not threatened with criminal prosecution, nor was any promise made that no prosecution or arrest would be made if adjustment were effected, but he did cause notes to be executed by himself and a comaker in adjustment of the shortage. At the time the notes were executed Sullivan did not fear that his arrest and prosecution would be caused by his former employer, but did believe that his failure to deliver said notes might result through the bonding company in prosecution. When suit was brought on the notes a defense was interposed that they had been procured by threats. The contention made was that suggested procedure on the bond implied a threat to injure Sullivan's character, as well as a threat of arrest and imprisonment. The court on appeal held that such contention was without merit. In the case before us, it is true that the Waldens feared prosecution of Forrest Walden at the instance of appellant, but such fear does not appear to have followed any threat but only "words and conduct" of an undisclosed nature. Such a finding is insufficient to imply either a threat of injury to character or of prosecution.

In view of what has been said, we think it unnecessary to consider any of the other contentions of appellant as contained in his brief, as they become immaterial. Since we conclude that the conclusions of law and the judgment appealed from are inconsistent with the findings of the court, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that the court below enter judgment for plaintiff in accordance with the decree of foreclosure dated October 15, 1940.

Division 1, California.

July 9, 1942.

Hearing Granted Sept. 3, 1942.

1. Mandamus 🔑168(3)

Reporter's transcript of proceeding had before Contractors' State License Board wherein a contractor's license was revoked, was admissible in trial of mandamus proceeding to secure restoration of license.

2. Mandamus 🔑187(9)

In mandamus proceeding to compel registrar of contractors to restore contractor's license, refusal to admit in evidence reporter's transcript of proceedings had before the State License Board was prejudicial error where the writ directing restoration of the license was issued on the ground that the charges against contractor were barred by limitation at the time complaint was filed, and such transcript, if introduced, would have shown that such charges were not so barred. St.1939, p. 391, § 7095, subd. c.

3. Licenses 🔑38

A decision of registrar of contractors suspending a contractor's license for a year "and until defendant makes restitution" to certain board of school trustees satisfactory to the registrar was invalid as neither "specific" or "just" within meaning of statute giving registrar power to impose upon licensee "such specific conditions as may be just" in that it did not inform licensee what he must do and gave registrar the discretion as to what must be done. St.1939, p. 391, § 7095, subd. c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Just" and "Specific".

4. Appeal and error 🔑781(4)

That decision of registrar of contractors, suspending a contractor for a year "and until defendant makes restitution" to satisfaction of registrar, was invalid because not specific within meaning of statute defining registrar's power of suspension, did not require a dismissal of registrar's appeal from judgment directing restoration of license, as "moot" in that the year of suspension had expired, where on retrial court might find that findings of board were properly supported whereupon proceeding should be remanded to board with permission to impose a proper condition. St.1939, p. 391, § 7095, subd. c.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Proceeding by Norman Russell against Allen Miller, as Registrar of Contractors, and others, for a writ of mandate to secure restoration of petitioner's license as a contractor. From a judgment issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing defendants to restore petitioner's license and to dismiss the complaint against him, the defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lucas E. Kilkenny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Geary & Geary and C. J. Tauser, of Santa Rosa, and Bradford M. Melvin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The members of the Contractors' State License Board, and the registrar and deputy registrar of such board, appeal from a judgment of the superior court directing appellants to restore the contractor's license of respondent Norman Russell. The board suspended Russell's license, finding that he had "wilfully and deliberately disregarded the plans and specifications which were the basis of his contract with the Board of Trustees of the Napa Union High School to the prejudice of said Board and without their consent," and that he had, in the performance of the contract, "wilfully and deliberately disregarded and violated * * * the safety orders of the Industrial Accident Commission concerning electrical installation."

The complaint, filed by the registrar, charged that Russell, as a duly licensed contractor, entered into a contract with Villadsen Bros., general contractors, on February 10, 1937, to furnish labor and material for the electrical work to be installed in the reconstruction and alteration of the Napa High School, the same to be completed in accordance with certain plans and specifications; that work under the contract did not cease until December

15, 1937; that in the performance of that contract Russell wilfully departed from and disregarded the plans and specifications in nineteen specified particulars; that in the performance of the contract he violated the safety orders of the Industrial Accident Commission in eleven specified particulars. In his answer Russell admitted that most of the charged violations had been committed, but urged that, in the performance of such work, it is necessary to rely on the integrity and ability of the men selected by him to oversee the work; that in view of the flagrant violations of the safety orders and the poor workmanship discovered "defendant can only say that defendant misjudged the ability and integrity of the man defendant selected to oversee the work"; that he has made an honest effort to correct the faulty work; that when a list of violations and deviations from plans and specifications was furnished him on February 27, 1939, he proceeded to make corrections until stopped by order of the grand jury that was investigating the work; that the charged violations and deviations were neither wilful nor deliberate. The board found that Russell had committed the various violations charged, and, based on these findings, suspended his license for a fixed period, which has now expired, "and until defendant makes restitution to the Board of Trustees of the Napa Union High School satisfactory to the Registrar of Contractors. * * *."

In due course, Russell sought by writ of mandate in the superior court to secure the restoration of his license. After a trial of the mandate proceeding, the trial court found that certain specified violations of safety orders and deviations from the plans and specifications had occurred in the performance of such contract, but such violations and deviations were not committed within two years prior to the filing of the complaint against Russell, except one such violation which the court found to be neither wilful nor deliberate. Predicated on these findings, the trial court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing appellants to restore Russell's contractor's license, and to dismiss the complaint against him. It is from that judgment that this appeal is taken.

Appellants' major contention on this appeal is, that the superior court improperly struck from evidence on motion of respondent, the transcript of the proceedings had before the administrative board. The entire transcript had been admitted into evidence at the request of appellants, but, upon respondent's motion, it was striken from the record. It was the theory of the trial court that the findings, complaint, answer, decision, and other documents that were before the board corresponding to the clerk's transcript were admissible, but that the reporter's transcript of the proceedings before the administrative board, and the exhibits then introduced, were not admissible over objection. This ruling was predicated on the trial court's determination that under the holding of the Supreme Court in the case of Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, and, under the then recent decision of the appellate court in Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry, Cal.App., 101 P.2d 787, the petitioner, in such mandamus proceeding, is entitled to a trial de novo in the literal sense, and that on such a trial the reporter's transcript of the board's proceedings is not legal, competent evidence. Subsequent to the trial of the instant case, the Supreme Court granted a hearing in the Laisne case, and has since, by a divided court, rendered its decision in that case. See 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457.

[1, 2] The exact question as to whether the reporter's transcript is admissible on the trial of the mandamus proceeding has been determined adversely to respondent in the case of Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners of State of California, Cal. App., 127 P.2d 977, this day decided. It was there held that such transcript, at the request of either party, is admissible, and that it is error to refuse to admit it. That the error in excluding this evidence was prejudicial is obvious. The trial court found that all but one of the charged violations were barred by the statute of limitations. Appellants urge that the evidence produced before the board demonstrated that the statute had not run when the complaint was filed. This evidence, had it been introduced and believed by the trial court, would have warranted the trial court in sustaining the order of the board.

Respondent urges, however, even if error in excluding evidence was committed, that the matters presented on this appeal have become moot. This contention is predicated on the following facts: The registrar rendered his decision in February of 1940. By that decision the license of petitioner was suspended until February 19, 1941, "and until defendant makes restitution to the Board of Trustees of the Napa Union High School satisfactory to the Registrar of Contractors. * * *" The case proceeded to trial in April, 1940, and judgment was entered in July, 1940. Thus, when judgment was entered, the one-year period of suspension was still in effect. This judgment, when entered, was erroneous for reasons already stated. Respondent urges, however, that the condition attached to the suspension—i. e., make restitution "satisfactory" to the registrar—is void, and that, since the one-year period fixed in the order of suspension has expired, the issues presented on this appeal have become moot. The trial court held that the condition in question "imposes upon the petitioner compliance with conditions which are not specific and which are not just."

[3] We agree with the contention of respondent that the condition imposed is invalid. The board imposed such condition purporting to act under the provisions of section 7095 of the Business and Professions Code St.1937, p. 1229, as added by St.1939, p. 391, appertaining to contractors. That section authorizes the registrar, in a proper case, to suspend the license of a contractor for a fixed period, and under subdivision c, the registrar, in addition, may: "Impose upon the licensee compliance with such specific conditions as may be just in connection with his operations as a contractor disclosed at the hearing * * *." The contractor urges that the condition here imposed is neither specific nor just. It seems too clear to require extended argument that the condition in question in not specific. We have no doubt that, under the section in question, the registrar may require, as a condition, that the licensee perform the work or pay the other party the amount spent by it in having the work completed in accordance with the contract, or other reasonable condition, as long as such condition informs the licensee specifically what he must do. Such condition, no doubt, would be "specific" and "just." But to provide that restitution must be made "satisfactory" to the registrar is certainly not to inform the licensee with definiteness what must be done before he can have his license restored. Such condition directly violates the terms of the grant of power. The section requires the condition to be "specific." The condition here imposed is indefinite, unrestricted, inexplicit and unparticularized. It places in the hands of the registrar the discretion to determine what conditions must be performed by the licensee.

[4] This holding, however, does not require a dismissal of the appeal. If, on the retrial, the trial court shall find that the findings of the board are supported, the trial court should then, by writ of mandate, remand the proceeding to the board with instructions to impose, if it be so inclined, a proper condition, or to dismiss the proceeding. The administrative mandamus proceeding with which we are here dealing is equitable in nature, and is as broad in scope as the exigencies of the case require. Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, supra, 13 Cal.2d page 82, 87 P.2d 848. The ends of justice require that if respondent is guilty of the violations charged, and if such violations are not barred by the statute of limitations, and if the board believes, in its discretion, that some condition should be attached to the order of suspension, that such condition not entirely fail because the condition imposed was beyond the power of the board. The board, obviously, should be permitted to rectify its error.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

AMERICAN MARINE PAINT CO.
v. TOOLEY.
Civ. 11927.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 24, 1942.
Hearing Denied Sept. 21, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑458

Under written agreement between corporation and widow, who with her husband had owned practically all of corporation's stock, whereby widow agreed, at corporation's option, to transfer or pledge to corporation stock in value equal to past indebtedness of widow and her husband to corporation and future advances, evidence of the circumstances under which the parties contracted was admissible to determine issue whether prior debts and those incurred subsequent to date of the agreement were in fact debts of the widow as against contention that under "parol evidence rule" written agreement must be considered as containing all the parties' agreement. Code Civ.Proc. § 1860; Civ.Code, § 1647.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Parol Evidence Rule".

2. Payment ⚷16(1), 21

Ordinarily, acceptance of a note or a check does not discharge an existing debt, but is, in effect, an agreement designating the manner of its payment, including the suspension of the debt until maturity of the note or presentation of the check for payment, at which time, if unpaid, the debt is revived.

3. Contracts ⚷1

Parties may acknowledge by contract that money has been advanced, and may agree that past and future advances be paid in a specified manner, such as by the transfer of stock to secure the indebtedness, at a designated time and place or on demand.

4. Contracts ⚷245(2)

The entering into a written contract that past and future advances be paid in a specified manner, such as by the transfer of stock to secure the indebtedness, supersedes all negotiations which preceded or accompanied its execution, subject to proof in a proper case of the circumstances under which it was made. Code Civ.Proc. § 1860; Civ.Code, § 1625.

5. Pleading ⚷34(7)

Where record did not disclose that a demurrer was interposed to the complaint because of alleged lack of essential allegations, complaint would be liberally construed on appeal in aid of judgment for plaintiff.

6. Contracts ⚷172

Where widow, who with her husband had owned practically all of corporation's stock, and corporation entered into a contract whereby widow in consideration of past advances by corporation to her and her husband and for future advances should, at corporation's option, transfer to corporation shares of corporation's stock of value of advances by corporation or execute notes of value of advances and pledge stock in amount of advances, corporation was not entitled to a money judgment against the widow for advances made with the optional right to satisfy it from the stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by the American Marine Paint Company against Homer H. Tooley, as executor of the estate of Carrie M. Botts, deceased, to recover on a written contract executed by Carrie M. Botts, deceased, whereby in consideration of advances already made and others to be later made by plaintiff, Carrie M. Botts, deceased, agreed to transfer or pledge to the plaintiff stock in value equal to amount of indebtedness. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed with instructions to modify findings and conclusions, and to enter judgment in accordance with opinion.

Byron Coleman, Abraham Setzer, Carl E. Day, and Robert E. Hatch, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lillick, Geary, Olson & Charles, Ira S. Lillick, and Kent A. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

A rehearing was granted in this case solely because counsel urged in their petition that the cause of action sounded basically in equity and that this court, therefore, had no jurisdiction of the appeal. The appeal has since been transferred to the Supreme Court and retransferred by that court to this court. We are satisfied that our former disposition of this case was correct, and for that reason adopt as the opinion of this court the former opinion in the case, which is as follows:

"Appeal by defendant, as executor of the estate of Carrie M. Botts, from a judgment awarding plaintiff the sum of $36,108.27, and decreeing that such shares of the stock of plaintiff corporation as have come into the hands of the executor are, by reason of a contract, subject to plaintiff's right to require the transfer to it of an amount thereof of sufficient value to cover an indebtedness in the above sum, or a pledge thereof to secure the same.

"Several cases involving in some respects the background of the present action have been heard on appeal. Dollar v. Tooley, 46 Cal.App.2d 832, 117 P.2d 39; Lorber v. Tooley, 47 Cal.App.2d 47, 117 P.2d 421; Tooley v. Parker, 51 Cal.App.2d 542, 125 P.2d 66. The present action is one wherein there appears to be no particular dispute as to the facts.

"The plaintiff corporation was formed in 1903 by James M. Botts and his wife Carrie M. Botts. They managed the corporation and held practically all of its stock. Many years prior to the death in 1934 of Mr. Botts he made a will, in which he bequeathed to his wife her community interest in his estate; to John Parker, an employee of plaintiff corporation for many years, and at the time its manager, he bequeathed 20 per cent of the stock of the company standing in Mr. Botts' name at the date of his death, and to R. Stanley Dollar the sum of $20,000. The residue of the estate was by said will given to his brothers and sisters. Mr. Dollar was named executor of the estate. However, several months prior to the death of Mr. Botts he and his wife placed in joint tenancy all their stock individually owned. At the time of his death Mr. Botts was rather involved financially—the assets of his estate exclusive of any stock in plaintiff corporation being appraised at only $1,969.92 (Dollar v. Tooley, supra), and while ordinarily the stock which stood in his name prior to its change to ownership in joint tenancy would have passed to the survivor, it was, with Mrs. Botts' consent, included in his estate and probated therein.

"During the lifetime of Mr. Botts, both he and his wife carried separate accounts with plaintiff, against which the latter charged advances made and credited dividends paid on the stock, etc. The account of Mr. Botts at the time of his death showed an indebtedness to the company of $15,163.49; and the account of Mrs. Botts a net indebtedness of $5,425.

"Following the death of Mr. Botts, a question arose as to whether stock in plaintiff corporation was owned by him and his wife as community property or in joint tenancy. If held in joint tenancy it constituted no part of his estate, which would then have been insufficient to meet his obligations. In this situation there would undoubtedly have been an attack by the creditors of Mr. Botts' estate upon the joint tenancy arrangement involving stock valued at in excess of $200,000 standing in Mr. Botts' name a little more than six months before his death. If held as community property, a large part of it would have to be sold for the benefit of his creditors. Mrs. Botts indicated her desire to pay off the obligations of her deceased husband, and particularly wished to retain control of the corporation. To this end, as stated, the stock standing on its books in the name of Mr. Botts was included as an asset of his estate. Mrs. Botts gave certain creditors of her husband her personal notes and received from them assignments of their claims against his estate. She arranged with plaintiff to advance a sufficient amount to take care of the indebtedness of other creditors, expenses of probate, the payment of the above two legacies, together with inheritance taxes thereon, etc. It is conceded that Mrs. Botts understood she might not be legally liable for such debts and expenses. Subsequent to Mr. Botts' death and up to July 30, 1934, the plaintiff advanced the sum of $2,970 in order to meet certain of his obligations. On that date the company and Mrs. Botts entered into written agreement whereby in consideration of the advances already made and others to be later made, she agreed, at the option of the company, to transfer or pledge to it stock in value equal to the amount of such indebtedness. Thereafter the company continued to make advances to Mrs. Botts, part of which she used for the payment of her husband's debts. The company also directly paid some of his creditors, as well as the expenses of administration of the estate, the legacies, and the inheritance taxes on the two legacies, which would ordinarily have been payable by the legatees, taking assignments from such creditors or legatees.

"The amount of $15,163.49 owing plaintiff by Mr. Botts at the time of his death had been made the subject of a creditor's claim against his estate. Mrs. Botts requested the approval of this claim and it was subsequently discharged by plaintiff's entry of satisfaction thereof in the probate proceedings. This amount as well as advances above enumerated were carried on the books of the company against Mr. Botts' account, which was kept open. A month prior to the death of Mrs. Botts in 1938 the amounts advanced Mr. Botts during his lifetime as well as the later advances were transferred to the account of Mrs. Botts. At the time of her death, the account showed an indebtedness of $104,315.77, representing advances to both Mr. and Mrs. Botts before and subsequent to Mr. Botts' death, less a credit to Mrs. Botts of $68,207.50, leaving due the sum of $36,108.27, for which plaintiff filed a claim against Mrs. Botts' estate. The claim was rejected, and plaintiff brought the present action and recovered judgment for the full amount thereof.

"It might be well to mention at this point that the plaintiff carried life insurance on Mr. Botts to insure itself against business losses which might result from his death. Such insurance was originally carried by Mr. Botts for others, and he had obtained loans against it; the premiums were about $5,000 a year and he had decided to lapse the policies. Plaintiff, with Mr. Botts' consent and that of the beneficiaries, kept the policies in force.

"Appellant contends that the insurance was 'more than ample to repay the company everything which it had advanced to him [Mr. Botts] or advanced to other creditors of his after his death'; also that by the contract of 1934 between Mrs. Botts and plaintiff, the former 'agreed to pay the company only her own indebtedness and this was more than cancelled by credits.'

There is no claim that legally the company was bound to satisfy Mr. Botts' indebtedness from the proceeds of the insurance policies. And the agreement of 1934, providing for the assignment or pledge of stock of a sufficient value to satisfy 'the amount of the indebtedness of the first party [Mrs. Botts]', specifically mentioned the amount due the company by Mr. Botts at the date of his death as well as the amount due by Mrs. Botts at the time of the agreement, the sum advanced by the company prior to the date thereof in payment of some of Mr. Botts' debts and 'further advances' that 'may be made by the second party [the corporation] for the first party's [Mrs. Botts'] use and in connection with the administration of the estate of said J. M. Botts and with the payment and settlement of claims against said J. M. Botts and his estate and otherwise.'

"Appellant further contends that the judgment was excessive in the sum of $22,159.92, made up of the amount advanced Mr. Botts prior to his death, $15,163.49; the sum of $2,970 paid creditors immediately following his death, and the inheritance tax on the two legacies, amounting to $4,026.43. These items are directly or indirectly a part of the indebtedness assumed by Mrs. Botts under the agreement of 1934. The corporation suffered an immediate detriment by satisfying a claim which it was still carrying on its books, and by the payment of amounts to Mr. Botts' creditors. Mrs. Botts, for herself and her assignors, including the brothers and sisters of Mr. Botts, received the benefit of an orderly settlement of Mr. Botts' estate without unnecessary sacrifice, and the ultimate distribution thereof to her. Relative to the assumption by her of the payment of inheritance taxes on the Parker and Dollar legacies, if her settlement with them included the payment of such taxes, as the record indicates, there is nothing inequitable about the claim of respondent for the sums advanced by it for this purpose.

[1] "Appellant urges that under the parol evidence rule the written instrument must be considered as containing all the terms of the agreement of the parties. In the present case it was necessary to determine whether prior debts and those incurred subsequent to the date of the contract were in fact debts of Mrs. Botts. Accordingly the circumstances under which the parties contracted were material to a determination of that issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 1860; Civ.Code, § 1647; Weinstein v. Moers, 207 Cal. 534, 279 P. 444; Balfour v. Fresno Canal & Irr. Co., 109 Cal. 221, 41 P. 876; Raisch v. County of Monterey, 140 Cal.App. 627, 35 P.2d 587; People v. Ganahl Lumber Co., 10 Cal.2d 501, 75 P.2d 1067.

"The real problem in this case is whether respondent is entitled to a money judgment for the amount due or is limited in the matter of repayment as specified to the options as provided in the agreement. The agreement provides: 'At any time or times required by the second party the first party shall, at the option of the second party, either: (a) Endorse, transfer and deliver to the second party a number of shares of the capital stock of the second party, the aggregate value of which, at the value thereof to be fixed by the Inheritance Tax Department of the State of California for inheritance tax purposes, shall be the amount of the indebtedness of the first party to the second party at the time of the exercise of said option, less any then existing balance of the above mentioned credit to the first party of $9,225.00.' The credit of $9,225 to the account of Mrs. Botts at the time of the agreement [she had, as stated, a net indebtedness of $5,425], had increased, at the time of the trial of the present action, to more than $68,000. The agreement continued: 'or (b) Make, execute and deliver to the second party her promissory note or notes in a sum or sums which shall be equal to the amount of the indebtedness of the first party to the second party at the time of the exercise of said option, less any then existing balance of said credit of $9,225 and make, execute and deliver to the second party as security for said note or notes, a pledge or collateral security agreement or agreements pledging a number of shares of the capital stock of the second party the aggregate value of which, at the value thereof to be fixed by the Inheritance Tax Department of the State of California for inheritance tax purposes, shall equal the amount or amounts of said note or notes and endorse and deliver said shares of stock to the second party pursuant to said pledge or collateral security agreement or agreements and as security for the payment of said note or notes.'

"The agreement further provides that any promissory note or notes given under the agreement shall be demand notes, without interest, and that there shall be no right to a deficiency judgment in the event the pledged stock shall not yield the amount of the note or notes for which it is given as security. Mrs. Botts was given the right to reduce, by the payment of cash, any indebtedness 'which shall not theretofore have been the subject of the exercise of option (a) or option (b).' The agreement includes the following provisions: 'If for any reason it shall be unlawful for the second party to have said stock endorsed and transferred to it by the first party or pledged to it by the first party or acquired by it pursuant to foreclosure of such pledge, or if the first party shall not at any time have a sufficient amount of said stock to accomplish the terms and conditions of this agreement, nothing herein contained shall be construed as constituting a waiver of any portion of the indebtedness of the first party to the second party or as preventing the second party from exercising any other remedy for the collection of any such indebtedness or any part thereof.'

[2-4] "It is the theory of respondent that the agreement should be construed as giving the corporation a correlative right to sue for cash; that there is nothing in the agreement that expressly abridges the right to secure a money judgment, and that the provision for options is merely collateral or additional security; that the exercise by the corporation of such provisions of the agreement should not destroy the remedy that respondent would otherwise have to secure a money judgment. In brief, that the paragraph last quoted from the agreement was intended to make certain that a remedy by money judgment would be available. In support of this theory, respondent cites cases from California and other jurisdiction 'that the acceptance of a note for a debt does not discharge the debt unless expressly agreed to be payment.' Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20, 20 P. 28, 30; Van Vleit v. Jones, 20 N.J.L. 340, 43 Am.Dec. 633; Henry v. Nubert, Tenn. Ch., 35 S.W. 444; Stucker v. Shumaker, 290 Pa. 348, 139 A. 114; Bonestell v. Bowie, 128 Cal. 511, 61 P. 78; Selig Cahn, Inc., v. California Wrecking Co., 9 Cal.2d 617, 71 P.2d 1113. By analogy respondent argues that 'If a promissory note containing an express agreement to pay a preexisting indebtedness does not merge such indebtedness, we are at a loss to see how it can be held that an agreement reciting certain obligations and giving the creditor optional methods to secure liquidation or security therefor does so.' Ordinarily acceptance of a promissory note or a check does not discharge an existing debt, but is, in effect, an agreement designating the manner and method of its payment, including the suspension of the debt until the maturity of the note or the presentation of the check for payment, at which time, if unpaid, the debt is revived. Selig Cahn, Inc., v. California Wrecking Co., supra; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, supra, 78 Cal. page 21, 20 P. 28. Of course the liability on the note upon non-payment, and the revived liability on the original indebtedness exist at the same time. There is no legal rule prohibiting parties from acknowledging by contract that money has been advanced and agreeing that past and future advances be paid in a specified manner, such as the transfer of stock to secure the indebtedness, at a designated time and place or upon demand. The entering into of such a contract in writing supersedes all negotiations which preceded or accompanied its execution, Civ.Code, § 1625, subject to proof in a proper case of the circumstances under which it was made. Code Civ.Proc., § 1860. We conclude that there was an indebtedness due the corporation by Mrs. Botts, and that the terms of the agreement provided the method of its payment.

"Appellant objects to the forms of action adopted by respondent. The complaint is in four counts. Respondent does 'not contend that a money judgment * * * was entered under the count upon the contract.' The ascertainment of the debts required a separately alleged cause of action.

Whether the count on the open book account, the one on an account stated, the common count or the count for money advanced at the special instance and request of Mrs. Botts was particularly appropriate, considering the facts, is immaterial if under any or all of them the amount due was ascertainable.

[5] "The prayer of the complaint was to obtain a judgment for $36,108.27, and that the trial court 'make and enter herein its order and judgment that 308 shares of the capital stock of American Marine Paint Company, a corporation, have come into the hands of the defendant as executor of the last will and testament and of the estate of Carrie M. Botts, deceased, subject to, and impressed with, the right and option of plaintiff to require the endorsement, transfer and delivery of said 308 shares of stock to plaintiff or the pledge and endorsement thereof and the execution of a collateral security agreement as security for the payment of a demand promissory note or notes to be executed by said defendant, as executor, in the sum of $36,108.27.' The record does not disclose that a demurrer was interposed to the complaint. Under such circumstances, in the absence of a claim of lack of an essential allegation, on appeal the pleadings should be liberally construed in aid of the judgment. Barnaby v. Barnaby, 100 Cal.App. 195, 279 P. 1064; Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage, 182 Cal. 450, 188 P. 982; Garrison v. Hogan, 112 Cal.App. 525, 297 P. 87; Jones v. Re-Mine Oil Co., 47 Cal.App.2d 832, 119 P.2d 219. Appellant states that the action is for specific performance and that the requirements for such action are not alleged. The contention might have been addressed to the trial court on demurrer, but need not be considered on this appeal.

"The amount was fixed. The construction to be placed upon the terms of the contract is the only question remaining. The reasonable construction is that the corporation did not waive any portion of the indebtedness if for any reason it should be unlawful to endorse and transfer or pledge the stock, or if in the event of the exercise of the option Mrs. Botts at any time should not have stock of sufficient value to accomplish the terms and conditions of the agreement, but that otherwise, as the first step to secure payment of the indebtedness, respondent is bound, by the terms of the agreement, to exercise the option.

[6] "The judgment, however, is erroneous. By paragraph one a money judgment against the estate of Carrie M. Botts in the sum of $36,108.27 is granted plaintiff. That portion of the judgment reads as follows: '* * * do have the recover judgment against defendant Homer H. Tooley, as executor of the last will and testament of Carrie M. Botts, in the sum of $36,108.27, together with costs, in favor of plaintiff, American Marine Paint Company, and against said defendant in the amount of $151.70.' By paragraph two of the judgment it is provided: '* * * that such shares of the capital stock of American Marine Paint Company, a corporation, plaintiff herein, as have come into the hands of said defendant, as said executor, are subject to and impressed with the right and option of plaintiff herein to require the endorsement, transfer and delivery thereof, or the pledge or indorsement thereof to pay or secure the indebtedness of said defendant, as such executor, as herein adjudged in the sum of $36,108.27, in the manner provided in that certain contract dated July 30, 1934, entered into by Carrie M. Botts and plaintiff.'

"As we read the above, plaintiff is granted a money judgment with the optional right to satisfy it from the stock owned by the estate of Carrie M. Botts. That is not what the agreement provided. Unless it was unlawful for Mrs. Botts to endorse and transfer or pledge the stock to the plaintiff, it was intended that her indebtedness, or that of her estate, should be satisfied from the stock owned by her, which stock should be valued either at the amount fixed by the Inheritance Tax Appraiser or at $85 a share. If she or her estate had unencumbered stock it was never intended, as we read the agreement, that a money judgment except for a deficiency should be secured against her. If she executed a promissory note secured by the stock (which was never done) a deficiency was waived, but otherwise the plaintiff was required to satisfy its claim from the stock, if possible, and only as to the balance, if any, was Mrs. Botts or her estate to be personally liable.

"The agreement did not give the plaintiff three options, i. e., the right to a money judgment, the right to demand a promissory note secured by the stock, or the right to demand stock as security. The agreement required the plaintiff to exercise one of two options granted to it by the agreement, unless it was unlawful for Mrs. Botts to endorse the stock. In this connection the agreement provides: 'At any time or times required by the second party the first party shall, at the option of the second party, either * * *.' Reasonably interpreted, in view of the background and obvious intent of the parties, that provision required plaintiff to exercise one of the options before seeking a money judgment. For these reasons it was erroneous to grant a personal judgment against the defendant."

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to modify its findings and conclusions as herein indicated, and to enter the limited judgment outlined in this opinion. Both parties are to bear their own costs on this appeal.

LUIZ v. QUEEN OF ANGELS HOSPITAL.

Civ. 12906.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

Where there is any substantial evidence supporting the judgment of the court, such judgment must be affirmed.

2. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)

In determining whether there was sufficient evidence to support a judgment of the trial court, all reasonable inferences supporting the judgment must be given effect.

3. Appeal and error 🔑989

In determining whether there was sufficient evidence to support a judgment of the trial court, the appellate court is not concerned with conflicts in the evidence.

4. Gifts 🔑47(3)

In administrator's action against hospital corporation to recover property transferred to hospital by decedent while a patient therein, administrator had burden of establishing alleged confidential relationship between hospital and patient as a fact, since it did not exist as a matter of law.

5. Gifts 🔑49(2)

In an administrator's action against a hospital corporation to recover money and property transferred by deceased to the hospital while deceased was a patient therein and shortly before her death, evidence supported finding that no confidential relation between the hospital and decedent in fact existed.

6. Trusts 🔑283(1)

The statutory presumption that transactions between the trustee and his beneficiary, by which trustee obtains any advantage from beneficiary, are without sufficient consideration under undue influence is a disputable presumption. Civ.Code, §§ 2219, 2235.

7. Gifts 🔑38

A transfer of property by an aged woman in ill health to a hospital, in return for agreement to furnish her with life home in hospital and expenses incident to her death, was properly upheld as against her administrator where, even assuming existence of a confidential relation making available the statutory presumption of insufficiency of consideration and undue influence, evidence supported finding that she was mentally competent, understood nature of transaction, acted without undue influence or persuasion on part of hospital, and the transaction was not strictly a business proposition, but also in the nature of a gift. Civ. Code, § 2235.

8. Gifts 🔑49(2)

In administrator's action to recover property transferred to hospital by deceased shortly before death in return for agreement to furnish her with life home in hospital, that deceased only lived three months, that property was worth $6,500 and that hospital authorities failed to tell her she only had a few months to live, did not compel conclusion that deceased was overreached in a business transaction, where evidence supported finding that deceased also regarded transaction in the nature of a gift, that it was voluntarily made, that deceased was mentally competent and not unduly influenced.

9. Gifts 🔑38

In determining whether undue influence induced transfer of property to hospital by patient in return for agreement to furnish life care, the presence or absence of independent advice is not necessarily a decisive factor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Action by Albano Valerio Luiz, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Mary McLeod, deceased, against Queen of Angels Hospital, a corporation, to recover property and money transferred to defendant during deceased's lifetime. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Marcus, Rabwin & Nash, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Scott and J. Howard Ziemann, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

[1-3] Following the course set by the familiar principles "that if there is any substantial evidence supporting the judgment it must be affirmed, that all reasonable inferences supporting the judgment must be given effect, and that with conflicts in the evidence, this court is not concerned. * * *" (Gates v. McKinnon, 1941, 18 Cal.2d 179, 180, 114 P.2d 576, 577), we have arrived at the conclusion that in this action to recover property and money transferred to the defendant the judgment denying the plaintiff any relief should be affirmed.

There is no great conflict in the direct evidence; such conflict as exists is found mostly among the inferences. Mrs. Mary McLeod, for whose estate the plaintiff appears as administrator with the will annexed, entered the hospital of the defendant corporation on April 19, 1939. As Mrs. McLeod had no physician of her own, Dr. Charles M. Hayes, whose name was next upon the list of the hospital's attending staff, was called by the hospital and took charge of her case. Mrs. McLeod, when she entered the hospital, was somewhere around 75 years of age, quite feeble and very sick, indeed so sick that during the first few days after her entry she was, at times, irrational, and at all times was physically weak. On May 12, she entered into an agreement, prepared by the defendant's attorney, wherein it was recited that Mrs. McLeod desired to buy and the defendant was willing to sell her a "life home" in the hospital, and whereby the defendant agreed to provide room and board, medical care, "including doctors bills, drug supplies," etc., and to defray all necessary expenses incident to the death of Mrs. McLeod, in consideration of her deeding to the defendant a parcel of land and of her transferring to the defendant her savings account. On the afternoon of the same day the savings account in the sum of $2,729.31 was effectively transferred to the defendant and ten days later Mrs. McLeod executed a grant deed conveying to the defendant the property on which she had made her home for over thirty years, an improved lot worth $3,500. Mrs. McLeod died June 9, 1939.

We shall presently note further evidence, but this suffices as a background for the major premise of most of plaintiff's argument, a premise which is best expressed in the language of section 2235, Civil Code: "All transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary during the existence of the trust, or while the influence acquired by the trustee remains, by which he obtains any advantage from his beneficiary, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence." Having in mind the provisions of section 2219, Civil Code, that: "Everyone who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another is deemed a trustee, within the meaning of this chapter * * *" plaintiff's minor premise is that the defendant was a trustee, with Mrs. McLeod its beneficiary, because of the relationship of hospital and patient that existed.

[4, 5] Plaintiff's counsel cite no authority for the proposition that the relation of a hospital and patient is a confidential one, and indeed, in their reply brief, they depart from the argument earlier made, by stating "The relationship of hospital and patient is not per se a fiduciary or confidential one." We are in accord with this statement. That the relations of physician and patient, and of attorney and client, are per se confidential is well recognized. 12 Cal.Jur. 713, et seq. It is for this reason that corporations cannot act as physicians or attorneys, as appears in this quotation from 6A Cal.Jur. 1260, found in Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 592, 596, 52 P.2d 992, 994: "A corporation is incapable of the relation of personal confidence and trust requisite to the attorney's relation to his client, and this is also true of the other professions in which there is a personal confidence." We entertain no doubt that a hospital-corporation may, through its officers or other agents, gain and abuse the confidence of one of its patients, entitling that patient to relief. In an action seeking relief, however, the patient has the burden of establishing the confidential relationship as a fact; it would not appear to exist as a matter of law, as in the case of an attorney and client or physician and patient. As will appear from the evidence about to be reviewed, the trial court was warranted in concluding, as we must infer that it did, that no confidential relation between the defendant and Mary McLeod in fact existed. (No allegation that it existed was made in the complaint, so that no express finding was required and none was made on the subject.)

[6, 7] We do not find it necessary, however, nor are we content, to rest our decision solely on the conclusion that no confidential relation was shown to exist between the hospital-corporation and Mary McLeod. It is clear that even if we should assume that there was a confidential relation which would give plaintiff the benefit of the presumption that the consideration for the transfer of her property was inadequate and the agreement the result of undue influence, even so the judgment withstands plaintiff's challenge. The presumption of section 2235 is a disputable one. Schurman v. Look, 1923, 63 Cal.App. 347, 356, 218 P. 624; Brown v. Canadian Indus. Alcohol Co., 1930, 209 Cal. 596, 599, 289 P. 613. In the case under review the trial court found against it. Among other like findings we note this one: "It is true that at the time of the execution of said agreement of May 12, 1939, and at the time of transfer of said sum of $2,729.31 and at the time of the execution and delivery of said deed to said defendant, Mary McLeod was mentally capable and competent to execute said transactions and knew and fully understood and appreciated the full nature and extent of said transactions, and that she acted of her own free will and at her own instance without any undue influence, coercion inducement or persuasion by or of the defendant or its agents or employees."

There is ample evidence to support this finding. In making it the trial court doubtless recalled that there was not a word of testimony to suggest that anybody had planted in Mary McLeod's head the idea of transferring her property to the hospital, but that all of the testimony was to the contrary. Dr. Hayes testified that after Mrs. McLeod had been in the hospital a few days or a week "she told me that she wanted to give her property and her money to the Sisters to keep her * * * for the rest of her life." "She wanted me to have the good Sister * * * come up." No suggestion about the matter had been made by the doctor, and he "didn't pay a whole lot of attention to it on the first occasion." She spoke of the matter and the doctor told Sister Alberta, the sister superior in charge of the administration of business affairs of the hospital, about Mrs. McLeod's desire. Sister Alberta did nothing about it until after Dr. Hayes spoke to her a second time three or four days later. Sister Alberta then called on Mary McLeod, whom she saw on only three occasions while she was in the hospital, and heard from her lips that she wished to stay in the hospital, and "you will take care of me, will you, for what I will give you?" As the sister left the room Mrs. McLeod's parting words were: "Call your lawyer."

The trial judge was warranted by the evidence in concluding not only that the idea originated with Mrs. McLeod, but that it continued to remain her idea, and further that she was mentally competent as she carried it into execution. That evidence which could have cast a doubt on her ability to comprehend what she was doing came mostly from the plaintiff. He told the trial court that Mary McLeod was mentally capable on April 22, when she made a will naming the plaintiff, who was, possibly, a distant relative, as her sole legatee, and she was still competent May 5, when she gave him a power of attorney to draw on her commercial bank account, but thereafter she failed steadily and was not competent on May 12 or subsequently. Two of her neighbors, after several visits at the hospital, occurring near but none of them on May 12 or 22, concurred in the view that she was not competent.

The trial court, however, also heard the accounts of Dr. Hayes, of the sister superior, of the attorney who drew the agreement, of the bank teller who talked with her before he turned over the proceeds of the savings account, of the attorney who acted as notary when she executed the deed, as to what she said and responded as they conversed with her about her property and her reiterated desire to make a "gift" of it to the defendant. The trial judge heard that her attention had been called to the effect of the documents she was about to or had just signed, and that to repeated questions she replied that she knew what she was doing and desired to do it. Not on just one occasion but at intervals of days she evinced her knowledge of what property she owned, of her desire to agree, then of her knowledge that she had agreed, to transfer it to the defendant. "* * * it does not follow from the mere fact that a person has reached or passed the allotted three score and ten years in age that he has become mentally weak to the extent that he is rendered incapable of attending to his important business affairs intelligently, or with full understanding of the nature thereof. * * * Nor does the fact that the grantor was afflicted with a serious physical malady at the time of executing the grant itself warrant the conclusion that he was mentally incompetent to transact the business culminating in the execution of the grant." Johnson v. Studley, 1926, 80 Cal.App. 538, 559, 252 P. 638, 646. From the witnesses' narration of what took place the trial judge could properly infer that one who showed the grasp of her affairs that Mrs. McLeod did, although physically weak, ill and tired, was sufficiently strong mentally to comprehend what she was doing. In addition to the inference he could draw from what he had been told of Mrs. McLeod's responsiveness, the trial judge had Dr. Hayes' unequivocal statements that Mrs. McLeod was "perfectly rational" and "absolutely rational," except for a few days when she first entered the hospital and then a few days before her death.

[8] The plaintiff argues that the defendant dealt unconscionably with Mrs. McLeod because Dr. Hayes and Sister Alberta knew that Mrs. McLeod had not long to live, a few months at the most, but failed to tell her so; and that the consideration that the defendant could render, in view of her short span of life was grossly inadequate for the transfer of property worth almost $6,500. Had the trial court taken the view of the transaction which the plaintiff takes, that is that it was "purely a business one," the argument would be more persuasive. But it is apparent that the trial judge with reason could, and did, view the transaction in a different light. To him it appeared that Mrs. McLeod acted not with unmixed motives; that while her desire to be cared for for the rest of her life was a motive, it was not the sole material one. She had, it will be remembered, three days after entering the hospital made a will in which the plaintiff was named sole legatee. Thereafter, according to the testimony of Dr. Hayes, she stated that her primary purpose in giving a part of her property to the defendant was to keep it from going to the plaintiff. Mrs. McLeod, was, moreover, a member of the religious organization that controlled the hospital. In her frequent use of the word "give," with respect to the transfer of her home and the savings account to the defendant, the trial court could perceive that Mrs. McLeod was not interested in obtaining care at the lowest price possible, not because she was not mentally capable of being interested in making a good bargain but because that was not what was on her mind. She wanted to be sure that upon her death proper steps would be taken, and that until her death she should receive proper care, it is true, but she wanted more than this; she wanted the defendant and not the plaintiff to receive that which she considered to be not merely a payment but essentially also a gift. In the premises it is not for us to say that the trial court erred; that the deal was a business transaction in which Mary McLeod was overreached. Nor do we doubt that the trial judge concluded correctly that the failure of Dr. Hayes and Sister Alberta to tell Mrs. McLeod that in their opinion she was about to die was not, under all the circumstances, a reason for setting her gift aside.

[9] The plaintiff further calls attention to the fact that the defendant knew that the plaintiff had been authorized to pay her bills, and argues that he should have been notified that she was intending to and had conveyed most of her property to the defendant. It must have seemed obvious to the trial court that under the circumstances, as related to it, the defendant was under no duty of notifying the plaintiff that Mary McLeod desired to and had accomplished the purpose of reducing the amount he was to receive on her death. If the idea back of this contention is the same as that argued elsewhere, that it was denying Mrs. McLeod independent advice, it carries no conclusive weight. In the first place, the plaintiff himself was a frequent visitor, and if she declined to converse with him that was her privilege, not the defendant's fault. Two neighbors also called. There were present from time to time in addition to Sister Alberta, Dr.

Hayes and Mr. Ziemann, a notary public (from Mr. Ziemann's office, it is true) and the bank teller. "The claim that independent advice is a prerequisite in such a transaction, even if sound, is amply overcome by evidence that the decedent acted advisedly and in the presence of witnesses in making the gift. * * * Besides, independent advice is but a circumstance, and is not necessarily a determining factor in such a transaction. Brown v. Canadian, etc., Co., 209 Cal. 596, 289 P. 613." Burnham v. Witt, 1933, 217 Cal. 397, 398, 18 P 2d 949.

We are not persuaded that the judgment should be reversed. It is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

MANN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Civ. 13537.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 7, 1942.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1942.

As Amended July 15, 1942.

Hearing Denied Sept. 3, 1942.

1. Parties 🔑47

An intervener, who joins the plaintiff in a representative suit under statute permitting one of the class in behalf of which the suit has been brought to intervene therein, does so in subordination to and in recognition of the propriety of plaintiff's case. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 382, 387.

2. Costs 🔑98

Intervener in stockholder's derivative suit does not, by mere entry into the case to join the plaintiff, underwrite plaintiff's expense in preparing the case for filing and for trial and his personal liability extends only to taxable statutory costs accruing after his intervention.

3. Parties 🔑47

A plaintiff, in the absence of a contract, cannot recover from an intervener any expense incurred by plaintiff or his counsel in connection with the trial.

4. Parties 🔑47

In a stockholder's derivative suit, interveners who have joined the plaintiff are deemed to accede to the plaintiff's theory of recovery and to representation by plaintiff's counsel except where it is shown to the court that the action is not being prosecuted to the best interests of the stockholders in whose behalf as well as that of the plaintiff, the suit was instituted.

5. Parties 🔑48

An attorney for an intervener who joined the plaintiff in a stockholder's derivative suit cannot participate in the presentation of the main case except as counsel for plaintiff may consent or the court otherwise order.

6. Corporations 🔑214

Where attorney for plaintiff in stockholder's derivative suit consented to active participation therein by attorneys for interveners who had joined plaintiff, attorneys for interveners, by such participation, did not become entitled to any fee out of any recovery that ensued as a result of the action unless it was affirmatively shown that their contribution was separate, distinct, and of a character which was not, could not or would not have been made by attorney for the original plaintiff.

7. Corporations 🔑214

Where attorneys for plaintiff and one intervener could have tried stockholder's derivative suit to successful conclusion without assistance of attorney for second intervener, award of compensation to attorney for second intervener was discretionary with trial court and could properly have been denied.

8. Costs 🔑103

The reasonable costs and expenses incurred by a party in recovering or preserving a fund in a suit in equity are chargeable upon the fund.

9. Attorney and client 🔑155

In a representative suit, to recover or preserve a fund, attorney fees may be allowed out of the fund recovered and made payable ratably directly to counsel rather than to their clients.

10. Corporations 🔑214

In a successful stockholder's derivative suit, attorney fee judgments against the corporation must be limited so as not to impose a greater liability upon the corporation than would be imposed by charging attorney fees ratably as a lien on the fund recovered.

11. Costs ⚷219

In a stockholder's derivative suit in which a fund was recovered for corporation, the right of the corporation and of individual stockholders in their capacity as plaintiff or interveners with reference to the award of attorney fees was limited to challenging either the total allowed for attorney fees or the form of the judgment and not as to the manner in which the fees allowed were allocated.

12. New trial ⚷10

Where intervener in stockholder's derivative suit joined corporation in stipulation under which corporation's right to move for a new trial was waived, intervener "waived" any right she may have had as a stockholder to move for a new trial on behalf of corporation.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

13. New trial ⚷10

Where intervener in stockholder's derivative suit had joined with corporation in stipulation under which corporation's right to move for new trial was waived and where trial court had fixed total attorneys' fees and apportioned them between attorneys for plaintiff and intervener, intervener's motion for new trial, which sought relief only against other counsel and to increase the proportion of the fee awarded intervener's attorney, was purely personal to intervener and trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the motion.

14. New trial ⚷2

In the absence of a statute so providing, a litigant has no inherent right to file a motion for a new trial in an equity case or have an adjudication thereon.

15. New trial ⚷1

Where the Legislature has provided the specific instances in which a new trial may be granted, the trial court is without power to grant it in other instances.

16. New trial ⚷2

Where attorney fees were awarded in stockholder's derivative suit to attorneys for plaintiff and interveners upon motions and supporting affidavits, there was no issue of fact arising upon a material allegation of the complaint or upon new matter in the answer upon which a new trial could be awarded to an intervener who objected to the apportionment of attorney fees. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 590, 656.

17. New trial ⚷2

A new trial cannot be granted upon an issue of fact brought forward by a motion. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 590, 656.

Proceeding to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County granting a new trial to an intervener.

Order annulled.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

In this case we issued a writ of review and stayed the proceedings below in order that we might consider the action of the trial court in granting a new trial to an intervener upon the single question as to whether there should be a reallocation of attorneys' fees between counsel for the various parties concerned. The principal question for decision is whether the trial court had jurisdiction to entertain the motion for a new trial. A subsidiary question is whether the motion for new trial lies to an order allowing attorney fees, granted as an incident to a recovery in a stockholder's derivative suit and not upon an issue joined by the pleadings. A brief history of what transpired in the suit will be sufficient for its decision here.

In September, 1938, plaintiff Mann, who was the owner of 332 shares of the preferred stock of the defendant Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., instituted this stockholder's derivative suit in equity. A detailed and searching demurrer was filed to the first complaint and sustained. Upon the second amended complaint, consisting of 78 pages and filed April 15, 1939, the defendants joined issue by filing answers. Before the instant suit was instituted and before he sought and was granted leave to intervene in this action, intervener Gans, who was the owner of stock in Consolidated and who had been an editorial employee of one of the newspapers owned by it, instituted a stockholder's derivative suit in New York, on or about June 9, 1938. Similar suits in that state by other stockholders, among them one by O'Neill, subsequently an intervener herein, by order of the New York court were not only consolidated with the Gans suit but his counsel was appointed to act for all the parties plaintiff in the consolidated New York litigation. In September, 1939, what we shall designate as the O'Neill group sought and was granted permission to intervene in the instant action by adopting the pleadings of Mann. In the complaint in intervention the O'Neill group alleged they were parties to similar suits in other jurisdictions. On April 18, 1940, Mrs. Mayer, owning six shares of the preferred stock of Consolidated, through her counsel, Milton J. Levy, of New York City, and the firm of Moidel, Moidel & Moidel of Los Angeles, sought and was granted permission to intervene as a plaintiff by adopting the pleadings of Mann. Meantime Gans, becoming concerned over a rumor that settlement was pending in the instant case between the parties thereto, sought and on May 13, 1940, was granted permission to intervene as a plaintiff in the case below. However, while Gans adopted the bill of plaintiff Mann, he augmented it by setting forth twelve additional causes of action in his complaint of intervention. Subsequently counsel for Gans represented the O'Neill group of interveners as well as Gans in the trial below. One Mrs. Heaney, a shareholder of Consolidated, it appears, was represented at the trial by her counsel, Penprase, but so far as we have discovered from the record she did not formally intervene in the case.

In the early stages of the trial, which began on May 14, 1940, the court below properly ruled that the case in behalf of plaintiff Mann and the various interveners should be presented and conducted by counsel for Mann. At the conclusion of the trial, which continued intermittently but rather constantly over a period of more than a year, and during which testimony was taken in open court totaling 5851 pages of transcript and 11482 pages by deposition, the cause was submitted for decision on July 15, 1941. On October 23, 1941, the trial court announced its decision in writing, finding against certain of the named defendants and for others, and directed that formal findings be prepared in accordance with its decision.

As none of the pleadings had made any claim for attorneys' fees out of any fund that might be recovered, except for the prayer in plaintiff Mann's second amended complaint, plaintiff Mann, intervener Mayer and intervener Gans (joined by the O'Neill group) each separately filed on October 27, 1941, a motion for an allowance of attorneys' fees. Thereafter, on October 30, 1941, the respective motions were presented and heard in open court by the trial judge in the case, and pursuant to the request of all the counsel involved the motions were thereupon submitted for determination as to the amount to be allocated to counsel for each of the moving parties. No requests were made by any of the counsel for the respective parties for permission to introduce evidence as to the value, detail or extent of the legal services rendered, but instead the motions as submitted were based upon the files, minutes and records of the case, except for such affidavits as were attached to the respective motions or by order of the court permitted to be attached not later than the following day. On November 5, 1941, the trial judge announced in open court, at a hearing attended by the parties, that notwithstanding that the amount of the judgment to be rendered against the defendants found liable had not then been definitely calculated by him, he proposed to allow, as the aggregate for all the attorneys' fees, an amount equivalent to 20 per cent on the first two million dollars recovered, 15 per cent on the second two million dollars and 10 per cent on any excess over four million dollars. He further stated that out of said aggregate sum he would order, after a payment of $1,000 to attorney Penprase, that a sum equivalent to 2 per cent of the remainder should be paid to counsel for Mayer, 30 per cent to counsel for the Gans and O'Neill group and the remaining 68 per cent to counsel for plaintiff Mann. The amount for which judgment should be entered against the defendants found liable therefor having been calculated on November 10, 1941, the trial judge on that day signed and filed his formal findings and conclusions of law.

In these findings, and consistent with his oral announcement, the trial judge found that by reason of the efforts of counsel for plaintiff and interveners an award of reasonable attorneys' fees should be made to them; that the total should be a percentage of the principal amount of the judgment, and that the amount thus arrived at should be apportioned to the counsel for the several groups of parties as indicated above. In the general judgment entered upon the findings and conclusions (filed on the same day as the latter) the court rendered separate, distinct and several judgments in favor of the various counsel groups. As a result, Milton J. Levy, and Moidel, Moidel & Moidel, counsel for intervener Mrs. Mayer, were awarded judgment for 2 per cent of the total allotted to all counsel other than Penprase. The judgment also recited as follows: "It is further adjudged and decreed, that defendant Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., has in writing waived its right of appeal, as well as any right to move for a new trial, from each respective portion hereof awarding attorneys' fees on condition that the party entitled thereto does not move for a new trial or appeal from the provisions hereof awarding attorneys' fees to such party and the manner of payment of such fees as herein set forth. The right of any party to appeal or move for a new trial on any other issue is not affected hereby."

On November 12, 1941, the trial judge who heard the case from its inception to its conclusion resigned to accept an appointment as justice of another division of this court. Thereafter, on the morning of November 18, 1941, intervener Mrs. Mayer filed a motion for new trial, and in the afternoon she, along with her counsel, joined all the other parties (including Consolidated) and their counsel in executing and filing a written waiver of their rights, if any, to request a new trial, but excepting from the operation thereof the motion for new trial filed by her and reserving the further right of all parties to take an appeal from the judgment. The amended motion for new trial by intervener Mayer sought a modification, or, in the alternative, a new trial, of the findings and judgment only in respect to the apportionment which had been made between counsel, and not as to the total amount which had been allocated as attorneys' fees for counsel in the case. The amended motion for new trial was supported by an affidavit of two of the Moidels, which was directed to showing that the apportionment made to them of the over-all fee was inadequate and unjust. The trial judge (Shinn, J.) being no longer a judge of the superior court, the presiding judge of the court ordered that the amended motion should be heard by Superior Judge McIntosh (assigned). Accordingly the motion was heard by him and taken under submission on December 31, 1941. Upon that hearing counsel for plaintiff Mann and the interveners Gans and the O'Neill group submitted an affidavit of the trial judge, made by him after he had assumed his duties as justice of the district court of appeal. In this affidavit he stated that from the very outset of the trial he had in mind that if the action should prove successful he would be asked to allow fees, and for that reason he had made it a point to observe closely the contributions of counsel in the case as it progressed. We quote from the affidavit as follows: "In coming to my determination in the matter of counsel fees, and the amount thereof to be awarded to each of the various counsel, I had in mind the entire record, the arguments of various counsel to the court on the evidence and law, the benefits to Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., produced by each of the several counsel for the plaintiff and the interveners, the ability of the various counsel for plaintiff and interveners as exemplified by their activity and accomplishment in said case, the efforts made by various counsel in connection with the presentation of the case and the degree of success with which such efforts met, and the contributions of skill and effort of various counsel and the time expended by each of them in the preparation and presentation of the case. My conclusions as to the just total fee award and the amount of fee to be awarded to counsel for each of the plaintiff and the various interveners was reached after and based upon my thought given to the subjects as aforesaid, and the allocations were made so as to fully compensate each and all of the various counsel for such effort as was made by them and such benefit as was secured by them for Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., as a result of the prosecution of the litigation. I fully considered also the time expended by counsel, the necessity therefor, and the contribution which the expenditure of time and effort made to the general result."

On January 6, 1942, Judge McIntosh entered an order granting a new trial on all the grounds stated in the motion, unless on or before January 12, 1942, counsel for plaintiff Mann and counsel for the interveners Gans and the O'Neill group should each file a stipulation reducing their respective individual judgments for attorneys' fees by 5 per cent and consenting that respondent Mayer might have judgment for the resultant 10 per cent (the same being in addition to the 2 per cent which had been awarded to her as attorneys' fees by the trial judge). No stipulation having been filed, respondent Mayer served and filed a motion to have the attorneys' fee issue set for trial. This motion in turn coming on for hearing before the presiding judge on February 3, 1942, plaintiff Mann and interveners Gans and the O'Neill group appeared to oppose it on the ground that the order for new trial theretofore made by Judge McIntosh was in excess of his authority and jurisdiction. The motion nevertheless was granted and the cause set down for trial. Subsequently, as heretofore stated, we issued the writ of review upon which the matter is now before us.

In the presentation of the case to us counsel for respondent Mayer devote the major portion of their argument, not to the question whether the court below had jurisdiction to grant a new trial, but to a defense on the merits in support of its action. In that connection they contend with great earnestness that the error of the trial judge, who heard the case from its inception to its conclusion, lay in the fact that he allotted their fee without proper regard to the legal research made and the time devoted by them to the case. Moreover, they point out that some one of the three members of the firm of Moidel, Moidel & Moidel was in almost constant attendance at the trial and in the taking of depositions used therein. Hence on that basis they contend that the fee allotted to them in representing respondent Mrs. Mayer was wholly disproportionate to that awarded counsel for the plaintiff and interveners Gans and the O'Neill group. Such a complete misconception of the supposed rights of interveners and their counsel with respect to attorneys' fees—seemingly too generally held—deserves discussion here, even though it is not an issue before us for determination.

[1-6] Our statutes authorize a representative suit such as this derivative suit (Code Civ.Proc., sec. 382), and permit one of the class in behalf of which the suit has been brought by a plaintiff to intervene therein (Code Civ.Proc., sec. 387) However, it is elemental that an intervener who comes into the case to join a plaintiff does so in subordination to and in recognition of the propriety of plaintiff's case. Necessarily this is so, because it is the plaintiff who has made himself liable to his counsel for legal services and has had to carry the brunt of all the expenses involved in preparing the case for filing and for trial. These obligations and expenses incurred are not underwritten by an intervener merely because he comes into the case, and none of the costs antedating his intervention may be taxed to him. Intervener's personal liability extends only to taxable statutory costs accruing after his intervention. Aside from contract, no expense incurred by plaintiff or his counsel, such as for accountant's fees, the taking of depositions, reporter's or other expenses in connection with the trial, may be recovered from an intervener by the plaintiff except by contract, express or implied. In the instant case, aside from any liability incurred by respondent Mayer in respect to attorneys' fees to her personal counsel, she did not incur or pay any items of expense save and except the sum of $44.50 for overtime stenographic service to her personal counsel and the sum of $177.53 expended by him in travel to, and hotel bills, at San Francisco, which total of $222.03 was allowed by the trial judge. In a case of this character, as in any case, the plaintiff must be permitted through his counsel to dominate and control the suit to its conclusion, unfettered by the views of the interveners, save and except where it is shown to the court that the action is not being prosecuted to the best interests of the stockholders in whose behalf, as well as that of the plaintiff, the suit was instituted. In short, the interveners are deemed to accede not only to the plaintiff's theory of recovery, but that plaintiff's counsel shall represent them along with the plaintiff. Questions pertaining to the depositions which should be taken, witnesses that should be examined, motions which should be made and the line the examination should take are but a few of the problems which face any counsel in the course of litigation for his client. Of necessity some counsel in the case must determine these and other problems, and where there are several counsel some one must be the absolute master of the litigation. Hence counsel for an intervener may not participate in the presentation of the main case save as counsel for plaintiff may consent or the court otherwise order. Hallett v. Moore, 282 Mass. 380, 185 N.E. 474, 91 A.L.R. 572. Counsel for interveners are but volunteers in the main original cause. Even if counsel for plaintiff is agreeable to their active participation in the case they nevertheless do not by such participation become entitled to any fee out of any recovery that ensues as a result of the action, unless it be affirmatively shown that their contribution is separate, distinct and of a character which was not, could not or would not have been made by counsel for the original plaintiff.

A representative suit such as a stockholder's derivative suit, involving as it often does the possibility of large financial returns, is not an open sesame for fees to counsel for interveners. Whether or not they should be allowed fees depends wholly upon and is to be measured by the extent that their assistance results in the recovery achieved. Even though they participate consistently and constantly from the date of intervention to the date of decree, there is no obligation on the part of the court in allotting attorneys' fees from the fund to recognize their contribution to its recovery, save in the circumstances mentioned. Accordingly, interveners and their counsel run this risk when they voluntarily board the battleship of the plaintiff, with free passage, to do battle to the common enemy. They stand not in the front rank but as supernumeraries. They are but guests in the action despite their interest, and so must accommodate themselves to the situation in which they find themselves. It is only where counsel for plaintiff fails that counsel for an intervener may captain the ship; and it is only where a distinct contribution towards the recovery of a fund is made that interveners are equitably entitled to have their expenses made a charge upon it.

[7] The judge who heard the case below on its merits, and set the fees, necessarily was in an exceptional position to value the contribution of counsel and their abilities. By his affidavit he crisply indicates that counsel for plaintiff and another intervener together could have tried the case to a successful conclusion without the assistance of counsel for the complaining intervener, Mayer. Under those circumstances he would not have abused his discretion had he allowed nothing whatever to the intervener Mayer. But we have no occasion to pass on these questions, for, as has been indicated, the ruling to be here made is controlled by entirely different considerations.

The motion for a new trial as made below raised no question as to the total of the attorneys' fees allowed, or that the allowances should have been made in favor of the various parties rather than directly to their respective counsel, or the propriety of entering personal judgments for fees against the corporation benefited by the recovery, or as to any impropriety in making the personal judgments payable without regard to whether the basic judgment was paid in whole, in part or at all. Instead, as has been indicated, the sole ground relied upon for an order granting a new trial was that the total of attorneys' fees allowed had not been properly apportioned between the respective counsel. It short, that the fees in the circumstances of the case should be reallocated so that counsel for Mayer would receive more and counsel for the other parties less of the total allowed to all.

[8-10] While it is a doctrine long established in equity that the reasonable costs and expenses incurred by a party in recovering or preserving a fund are chargeable upon the fund (Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U.S. 527, 26 L.Ed. 1157), and although attorneys' fees may be allowed out of the fund recovered and made payable ratably directly to counsel rather than to their clients (Nolte v. Hudson Nav. Co., 2 Cir., 47 F.2d 166), yet we know of no precedent for the form which the judgment was permitted to take in this case. Even so, and conceding as we do that our decision must be kept within the bounds of the controversy submitted to us, we nevertheless feel impelled to make it plain, lest our failure to disapprove be misinterpreted, that we do not approve the nature, character or form of the judgments for attorneys' fees as entered in this case. While we see no objection, as such, to judgments of this character, whether made directly to counsel or to the parties, where they are properly limited so as not to impose a greater liability upon the recipient of the basic judgment than would be imposed by charging attorneys' fees ratably as a lien on any fund recovered, we do say they must at least be so limited. But where, as here, the allowances necessarily contemplated, in view of their size, full payment thereof only in case the basic judgment was fully paid, the attorney-fee judgments should have contained restrictions with respect to the issuance of execution and for satisfaction which would have safeguarded the corporation to a liability measured by, and payable only after, such payments were made on the basic judgment. The mere fact that the parties may have contemplated that prompt payment could and would be made of the basic judgment—and it appears that at least two-thirds of it has now been paid—does not militate against the view here expressed that the form in which the judgments were cast is improper. To give approval to judgments of the type here involved would be to open the door not only to grave abuse but to possible serious financial detriment to corporations in behalf of which derivative stockholders' suits are instituted.

[11] That the plaintiff and the various interveners, equally with Consolidated, had a legal standing to object to a personal judgment for attorneys' fees against Consolidated, rather than a judgment payable out of the funds received on the basic judgment, cannot be gainsaid. Moreover, no valid personal judgments, of the character mentioned, could have been entered except by consent of Consolidated. If, in the opinion of Consolidated, it was to its interest or benefit to have personal judgments entered against it, but in no event payable until it had received its own proportionate recovery on the basic judgment along with the proportion representing counsel fees, there would, as we have said, seem to be no legal objection thereto. But even if a legal objection against such a judgment could be spelled out by the stockholders of Consolidated, it does not follow that they could act in that respect in behalf of Consolidated, which was represented by its own counsel, except by gaining permission to appear for it to raise the point. Likewise, while it is clear that not only Consolidated but its stockholders as a group were equally interested in the total amount of attorneys' fees allowed, whether payable out of the fund or by personal judgments therefor against Consolidated, properly limited as to their payment, it is obvious that neither could have an interest as to the manner in which the fees allowed were allocated. True it is that the individual stockholders who were parties to the action, aside from being parties thereto as a class along with their respective counsel, had such an interest; but even so, their interest in that respect was sharply individual and not in behalf of any other stockholders or of the corporation. The right, then, of an individual stockholder, in the capacity of a plaintiff or as an intervener, was limited to challenging either the total allowed for attorneys' fees or the form of the judgment, i. e., whether they were made payable out of the fund or as personal judgments against the corporation benefited.

[12, 13] Whatever rights intervener Mayer may have had in that regard or to have asked for a new trial in behalf of Consolidated, she definitely eliminated when she joined Consolidated in its stipulation waiving its rights to a new trial. By the waiver Consolidated eliminated any right it may have had to move for a new trial as to the amount or allocation of attorneys' fees or its personal liability therefor, and intervener Mayer in joining in the waiver necessarily eliminated any right she may have had to speak for Consolidated. Whether other stockholders could have done so we need express no opinion. Accordingly, as neither Consolidated nor its stockholders could ask for a different apportionment of attorneys' fees as set forth in the several personal judgments against it, so too intervener Mayer was likewise barred, except so far as she personally had such a right. Had the several judgments been against the fund, or had the amended motion for new trial sought additional attorneys' fees for counsel for Mayer, a different factual situation would have arisen. But whether a different principle would then be applicable we need not determine. As the motion sought relief only against other counsel, who held separate judgments not against the fund recovered but against Consolidated personally, the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain or grant the motion, which was distinctly personal to Mayer and could not be made by her in behalf of other stockholders even though she purported to make it so. Cf. Glidden v. Cowen, 6 Cir., 123 F. 48, 59 C.C.A. 172.

[14-17] For an altogether different reason, resting wholly on our statutes, the trial court was without jurisdiction to grant the new trial. Apart from a statute so providing, a litigant has no inherent right to file a motion for new trial in an equity case or to have an adjudication thereon. Moreover, even in actions at law, as well as in equity, the Legislature may restrict, enlarge or abolish new trials. Where the Legislature has provided, as it has in this state, the specific instances in which a new trial may be granted, the trial court is without power to grant it in other instances no matter how appealing the claim therefor may be. Our statute defines a new trial as "a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court or referee" (Code Civ.Proc., § 656), and by a cognate statute provides that "An issue of fact arises—1. Upon a material allegation in the complaint controverted by the answer; and, 2. Upon new matters in the answer, except an issue of law is joined thereon" (Code Civ.Proc., § 590). The issue of fact in this case upon which intervener Mayer sought and obtained a new trial did not arise upon a material allegation in the complaint or upon new matter in any answer filed thereto, but by reason of motions filed in the case which it was sought to support by the record as made and, in certain instances, by supporting affidavits. That there may be no new trial upon an issue of fact brought forward by a motion in the case is settled law in this state and by the great weight of authority. Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 P. 1019; Alden v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 186 Cal. 309, 199 P. 29; 46 C.J. 63.

The order granting a new trial is annulled.

W. J. WOOD, J., concurred in the judgment.

MOORE, Presiding Justice (concurring).

I concur in the opinion except that part commencing on page 975, column 2, line 6 of 127 P.2d with the words "motion for a new trial" and concluding with line 21, column 1, page 976. In my opinion that part of the discussion is too much of a stricture upon the freedom of the trial judge in conforming his judgments with the circumstances peculiar to each separate action. While it is the ubiquitous rule that reasonable expenses out of a fund may be allowed to one whose efforts have conserved such fund, payable ratably strictly to counsel rather than to their clients, yet no sound reason appears why the parties to such an action as this may not stipulate to the entry of a personal judgment against the corporation for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. All parties approved of the form of the judgment and for valuable consideration, to wit: that the time of payment should be extended and that the judgment should bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent instead of 7 per cent. Of course the probability of prompt payment of the fund recovered would not justify a personal judgment. But, in view of the unanimous accord of the litigants and of the mutual advantages granted, I think the form taken by this judgment was proper under the circumstances although it cannot be regarded as a precedent in cases where there is no stipulation.

DARE v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al.

2. Mandamus 🔑168(3)

On mandamus proceeding by drugless practitioner against the State Board of Medical Examiners to have practitioner's license restored, record of board at hearing at which license was revoked was competent evidence which could be introduced at request of either the practitioner or the board, notwithstanding that the practitioner was entitled to a "trial de novo."

3. Mandamus 🔑173

On mandamus proceeding by drugless practitioner against the State Board of Medical Examiners to have practitioner's license restored, record of board at hearing at which license was revoked was not indispensable evidence and did not justify the trial court in refusing to proceed unless the practitioner produced the record.

A statute requiring all practitioners, except physicians and surgeons, to indicate the type of certificate held in connection with the use of the title "Doctor" or "Dr." is constitutional, as against contention that the classification is unconstitutional, since in common parlance the term "Doctor" is customarily used to refer to physicians and surgeons. The holder of a license as a drugless practitioner who allegedly had in his window a sign which had the letters "Dr." before his name was guilty of violating the statute requiring certain licensed persons who used the title "Doctor" or "Dr.," such as drugless practitioners, to indicate the type of certificate held. St.1939, p. 1682, § 2409.

"Naturopathy" is a form of drugless practice within the statutory definition in the Business and Professions Code providing that drugless practitioner's certificate authorizes the holder to treat diseases, injuries, deformities, or other physical or mental conditions without the use of drugs or what are known as medical preparations, and without in any manner severing or penetrating any of the tissues of human beings except the severing of the umbilical cord. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by John Franklin Dare against the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California and others to have petitioner's license as a drugless practitioner restored. From a judgment denying the petition, the petitioner appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Harry G. Henderson and M. Jas. McGranaghan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Thomas I. Coakley and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The record discloses that petitioner is duly licensed as a drugless practitioner by the State Board of Medical Examiners; that, by complaint duly filed, he was charged by the board with two violations of the Business and Professions Code; that, after a hearing, the board found petitioner guilty of the two offenses charged and ordered his license revoked, but also provided that, if petitioner would sign a stipulation that he would use no kind of advertising excepting the words "drugless practitioner" on his professional card, he should have his license restored and be placed on five years' probation; that, thereafter, by petition for writ of mandate, petitioner sought to have his license restored; that the trial court denied the petition. It is from the judgment denying the petition for mandate that this appeal is taken.

At the commencement of the trial of the mandamus proceeding, the judge suggested that the transcript of all proceedings had before the administrative board should first be introduced into evidence. Petitioner refused to produce such transcript, contending that under the rule announced in Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, and by the appellate court in the then recent case of Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry, 101 P.2d 787, hearing granted by Supreme Court, see 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457, he was entitled to a trial de novo without reference to the evidence produced before the board. The trial court took the position that the introduction of the transcript was a jurisdictional prerequisite to hearing any evidence in the mandate proceeding; that the only evidence that could be introduced by the petitioner in such proceeding, other than the transcript of proceedings had before the board, was after-discovered evidence, or evidence improperly excluded by the administrative board. The trial court ruled that, unless petitioner first produced the board's transcript, no other evidence could be introduced.

Petitioner urges that, when a licensee has had his license revoked by an administrative board exercising state-wide functions, and seeks by mandamus to have it restored, he is entitled to a trial de novo in the literal sense, and that the record produced before the administrative board is incompetent for any purpose. The respondents urge that on the trial of the mandate proceeding the record of the board's proceedings must be introduced as a condition precedent to the further exercise of jurisdiction, and that the only additional evidence that may be introduced is subsequently discovered evidence, or evidence improperly excluded by the board. Under the petitioner's theory the mandamus trial would be comparable to the trial of a criminal case on "appeal" to the superior court after conviction in the justice's court. Under respondents' theory, such trial would be so limited that it would approach the limitations of a trial on a writ of certiorari, except that respondents admit that in the mandamus proceeding the trial judge must exercise an independent judgment on the facts. In our opinion neither contention is entirely sound.

The question as to the exact scope of the hearing that will be afforded to a licensee after he has been deprived of his license by an administrative board exercising state-wide functions when such licensee seeks to be restored to his license by writ of mandate, has not, as yet, been finally determined by the courts of this state, although some related problems have been discussed in a series of cases decided in recent years. The first of these cases is Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equal., 6 Cal.2d 557, 59 P.2d 119. That case involved the constitutionality of a statute providing that a taxpayer dissatisfied with the determination of the State Board of Equalization in certain tax matters could proceed directly in the Supreme Court by certiorari to secure a review of the board's determination. The court held that the statute was unconstitutional, for the reason that administrative boards exercising state-wide powers do not, and constitutionally cannot, exercise judicial or quasi judicial powers. It was held, therefore, that the writ of certiorari, which can be used only to review judicial action, could not be used properly to review administrative determinations. This decision was predicated partially on the earlier cases of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, and Dept. of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076.

The Standard Oil Company decision, supra, was followed by Whitten v. California State Board, etc., 8 Cal.2d 444, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1, in which it was held that the writ of prohibition could not be used to restrain administrative action, even though it was alleged that such board was acting in excess of its powers. The decision was predicated on the same premise as the Standard Oil Company case, supra, that is, that such boards do not exercise judicial or quasi judicial powers, and that the writ of prohibition can be used only to restrain a threatened improper exercise of judicial power. See, also, Cullinan v. Superior Court, 24 Cal.App.2d 468, 75 P.2d 518, 77 P.2d 471.

In Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, supra, the court determined that the remedy available to one aggrieved by an administrative ruling depriving him of his license was the writ of mandate. It was also held that in such proceeding the trial court must exercise an independent judgment on the facts. In McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205, it was held that where one was denied a license by an administrative board, mandate was the proper remedy to secure a "review" of the determination, but that in such proceeding the question was whether the board had abused its discretion, and, since there was substantial evidence to support the board, no abuse of discretion had been shown.

In the two cases last cited, the parties had stipulated that the court from which mandate was sought could decide the case on the record produced before the board. No additional evidence was sought to be introduced before the court, and no question was presented as to the admissibility of the record produced before the board.

[1] The next problem presented to the Supreme Court in this field was whether the court in the mandamus proceeding may take evidence in addition to that produced before the administrative board. That problem was directly presented in the Laisne case, supra. By a divided court, the Supreme Court held that the petitioner in the mandamus proceeding is entitled to a trial de novo in which the trial court must exercise an independent judgment on the facts, and that in such proceeding the petitioner is not limited to the record made before the board, that is, he may introduce in the mandamus proceeding, evidence in addition to that produced before the board. This court, as an intermediate appellate court, is bound by the majority rule laid down in that case.

The majority opinion in the Laisne case stands squarely for the proposition that the petitioner in the mandate proceeding in that case should have been permitted to introduce evidence other than the record of the proceedings before the board. The trial court was reversed because it refused to permit the introduction of such additional evidence. It will be noted that none of the cases above discussed directly passed on the question as to whether the introduction of the board's record is indispensable in the mandamus proceeding. In fact, none of the cases heretofore decided has expressly determined whether, in the absence of stipulation, the board's record is legal, competent evidence so as to be admissible in the mandamus proceeding over the objections of one of the litigants.

The solution of the problem as to the exact scope of the trial in the mandamus proceeding, really depends upon the answer to two questions. First, is the board's record legal, competent evidence on such trial so as to be admissible at all over objection of either litigant? Second, if the board's record is legal, competent evidence and so admissible, is it indispensable evidence so as to justify the trial court in refusing to proceed unless the petitioner produces it?

[2] The answer to both questions revolves about the proper meaning of the term "trial de novo" as that term was used in the Drummey and Laisne cases, supra. So far as the first question is concerned—i. e., whether the board's record is legal, competent evidence on the trial of the mandamus proceeding, and, therefore, admissible over objection—we have no doubt that such record is admissible.

If the phrase "trial de novo," as used in the above mentioned cases, should be interpreted in its literal sense it would mean that the board's record would be admissible only for purposes of impeachment, and would not be admissible on the merits. A reading of the Drummey case, and the opinion of the majority of the court in the Laisne case, demonstrates, however, that the phrase in question was not used in that literal sense in referring to the "review" of administrative determinations. Thus, in the Laisne case, the court stated that the appellant there contended "that he had the right to require the trial court in the mandamus proceeding to conduct what would be in substance and effect a trial de novo, in the course of which the parties would not be limited to the record made before the board." 19 Cal.2d at page 833, 123 P.2d at page 459. Italics added. The court also stated that the trial court compelled the petitioner to submit his case "solely" upon the record and proceedings before the board. In discussing the Drummey case the court said at page 834 of 19 Cal.2d, at page 459 of 123 P.2d: "* * * it was held that the court must consider all material evidence and was not confined to the record of the proceedings before the board. If the court were so confined, it would not be exercising an independent judgment on all the facts material to the issue."

It should be here noted that the court does not say that the record of proceedings before the board is not admissible, or admissible only pursuant to stipulation. It merely says that the court is not "limited" or "confined" to the record of proceedings before the board.

The majority opinion in the Laisne case further states at page 835 of 19 Cal.2d, at page 460 of 123 P.2d: "If, in the instant case, the superior court in the mandate proceedings were limited to the evidence presented before the board, or if the findings of fact by the board were conclusive on the court, then the board would be exercising the complete judicial power reserved to the enumerated courts." The court also states at page 843 of 19 Cal.2d, at page 464 of 123 P.2d: "On the authority of the Drummey case the only type of review that would afford appellant his full constitutional rights would be a complete trial de novo as outlined in the decision in that case." (Italics added.) It would seem that the concluding phrase is of special importance in indicating that the record of proceedings before the board is admissible, without the consent of the parties.

It is true that the court also states at page 844 of 19 Cal.2d, at page 464 of 123 P.2d that the person whose license has been revoked "has the right to a trial de novo in a superior court" and that "the petitioner must be given a trial de novo on the issues involved." 19 Cal.2d page 845, 123 P.2d page 465. That language, if read alone, might imply that the "trial de novo" referred to is a complete and new trial in the literal sense. But that language does not stand alone. It is qualified by the language above quoted. To hold that because petitioner, in such proceeding, is entitled to a trial de novo means that the proceeding before the superior court must go forward as if no action had ever been had before the board, except for the findings, etc., of that board, would be to fly directly in the face of language in the Drummey case, which the court quotes with approval in the Laisne case. Immediately following the statement in the Laisne case that the petitioner is entitled to a complete trial de novo, the court quotes the following language from the Drummey case, with the added comment as shown: "'The findings of the board come before the court with a strong presumption of their correctness, and the burden rests on the complaining party to convince the court that the board's decision is contrary to the weight of the evidence.' Undoubtedly, the court in this reference to the 'evidence' contemplated not only the record of the proceedings before the board, but such additional evidence as either party desired to introduce before the trial court." 19 Cal.2d at page 843, 123 P.2d at page 464. Italics added.

As we read the Drummey and Laisne cases, supra, both of them affirmatively recognized that the transcript of the proceedings before the board is legal, competent evidence, and is admissible in the mandate proceeding. The numerous statements that the petitioner is not to be "limited" or "confined" to the record before the board, and the statement appearing in both cases that the findings of the board come before the court with a "strong presumption" of their correctness can be explained only on the theory that the Supreme Court did not mean that the trial de novo to which the person dissatisfied with the board's ruling is entitled is to be a complete new trial without reference to what occurred before the board. How can the trial court give any intelligent weight to the "strong presumption" referred to unless it knows the evidence upon which the findings were based?

The Drummey case also stated, 13 Cal.2d at page 85, 87 P.2d at page 854: "This does not mean that the preliminary work performed by the administrative board in sifting the evidence and in making its findings is wasted effort"; and again at page 86 of 13 Cal.2d, at page 854 of 87 P.2d: "Obviously, considerable weight should be given to the findings of experienced administrative bodies made after a full and formal hearing, especially in cases involving technical and scientific evidence." Unless the transcript of proceedings is admissible at the request of either party, how can any benefit be secured by the trial court from the "sifting the evidence" by the board? How can the trial court secure the benefit of the technical and scientific skill of the board unless the evidence is part of the record?

The rule that permits the complete record before the board to be introduced in the trial court by stipulation, or at the request of either party, is not only supported by the clear implications of the opinions in the Drummey and Laisne cases, supra, but is supported by several practical considerations. If the record cannot be introduced over objection, the determination by the board, where the licensee is deprived of his license, would be so much wasted effort. The courts would be deprived of the expert and technical knowledge possessed by such boards. A rule excluding the record of proceedings had before the board, except upon consent of all concerned, would stultify every state-wide board. There would be no justification at all for proceedings before such administrative boards consuming both time and money, if the record is not admissible in the mandate proceeding. There would be no reason for the licensee to introduce any evidence in his defense before the board. The only practical effect of a board hearing would be to disclose the board's case without requiring the accused licensee to divulge his case.

It may be somewhat anomalous to say that the petitioner is entitled to a trial de novo in the superior court and to also hold that the record compiled before the board is admissible, but such anomaly is inherent in the peculiar nature of the mandamus proceeding sanctioned by the decisions of the Supreme Court above mentioned. As we read the above cases the important holding therein was not that a trial de novo must be had, but that in the mandate proceeding constitutional provisions require that the trial judge exercise an independent judgment on the facts. Such independent judgment can be exercised whether the transcript is admissible or not. The holding of the majority of the court in the Laisne case, supra, that petitioner in the mandate proceeding may introduce evidence in addition or cumulative, or identical to that produced before the board, affords the petitioner all the protection required by law. We, therefore, conclude that the board's record is legal, competent evidence in the mandamus proceeding which may be introduced at the request of either litigant.

[3] This holding, however, does not determine that such transcript is indispensable evidence which must be introduced by the petitioner before the trial court has jurisdiction to proceed. We are of the opinion that, like other competent evidence, its production depends upon the desires of the litigants. If produced by either it must be admitted, but if neither produces it, the trial court has no power to compel its production, or to refuse to proceed unless introduced.

To hold that the introduction of such transcript is an indispensable prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the lower court to try the mandamus proceeding, and that the only evidence that can be introduced other than the transcript is after-discovered or improperly excluded evidence, would be to convert the mandamus proceeding into a modified certiorari proceeding. Such determination would be directly contrary to the holding of the majority of the court in the Laisne case, supra. According to that opinion, the petitioner in the mandate proceeding may introduce in that trial any competent evidence even though it may be identical to, cumulative of, or in addition to, that produced before the board. It is clear, therefore, that the trial court was in error in holding that before it would, or could, proceed the transcript must be introduced.

Petitioner urges that, even though no evidence was introduced, the allegations of the petition for mandate and the answer and return thereto, demonstrate, as a matter of law, that no offense warranting discipline was committed by him, and that it appears from such pleadings, as a matter of law, that the board was without legal right to revoke his license. In view of the fact that the judgment must be reversed for reasons already stated, these points should be passed on for the guidance of the trial court on the retrial.

The petition for writ of mandate avers, and the answer and return thereto admits, that the complaint filed before the board was in two counts; that count one charged that petitioner used the prefix "Dr." in a window sign in connection with his name without otherwise indicating the type of certificate possessed by him; that petitioner did not hold a physician's and surgeon's certificate; that count two charged that petitioner used the letters "N.D." as a suffix to his name in a window sign, which indicated that he was entitled to practice naturopathy; that at the time he was not licensed to practice naturopathy.

Count one is based on section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code, St. 1937, p. 1229, as added by St.1939, p. 1682, which provides as follows: "Unless a person licensed and authorized under this chapter or any preceding medical practice act to use the title 'doctor' or the letters or prefix 'Dr.,' holds a physician's and surgeon's certificate, the use of this title or these letters or prefix without further indicating the type of certificate he holds, constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter." This section was added to the Code in 1939. Petitioner urges that the section is unconstitutional class legislation. This contention is predicated on the following facts: Chapter 5 of division II of the Business and Professions Code, which chapter is entitled "Medicine," authorizes the Board of Medical Examiners to issue four types of certificates: (a) Physician's and surgeon's certificates; (b) drugless practitioner's certificates; (c) certificates to practice chiropody; (d) certificate to practice midwifery. § 2135, Bus. & Prof. Code, St. 1937, p. 1258. Other licenses, such as those to practice dentistry, optometry, etc., are issued under other chapters of the Code by other boards, or under special statutes by a special board. Petitioner urges, therefore, that, by section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code, supra, of all the licensed persons who use the title "Doctor" or "Dr.," only drugless practitioners and chiropodists (and midwives) are required to indicate the type of certificate held. This, according to appellant, constitutes an unconstitutional classification.

Petitioner's major premise—i. e., that drugless practitioners and chiropodists are the only persons engaged in the healing arts required to indicate the type of certificate held, is not in accordance with the fact. While such contention may be sound, so far as section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code is concerned, there are other sections dealing with the same subject matter which must be read together with the section in question. Section 3098 of that Code requires that optometrists must use the word "optometrist" in connection with the title "Doctor" or "Dr." Section 2142 of the Business and Professions Code provides: "Any person, who uses in any sign or in an advertisement the word 'doctor,' the letters or prefix 'Dr.,' the letters 'M. D.,' or any other term or letters indicating or implying that he is a physician and surgeon, physician, surgeon, or practitioner under the terms of this or any other law, or that he is entitled to practice hereunder, or under any other law, without having at the time of so doing a valid, unrevoked certificate as provided in this chapter, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

In addition, the Chiropractic Act, Stats. 1923, p. xx; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 4811, provides that chiropractors shall not use the word "doctor" or the prefix "Dr." without the words "chiropractor" or "D. C." immediately following the name. (§ 15.)

[4] While it is true that there are non-medical uses of the title in question, such as doctors of divinity, doctors of jurisprudence, doctors of philosophy, and other holders of religious or academic degrees, with these uses of the title statutes dealing with the healing arts are not concerned. State v. Michaels, 226 Wis. 574, 277 N.W. 157. Section 2142, supra, would seem to apply to all persons other than physicians and surgeons who practice the healing arts on human beings.

[5] The constitutionality of statutes requiring all practitioners, except physicians and surgeons, to indicate the type of certificate held in connection with the use of the title "Doctor" or "Dr.," is not open to question. There is a reasonable ground for such distinction. In common parlance the term "doctor" is customarily used to refer to physicians and surgeons. The Legislature was justified in believing that the use of such title by others without descriptive designation would tend to indicate to the public that the user is a physician or surgeon. Cases from other states have upheld the constitutionality of legislation similar in character. State v. Michaels, supra; State v. Pollman, 51 Wash. 110, 98 P. 88; Green v. Rawlings, 290 Mich. 397, 287 N.W. 577; State v. Yegge, 19 S.D. 234, 103 N.W. 17, 69 L.R.A. 504, 9 Ann.Cas. 202.

Petitioner also urges that, from the facts shown by the pleadings, he has not violated section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code. In the petition for a writ of mandate he alleges that his conviction was based entirely on evidence that he had in his window a sign reading as follows:

> "Excelsior Clinical Laboratory
> Dr. J. Franklin Dare"

[6] Petitioner also alleges in his petition that he holds licenses as a chiropractor, issued by the Chiropractic Board, and as a clinical laboratory assistant, issued by the State Board of Health, in addition to his drugless practitioner's license issued by the Medical Board. The allegation that he holds these additional licenses is denied on information and belief, and it is also denied that the conviction on this count was based only on the use of the above sign. These disputed questions of fact, of course, cannot be passed upon at the present time. But, even if it be assumed that the conviction under count one rested entirely on the use of that sign, it is clear that petitioner has violated section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code. Neither chiropractors nor clinical laboratory assistants are permitted to use the title without designation. Such use violates section 2142 of the Code, supra, and, in the case of chiropractors, violates the law applicable to chiropractors, supra. The sign in question plainly indicates that appellant holds himself out as a physician and surgeon operating a clinical laboratory. It follows, therefore, that petitioner, a drugless practitioner, according to the admissions in his pleading has used the title "Dr." in violation of section 2409 because he has not indicated that he holds a certificate as a drugless practitioner.

The petition for a writ of mandate alleges, and the answer and return admits, that the second count of the complaint filed with the board charged petitioner with using the letters "N.D." as a suffix to his name in a window sign, which indicated that he was entitled to practice naturopathy, and that he was not so licensed. This count is based on section 2395 of the Business and Professions Code which provides: "The use by the holder of any certificate of any letter, letters, word, words, or term or terms either as prefix, affix or suffix indicating that he is entitled to practice a system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted for which he is not licensed in this State constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter." The petition for writ of mandate alleges that petitioner testified at the hearing before the board that he used the letters "N.D." indicating the degree of Doctor of Naturopathy, which he had earned. The answer to the petition admits that he so testified.

Petitioner admittedly was licensed as a drugless practitioner. Section 2138 provides that: "The drugless practitioner's certificate authorizes the holder to treat diseases, injuries, deformities, or other physical or mental conditions without the use of drugs or what are known as medical preparations and without in any manner severing or penetrating any of the tissues of human beings except the severing of the umbilical cord."

[7, 8] It seems quite clear to us that naturopathy is a form of drugless practice within the statutory definition above quoted. The exact nature of naturopathy was the subject of discussion in Millsap v. Alderson, 63 Cal.App. 518, 219 P. 469, which recognized naturopathy as a system or mode of treating the sick. It was held in that case that naturopathy is a system or mode of treating the sick taught in a college established in 1904 in Los Angeles by the Incorporated Association of Naturopaths of California. The Medical Practice Act of 1907, Stats. of 1907, p. 252, provided, in section 6, for three forms of certificates a certificate to practice medicine and surgery, a certificate to practice osteopathy, and a certificate to practice "any other system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted not referred to in this section." An amendment of 1909, Stats. of 1909, p. 418, gave express recognition to naturopaths by providing that one who held a certificate issued by the board of examiners of the association of naturopaths of California, and who was practicing under the laws of the state prior to passage of the amendment, should be entitled to practice naturopathy, and that the board of medical examiners should endorse his certificate. The board contends, in the present proceeding, that only the class of naturopaths who were such before the amendment of 1909, and whose certificates were indorsed by the medical board, hold a certificate to practice naturopathy and may use the letters "N.D." This analysis is clearly wrong. The Statute of 1907, in effect until 1913, provided for a form of certificate authorizing the holder to practice "any other system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted" not otherwise referred to (i. e., other than medicine and surgery and osteopathy). Apparently, certificates issued under this statute after 1909, and until 1913, specified the system or mode, as, for example, naturopathy. The act of 1913, Stats. of 1913, p. 722, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 4807, provided for the two forms of certificates the physician's and surgeon's, and drugless practitioner's. According to petitioner herein, the report of the Board of Medical Examiners to the Governor concerning the proposed act of 1913 tabulated twenty-five drugless cults who would thereafter secure licenses under the drugless practitioner's provision. Thus it appears that the law has provided, and continues to provide, for a drugless practitioner's certificate, which must be held to include naturopathy and other drugless systems of treating the sick, to practice which only a drugless practitioner's license is required. It is quite apparent, therefore, that if petitioner possesses the degree of Doctor of Naturopathy, as he alleges, that by the use of the letters "N.D." he has not violated the provisions of section 2395 of the Business and Professions Code. That is a question of fact which must be decided by the trial court.

In the petition for mandate it is alleged that the board found petitioner guilty on both counts, and, as to each count, ruled that petitioner's license should be revoked on condition that, if he would immediately sign a stipulation that he would use no kind of advertising excepting the words "drugless practitioner" on his professional card, he should have his license restored, and then be placed on five years' probation. These allegations are admitted by failure to deny them in the answer and return. It is obvious from what has been said in this opinion, that, under the admitted facts, petitioner has violated the provisions of section 2409 of the Business and Professions Code. As to whether he has violated section 2395 of that Code, that depends upon whether he possesses the degree of Doctor of Naturopathy. If he does, he has not violated the section. That must be determined by the trial court on the retrial.

Because the trial court erroneously refused to proceed unless the board's record was produced by petitioner, and for the other reasons stated, the judgment is reversed.

MERING v. YOLO GROCERY & MEAT MARKET et al.

Civ. 6721.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 9, 1942.

Hearing Granted Aug. 27, 1942.

1. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇨68(2)

The section of the Unfair Practices Act prohibiting price discrimination by merchants between different sections, communities or cities, with intent to destroy or prevent competition, is constitutional. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇨68(1)

The Unfair Practices Act is an attempt by the Legislature to regulate business as a whole by prohibiting practices which constitute unfair trade practices, to safeguard the public against monopoly and to foster free competition. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

3. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇨97

Where injunction against violation of the Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers provided that the sales enjoined should be for the purpose of injuring the grocers' competitors or destroying competition in the trade, the judgment was not void on ground that it exposed the grocers to contempt by mere proof of sale without evidence of intent to violate the injunction, but the injunction would not be violated unless the future offense was for the purpose of injuring competitors. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

4. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇨97

Where injunction against violation of Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers restraining them from selling all articles defined by the statute was clearly intended to apply only to the grocers in the conduct of their trade, injunction was not so broad as to be void as a blanket provision restraining the grocers from violating the act in general terms, and the injunction was not required to be limited to the specific articles shown to have been sold below cost. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

5. Injunction ⇨189

If one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law, he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts.

6. Injunction ⇨114(2)

A private individual cannot maintain a suit for injunction against violating a statute unless he suffers special injury different from that suffered by the public at large, but the state may grant permission to a citizen to maintain such action.

7. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇨92

Under section of Unfair Practices Act providing that any person might maintain an action to enjoin violation of the act without alleging or proving actual damage plaintiff was entitled to maintain suit to enjoin violation of the act by retail grocers without alleging or proving special damage, notwithstanding that he was not a competitor of the grocers or a resident of their county. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 10.

8. Evidence 🔑373(1)
Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑93(2)

Under section of Unfair Practices Act defining distribution cost as invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, wholesalers' original invoices of merchandise sales to retail grocers when testified to by wholesalers' district managers, were material and admissible in suit to enjoin violation of the act by grocers. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 3.

9. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑93(3)

In suit to enjoin violation of Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers, where grocers did not prove that specified brand of milk had not been purchased from designated wholesalers, evidence that grocers had purchased the same brand of milk from the wholesalers from January 4 to March 22 at designated prices, and sold the same brand for lower prices on March 25 and 27, sustained trial court's finding that the milk was sold by the retailers at less than cost. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

10. Constitutional law 🔑55

The Legislature is authorized to create presumptions and prima facie evidence.

11. Constitutional law 🔑311
Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(2)

Where evidence sustained finding that sales of a variety of articles were made by retail grocers below invoice and replacement cost over a period of time to the injury of grocers' competitors, there was a rational relationship between the facts proved and the statutory presumption of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition, and hence statute creating the presumption was not invalid as operating to deprive a party of a reasonable opportunity to present his defense. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 5.

12. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑93(1), 100

The presumption of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition created by section of Unfair Practices Act from proof of sales below cost and injurious effect thereof is rebuttable, and it is for the trial court to determine whether it has been overcome by other evidence of the case. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 5.

13. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑100

In suit to enjoin violation of Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers by sales below cost, where facts raising statutory presumption of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition were proven, whether sales were made with such intent became a question for trial court. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 5.

14. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑93(3)

In suit to enjoin violation of Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers, evidence of sales below cost and injury to grocers' competitors supported trial court's finding that sales were made with the intent to injure competitors or destroy competition, in view of statutory presumption of such intent from the facts stated as proven. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.; § 5.

15. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑92

In suit to enjoin violation of Unfair Practices Act by retail grocers, where complaint did not allege unlawful sales after a specified date, trial court properly refused to admit advertisements of grocers' competitors after the date, offered to show that sales below cost were to meet competition. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

16. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)

The Legislature and not the courts determines the wisdom of economic policy, and it is not the duty of the courts to determine whether the policy of the Unfair Practices Act is wise, but the power of the courts is limited to determining whether the subject of the legislation is within the state's power, and whether the means adopted have a reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose, and are neither arbitrary nor discriminatory. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

17. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(1)

The Unfair Practices Act was enacted in an attempted exercise of the state's police power. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq.

18. Constitutional law 🔑47

In determining constitutionality of statute enacted in attempted exercise of state's police power, inquiry is limited to determining whether object of statute is one for which the police power may legitimately be invoked, and if so whether the statute bears a reasonable and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained.

19. Constitutional law 🔑81

The police power of the state extends not only to the preservation of the public health, safety and morals, but also extends to the preservation and promotion of the public welfare.

20. Constitutional law 🔑81

The proper application of the police power of the state cannot be measured by past precedents, but the test is present-day conditions.

21. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(2)

The provision of the Unfair Practices Act prohibiting sale of commodities below cost as defined in the act for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition is not unconstitutional on ground that means adopted were not reasonably designed to accomplish the object of the statute, since question was fairly debatable, and hence determination of Legislature thereon was conclusive. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 3.

22. Constitutional law 🔑47

In determining whether means adopted by Unfair Practices Act prohibiting sale of commodities below cost as defined in the act for purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition were reasonably connected with legitimate object of statute, that fourteen states had passed similar legislation was entitled to same weight. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 3.

23. Trade-mark and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(2)

A provision of the Unfair Practices Act prohibiting sale of commodities below cost as defined in the act for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition is constitutional as a reasonable attempt by state to accomplish a valid object. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 3.

24. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(1)

Although the state may not have power to regulate all trade practices affecting competition, it has power to restrict or prohibit trade practices which on reasonable grounds it determines are predatory, vicious, unfair and anti-social.

25. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition 🔑68(2)

The provision of the Unfair Practices Act prohibiting sale of commodities below cost as defined in the act for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition was not unconstitutional as applied to prevent retail sale of groceries below cost. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; Arthur Coats, Judge Assigned.

Suit by Charles Mering against the Yolo Grocery & Meat Market and others to enjoin violation of the Unfair Practices Act, as amended, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781, § 1 et seq. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Huston, Huston & Huston, of Woodland, for appellants.

Sumner Mering, of Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment restraining appellants from violating the so-called Unfair Practices Act, as amended in 1937. The precise terms of the injunction will be hereinafter set forth.

It is necessary to a proper understanding of the issues involved upon this appeal that we give a brief summary of the pertinent provisions of the act.

[1] Section 1 prohibits merchants, manufacturers, producers and distributors, with intent to destroy competition or to prevent competition of any new dealer, from discriminating as to price between different sections, communities or cities, and likewise prohibits the giving of special rebates or the use of any other device to accomplish this result. This portion of the act, although reenacted in 1935 and 1937, has been an integral part of our law since 1913, when the original Unfair Practices Act was adopted. Stats.1913, p. 508, Deering's Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8781. It is predicated upon a similar statute first adopted in South Dakota. The constitutionality of such provision is beyond question. State v. Central Lumber Co., 24 S.D. 136, 123 N.W. 504, 42 L.R.A.,N.S., 804; Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U.S. 157, 33 S.Ct. 66, 57 L.Ed. 164.

Section 3 of the act is the provision against which the main attack of appellants is directed. It provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in business within this State, to sell any article or product at less than the cost thereof to such vendor, or give away any article or product, for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition, and he shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties set out in section 11 of this act for any such act.

"The term 'cost' as used in this act as applied to production is hereby defined as including the cost of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses of the producer; and as applied to distribution 'cost' shall mean the invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, of the article or product to the distributor and vendor plus the cost of doing business by said distributor and vendor.

"The 'cost of doing business' or 'overhead expense' as used in this act is defined as all costs of doing business incurred in the conduct of such business and must include without limitation the following items of expense: labor (including salaries of executives and officers), rent, interest on borrowed capital, depreciation, selling cost, maintenance of equipment, delivery costs, credit losses, all types of licenses, taxes, insurance and advertising.

"The prohibitions of this act shall be deemed among the other purposes and objects of the act to also prohibit the practice of using any article or product as a 'loss leader.' Loss leader, as used herein, shall mean any article or product sold at less than cost as herein defined to induce, promote or encourage, the purchase of other merchandise, or which may have the tendency or capacity to mislead or deceive purchasers or prospective purchasers, or which diverts trade from or otherwise injures competitors.

"The prohibitions of this section shall embrace any scheme of special rebates, collateral contracts or any device of any nature whereby a sale below cost is effected in violation of the spirit and intent of any of the provisions of this act."

Section 4 prohibits the seller, in establishing his cost of an article at less than present replacement cost, from using the invoice cost paid by him at a forced, bankrupt, closeout sale, or other sale outside of the ordinary channels of trade, unless the article so purchased is kept separate from goods purchased in the ordinary channels of trade, and unless said article is advertised and sold as merchandise purchased at a forced, bankrupt, or closeout sale.

Section 9 provides that any contract made in violation of the act is illegal and no recovery thereon shall be had. Section 10 authorizes any person, corporation or trade association to maintain an action to enjoin a continuance of acts in violation of the statute, and if injured thereby, to recover actual damages sustained, and provides further that it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff in such action to allege or prove damage to himself.

Section 11 makes the violation of sections 1 to 7 a misdemeanor, and provides that proof of average overall cost of doing business for any particular inventory period when added to the cost of production of each article or product, as to a producer, or invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, of each article or product, as to a distributor, shall be presumptive evidence of cost as to each such article or product involved in any action brought under this act and involving the violation of any provisions of section 3 and 5 of this act.

Section 12 contains the usual severability clause.

Section 13 provides that the legislature declares that the purpose of this act is to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented. It also provides that this act shall be liberally construed, that its beneficial purposes may be subserved.

Section 14 provides that the act shall be known as the Unfair Practices Act.

Sections 15, 16 and 17 contain provisions not involved in this case.

[2] This act is an attempt on the part of the legislature to regulate business as a whole by prohibiting practices which the Legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices. Its stated purpose (§ 13) is to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies, and to foster free, open and fair competition. So far as the instant case is concerned, the practice prohibited by the statute is selling below cost, and this practice is prohibited only when performed "for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition."

This action was commenced by respondent to obtain an injunction under the act. Respondent's amended complaint alleged in substance that appellants were conducting a retail grocery business in Woodland, and that on various dates set forth in detail in the complaint appellants advertised, offered for sale, and sold to retail customers articles of merchandise, the invoice cost and replacement cost of each of which articles was in excess of the selling price thereof; that none of said offers for sale, or sales, were in the course of the discontinuance of the business of appellants, or to prevent loss to appellants by spoilage or depreciation; that none of said sales, or offers for sale, were made, and none of said advertising for sale was done in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor, but were for the purpose of destroying competition and injuring competitors.

Appellants' answer did not deny that most of the articles set forth in respondent's complaint were advertised and sold at the prices set forth, but denied the other allegations hereinabove referred to. Appellants also set forth the special defense that any and all sales made by appellants were to meet the reduced prices at which other competing merchants in Woodland sold the same or similar articles, and with the sole purpose of advertising their business, improving their trade, and meeting such competition, and not with the intent of injuring any competitor or destroying competition. Appellants also set up the further defense that respondent was not a competitor of appellants, did not reside in the county of Yolo, was not injured or damaged by any acts of appellants, and was not invoking the jurisdiction of a court of equity in good faith.

The trial court found substantially in accordance with the allegations of the amended complaint, and found that the allegations of appellants' affirmative defenses were untrue, and from said findings concluding that appellants had violated the Unfair Practices Act, and that respondent was entitled to a judgment. Judgment was entered accordingly, by the terms of which appellants were "permanently enjoined and restrained from selling, offering for sale or advertising for sale, their articles or products (these words to have the definition given to them in Sec. 16 of the Unfair Practices Act of the State of California) in the State of California at less than the invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, of said articles or products respectively, to the defendant vendor, plus the cost of doing business incurred in the conduct of their general retail grocery business, including, without limitation, the expense of labor (including salaries), rent, interest on borrowed capital, depreciation, selling cost, maintenance of equipment, credit losses, all types of licenses, taxes, insurance and advertising; or from giving, offering to give, or advertising the intent to give within the State of California their articles or products (using the words in the sense and breadth defined above) in their general retail grocery business; provided, however, that such selling, offering for sale, advertising for sale, giving, offering to give, or advertising the intent to give away, such articles or products be for the purpose of injuring competitors of the defendant partnership and the nine defendant members thereof, or of destroying competition in the retail grocery business; provided, further, that this order, judgment and decree shall not apply to any sale, offer for sale, or advertisement for sale of any such articles or products made under those circumstances or any of those circumstances specified and set forth in sub-paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 6 of the Unfair Practices Act of the State of California."

Appellants raise the following points upon this appeal:

1. The judgment is void; 2. Respondents were not entitled to the remedy of injunction; 3. There is no proof of the cost of the articles sold; 4. There is no proof of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition; 5. The court erred in excluding testimony bearing upon the intent of appellants; 6. As applied to the facts of this case, the Unfair Practices Act is unconstitutional. We will discuss these contentions in the order of their statement.

[3] In urging their first point, appellants state: "* * * if this judgment is upheld, then the appellants would be exposed to the peril of contempt by mere proof of sale of some single article in the store without any further evidence showing that the sale was made with intent to violate the injunction."

However, we find that the injunction contains the following provision: "* * * provided, however, that such sale, offering for sale, * * * be for the purpose of injuring competitors of the defendant partnership and the nine defendant members thereof, or of destroying competition in the retail grocery trade."

It is therefore apparent that the injunction would not be violated unless it were proven that the future offense is for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition, and that these elements must necessarily be proved in any contempt proceeding.

Appellants next point out that the injunction restrains them from selling all articles or products defined in section 16 of the act, which section defines "article or product" as including any articles, products, commodities, thing, the value of service or output of a service trade. Appellants contend that this provision is a blanket provision restraining appellants from violating the act in general terms, and in every particular, and is so broad as to make it void. A reference to the injunction shows it clearly intends to apply only to appellants in the conduct of their retail grocery trade. The trial court found that the appellants, in the conduct of their grocery business mentioned above, sold merchandise below cost, as defined in the Unfair Practices Act, for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition. The injunction restrained them from continuing such practice.

[4] Appellants are in effect contending that the injunction should be limited to the sale of the articles shown by the evidence to have been sold below cost, and that future similar sales of other articles could only be dealt with in other and subsequent actions. Such a contention is not supported either by reason or authority. Such a construction of the act would encourage, rather than prevent, violations thereof.

In the case of Wholesale T. Dealers', etc., v. National Candy & T. Co., 11 Cal.2d 634, 82 P.2d 3, 118 A.L.R. 486, a case in which the constitutionality of the Unfair Practices Act was considered and upheld by our Supreme Court, the injunction against defendant restrained it as follows:

"(1) From selling, or offering or advertising for sale its products at less than invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, plus its cost of doing business;

"(2) from discriminating as to price between different sections, communities or cities by selling its products to customers at a lower rate in one section, community or city than in another, after making proper allowance for grade, quality, quantity and costs of transportation; and (3) from secretly paying or allowing rebates, refunds, commissions or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, to certain customers, not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions, whether used to cover up sales below cost and discrimination between localities, or otherwise."

[5] In the case of People v. Black's Food Store (People v. Green Frog Food Emp.), 16 Cal.2d 59, 105 P.2d 361, the Supreme Court affirmed an order granting a preliminary injunction in the following terms: "Now, Therefore, It is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that during the pendency of this action, or until the final dismissal thereof, or until the court shall otherwise order, the defendants and each of them, their agents, servants and employees, shall cease and desist from selling, offering for sale or advertising for sale any of their products in violation of the Unfair Practices Act of the State of California." In National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U.S. 426, 61 S.Ct. 693, 699, 85 L.Ed. 930, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"It is a salutary principle that when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts. * * *

"A federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past."

We conclude, therefore, that the injunction in the instant case merely restrained appellants from continuing the practice of selling articles of merchandise below cost, for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition, and that said injunction was within the issues made by the pleadings and supported by the findings of the trial court.

Appellants' second contention is that respondent is not entitled to the remedy of injunction. In support of this contention appellants point out the admitted facts that respondent is not a competitor of appellants, is not a resident of Yolo County, and has neither pleaded or proved any damage to himself by reason of the acts of appellants.

[6] It is of course true that it is the general rule that a private individual cannot maintain a suit for an injunction unless he suffers a special injury different from that suffered by the public at large. However, it is also true that the state may grant permission to any citizen to maintain such an action. Frost v. City of Los Angeles, 181 Cal. 22, 183 P. 342, 6 A.L.R. 468.

In the case of People v. Casa Co., 35 Cal. App. 194, at page 199, 169 P. 454, at page 457, it is said: "It is well established that the state may confer the right to bring an action to abate a public nuisance upon a private individual in addition to his existing right to bring such actions where there is a special injury to him. (State v. Fanning, 96 Neb. 123, 147 N.W. 215; Littleton v. Fritz [65 Iowa 488, 22 N.W. 641, 54 Am. Rep. 19], supra), and in this state this power is expressly conferred by section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which states that a person expressly authorized by statute may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted."

In 32 C.J., at page 48, it is stated: "In some states the general rule does not apply with reference to suits for injunction to restrain certain sorts of public injuries, because of statutes providing that any citizen may maintain a suit for injunction regardless of whether or not he will suffer particular injury."

In the instant case it is to be noted that section 10 of the Unfair Practices Act as amended by St.1937, p. 2398, provided:

"Any person * * * may maintain an action to enjoin a continuance of any act or acts in violation of any of the provisions of sections 1 to 7, inclusive, of this act and, if injured thereby, for the recovery of damages. * * * It shall not be necessary that actual damages to the plaintiff be alleged or proved."

[7] In Wholesale T. Dealers v. National Candy & T. Co., supra, it was held that said act is for the public welfare, is a part of its public policy, and constitutes a legitimate exercise of the police power. Our conclusion upon this point is that because of the specific provision in section 10 of the act, hereinbefore quoted, it was not necessary for respondent to allege or prove any special damage or injury to himself.

Appellants' third contention is that there is no proof of the cost of the articles sold. The record shows that respondent demanded that appellants produce their original invoices, and that appellants refused to do so, counsel for appellants stating: "We decline to produce it on the ground that there is no foundation laid for the demand. And on the further ground that we cannot be required to produce any book, paper or record here that can be used against us." Respondent thereupon called as witnesses the district managers of the various wholesale dealers who had sold merchandise to appellants, and upon each of them producing its original invoices, offered same in evidence. The following from the record is typical of the objections made by appellants to the various offers of the invoices:

"Mr. Huston: Now, we will object to this on the ground that the proper foundation has not been laid, and by that, I am not objecting on the grounds that this is a copy of the original invoice in their office but it is, primarily on the ground that there is no connection shown between the items in this invoice and any of the items alleged to have been sold on any date. There is no evidence of any witnesses who made the entries or who had any personal knowledge of the transactions at the time the entry was made and that it is hearsay.

"Mr. Mering: I will submit, your Honor, that that still is a true and correct copy of the original invoice that Mr. Huston has refused to surrender.

"The Court: The objection will be overruled and it will be admitted in evidence and marked next number."

[8] These invoices were admitted in evidence by the court over the objections of appellants. The various witnesses testified that these various invoices were on file in their respective offices, showing the various sales to appellants, and in view of the provision in section 3 of the act, that the term "cost," as applied to the distribution "cost," shall mean "the invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower," etc., it must be held that such evidence was material, and that the invoices were properly admitted in evidence.

Appellants contend that there was no connection between the items of the invoices and the items claimed to have been sold by appellants; and that there was an absence of proof as to whether the goods purchased by the appellants on the dates of the invoices were the same goods as sold on subsequent dates, as found by the court.

In order to illustrate the manner in which respondent sought to prove his case, we will state what the record shows, with reference to the item of Sego milk. It was alleged in the amended complaint that appellants' offered for sale, and sold, on March 25, 1939, and March 27, 1939, three tall cans for 17 cents, and six tall cans for 33 cents. Respondent offered in evidence invoices of sales of cases, each containing 48 tall cans of Sego milk, to appellants, all at $2.65 per case, on the following dates: January 4, 10 cases; January 9, 10 cases; January 16, 5 cases; February 1, 15 cases; February 10, 18 cases; February 15, 15 cases; March 1, 10 cases; March 8, 15 cases; March 14, 10 cases, March 22, 22 cases.

It is clear that the price at which appellants sold the Sego milk was lower than the invoice price, as shown by said invoices. What has been said with reference to Sego milk may be stated to be equally true with reference to the other items of merchandise claimed to have been sold by appellants in violation of the act.

[9] Appellants argue that evidence such as above set forth does not have sufficient weight to sustain a finding that the merchandise sold by appellants was the same merchandise mentioned in these invoices. They argue that appellants could have purchased any or all of these articles in numerous places in California, and that said articles actually sold could have been in storage at the time of the purchase included in the invoices, as appellants carried a reserve stock. We believe that the trial court had a right to infer that the Sego milk sold on March 25th and March 27th came from the invoices aggregating 118 cases of 48 cans each of Sego milk purchased by appellants from January 4th to March 22d. It may be, as appellants assert, that the Sego milk sold could have been purchased elsewhere by appellants, and it may be that appellants had a reserve stock of Sego milk in storage at the time of the purchases included in the invoices, but there is no evidence in the record to that effect. If such were the fact, appellants could easily have proved it, but they did not choose to do so, and when called by respondent under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they availed themselves of their constitutional right to refuse to testify, upon the ground that they might incriminate themselves. We are satified that the record supports the finding that the articles in question were sold by appellants at less than the cost thereof, in violation of the act.

Appellants' fourth contention is that there is no proof of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition.

Section 5 of the act reads as follows: "In all actions brought under the provisions of this act proof of one or more acts of selling or giving away any article or product below cost or at discriminatory prices, together with proof of the injurious effect of such acts, shall be presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition."

[10] Appellants contend that a finding that they violated the act cannot be based upon this presumption. The power of the legislature to create presumptions and prima facie evidence, is well established. In the case of Bandini Petroleum Co. v. Superior Court, 284 U.S. 8, 52 S.Ct. 103, 107, 76 L.Ed. 136, 78 A.L.R. 826, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Hughes, said: "The appellants make the further contention that the statute is invalid because of the provisions of § 8b (supra, p. 104) that 'the blowing, release or escape of natural gas into the air shall be prima facie evidence of unreasonable waste.' The state, in the exercise of its general power to prescribe rules of evidence, may provide that proof of a particular fact, or of several facts taken collectively, shall be prima facie evidence of another fact when there is some rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed. The legislative presumption is invalid when it is entirely arbitrary, or creates an invidious discrimination, or operates to deprive a party of a reasonable opportunity to present the pertinent facts in his defense. Mobile [J. & K. C.] R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U.S. 35, 43, 31 S.Ct. 136, 55 L.Ed. 78 [80], 32 L.R.A.,N.S., 226, Ann. Cas.1912A, 463 [2 N.C.C.A. 243]; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219, 238, 31 S.Ct. 145, 55 L.Ed. 191 [200]; Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U.S. [61], at pages 81, 82, 31 S.Ct. 337 [55 L.Ed. [369], 378, 379, Ann.Cas.1912C, 160], supra; Manley v. Georgia, 279 U.S. 1, 5, 6, 49 S.Ct. 215, 73 L.Ed. 575 [577, 578]; Western & A. R. Co. v. Henderson, 279 U.S. 639, 642, 49 S. Ct. 445, 73 L.Ed. 884 [887]. In the present case there is a manifest connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed, and under the construction placed upon the statute by the state court, there appears to be no deprivation of a full opportunity to present all the facts relating to operations within the field."

The evidence in the instant case is sufficient to sustain the finding that sales were made by appellants below invoice cost and below replacement cost. It also shows that the sales were not limited to one or two items, but covered a variety of articles. The evidence further shows that these low level prices continued over a period of time. The articles sold were advertised to be sold at said prices. The injurious consequences of the acts of appellants were established by the testimony of Roy Wyatt, a witness called by respondent. Mr. Wyatt operated a grocery store in the town of Esparto, in Yolo County. Mr. Wyatt testified, in substance, as follows: That he had been in business for some twenty-five years; that as a result of the low prices adhered to by appellants, trade was drawn away from him, and his business suffered; that customers who formerly bought of him, started to buy from appellants, and Mr. Wyatt had actually seen his customers in the store of appellants on several occasions. Appellants advertised in the Woodland Democrat, which was circulated in Esparto where Wyatt conducted his store.

[11] Having in mind the purposes of the act as declared by the legislature, we are convinced that under the facts shown by the record in this case, "there is a rational relationship between the facts proved and the ultimate fact presumed," and that the presumption of intent to injure competitors or destroy competition which section 5 of the act deduces from proof of sales below cost, together with proof of the injurious effect of such sales, "does not operate to deprive a party of a reasonable opportunity to present the pertinent facts in his defense."

[12, 13] The presumption created by section 5 of the act is, of course, a rebuttable presumption, and it is for the trial court to determine whether or not it has been overcome by the other evidence in the case. Where, as in the instant case, the facts were proved from which the court might properly hold that the presumption was created, the question of whether or not said sales were made by appellants with the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition, became a question for the trial court to determine. The case of Balzer v. Caler, 11 Cal.2d 663, 82 P.2d 19, was a case under the Unfair Practices Act before section 5 was amended in 1937 to contain the clause now under consideration. The trial court found that the acts of defendant in that case were not done with the "intent to injure competitors or destroy competition." While the appeal was pending, section 5 was amended to read as at present, and upon the appeal, it was contended by appellants that the existing law, rather than the law in force at the time of judgment, should be applied. In disposing of this contention the Supreme Court said, at page 665 of 11 Cal.2d, at page 21 of 82 P.2d: "Appellant contends that inasmuch as the cause involves a request for an injunction that the existing law rather than the law in force at the time of the judgment should be applied. In this connection it is pointed out that in 1937 the act was amended to clearly state that intent to injure competitors and lessen competition is a necessary element of the act prohibited, but that section 5 of the act was also amended to provide that in any action brought under the act the selling of an article below cost, together with proof of the injurious effect of such act 'shall be presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition.' Stats.1937, ch. 860, pp. 2395, 2397. Even if this section were held applicable to the instant case it would nevertheless still have to be held that the only competent admissible evidence introduced on this issue rebutted the presumption."

It is to be observed that in the case just cited the Supreme Court recognized the presumption, but held that, even if applicable to the case then under consideration, it had been rebutted by other testimony.

[14] Our conclusion upon this point is that the record supports the finding of the trial court that the sales proved in this case were made by appellants "with the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition."

[15] Appellants' fifth contention is that the court erred in excluding testimony bearing upon the intent of appellants.

Appellants offered in evidence certain advertisements of certain of their competitors named in the testimony of respondent's witness Wyatt. The trial court admitted all advertisements prior to the last date on which sales were alleged in the amended complaint, towit, August 30, 1939, but excluded all advertisements of appellants' competitors after that date. Appellants contend that this was error, but cite no authorities supporting such contention.

It was not alleged in the amended complaint that appellants had made any sales in violation of the act after that date, and we cannot see how the advertisement of a competitor after that date could have affected the intent of appellants prior to that date. We are therefore of the opinion that the trial court properly refused to admit such advertisements in evidence.

Lastly, appellants contended that the Unfair Practices Act as applied to the facts of this case, is unconstitutional.

[16] Appellants make a general attack upon the wisdom and reasonableness of this legislation, and urge many of the arguments that those familiar with the history of this type of legislation have heard opponents of such legislation make in legislative halls for many years. Legislatures, not courts, determine the wisdom or lack of wisdom of economic policies. The members of a court may not agree with the economic philosophy of the Unfair Practices Act, but it is no part of the duty of a court to determine whether or not the policy embodied in the statute is wise or unwise. As was said by Mr. Justice Field, (later, a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States), in the early case of Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502, 520: "It is not the province of the judiciary to pass upon the wisdom and policy of legislation; and when it does so, it usurps a power never conferred by the Constitution." The power of the court is limited to determining whether the subject of the legislation is within the State's power, and, if so, to determine whether the means adopted have a reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose and are neither arbitrary nor discriminatory.

"It is manifest that the statute was passed in the attempted exercise of the state's police power. That being so, the inquiry of this court is limited to determining whether the object of the statute is one for which the police power may legitimately be invoked, and, if so, whether the statute bears a reasonable and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained. These two problems involve substantially different considerations, and shall be separately discussed.

"That the avowed purpose of the act as stated in section 13 '* * * to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented' * * * is well within the state's police power cannot be seriously doubted. It has now become firmly established that the police power of the state extends not only to the preservation of the public health, safety and morals, but also extends to the preservation and promotion of the public welfare. In recent years the state, in promoting and advancing the general welfare of its citizens, has frequently and properly used this power to promote the general prosperity of the state by the regulation of economic conditions. This apparent extension of the police power is in fact no extension at all. The police power has not expanded. Its proper exercise has always been and still is confined to regulation in the public welfare, and has always been and still is subject to the standard of reasonableness in its relation to that interest. However, changed social, political and economic conditions have enlarged the field of conduct which may properly be subjected to regulation in order that the general welfare may be adequately protected. The proper application of the power cannot be measured by past precedents—the test is, of course, present day conditions. These principles have frequently been enunciated by this court and by the Supreme Court of the United States."

"With these cases, and many others that could be cited, in mind, it is obvious that the object of the present statute is within the state's police power. That the prevention of monopolies and the fostering of free, open and fair competition and the prohibition of unfair trade practices is in the public welfare is obvious, and requires no further citation of authority. In fact this is not seriously challenged by appellant. The main arguments advanced by appellant are that the act is unconstitutional in that it curtails its previously enjoyed privilege or right of fixing the price at which it is willing to sell its goods and of selling them at such prices, and that the act unlawfully deprives it of its freedom of action; that it is unreasonable and will not accomplish the purposes intended. These contentions go to the reasonableness of the statute in its relation to its avowed object, and do not attack the validity of that object.

"So far as pertinent here, the present act prohibits the sale of commodities below cost as defined in the act (with certain enumerated exceptions) but, as will later appear, such sale is only prohibited when engaged in 'for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition'. * * * In determining the validity of this provision (the object of the statute being within the police power of the state) we are limited in our inquiry to determining whether the act is one reasonably connected with its avowed purpose. In other words, are the means adopted reasonably designed to accomplish this purpose; do they have a real and substantial relation to the objects sought to be attained?"

"In discussing the question as to whether the statute is reasonably designed to accomplish its avowed purposes, the parties, and various amici curiae on their behalf, have written many briefs covering a wide field of discussion. On behalf of appellant it is urged that the means adopted by this statute—prohibiting sales below cost—cannot possibly prevent the creation of monopolies and will not foster free, open and fair competition. It is contended that this legislation in fact will stifle free and open competition and will foster monopolies and that it favors the large chain stores and large distributors as against the small merchant. On behalf of respondent the contrary is urged. It should be noted that amici curiae briefs have been filed on behalf of respondent by several of the trade associations representing the independent grocers and druggists of the state.

"It is not the province of this court to determine where the truth of this argument lies. If the subject is fairly debatable the determination of the legislature is conclusive. That the economic wisdom of such legislation is fairly debatable cannot be gainsaid. Courts have frequently commented on the destructiveness of price-cutting tactics. Nebbia v. New York, [291 U.S. 502, 54 S.Ct. 505, 78 L.Ed. 940, 89 A.L.R. 1469], supra; Hegeman Farms Corp. v. Baldwin, 293 U.S. 163, 55 S.Ct. 7, 79 L.Ed. 259; Highland Farms Dairy v. Agnew, 300 U.S. 608, 57 S.Ct. 549, 81 L.Ed. 835; Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, [5 Cal.2d 446, 55 P.2d 177], supra; Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 55 P.2d 495. The use of 'loss leaders' for the purpose of injuring a competitor has been condemned by many economists. It has been urged that their use is injurious to the consumer in that the losses so sustained will either have to be made up by higher prices charged on other commodities, or by the enforcing of various economies, such as the lowering of wages, discharge of employees, lowering of rents, depressing the wholesale prices, etc. It has many times been urged that such practices are destructive of competition and tend to create monopolies. See discussion in State v. Central Lumber Co., supra, and Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, supra. These arguments are mentioned not because we necessarily believe that they are sound, but to demonstrate that the practice condemned by this statute, according to the views held by a large portion of the body politic, tends toward the stifling of free and open competition, the creation of monopolies, and is injurious to the consuming public. It should also be mentioned that some 14 states have passed similar legislation. This is entitled to some weight in determining whether the means provided in the statute will tend to accomplish the valid and expressed purpose of the legislature."

On page 658 of 11 Cal.2d, page 17 of 82 P.2d, 118 A.L.R. 486, it is also stated:

"Other cases could be cited. We believe that these cases clearly establish the constitutionality of the statute here under attack. The statute must be held to be a reasonable attempt upon the part of the state to accomplish a valid object. It must be borne in mind that this statute does not regulate the selling of commodities—it is the predatory trade practice of selling below cost with intent to injure competitors which the legislature on reasonable grounds has determined is vicious and unfair that is prohibited. Such determination is clearly within the legislative power. The state may not have power to regulate all trade practices affecting competition, but it clearly has power to restrict or prohibit trade practices which upon reasonable grounds it determines are predatory, vicious, unfair and anti-social."

In the case of People v. Black's Food Store, supra [16 Cal.2d 59, 105 P.2d 362], a case in which a preliminary injunction granted under the "Unfair Practices Act" was involved, the court said:

"It has been held upon sound principle that the legislature has the authority, under its police powers, to regulate business for the general welfare of the public, by prohibiting merchants from selling products below cost 'for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition'. Wholesale T. Dealers v. National, etc. Co., 11 Cal.2d 634, 82 P.2d 3, 8, 118 A.L.R. 486."

[25] It would, therefore, appear to us that the constitutionality of the Unfair Practices Act is settled in California, and that there is nothing in the facts of the instant case that would make the act unconstitutional as applied to the facts shown by the record here.

For the reasons hereinbefore set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal and error 🔑832(1)

In action for damages sustained in collision between automobile driven by plaintiff and defendant's truck, where plaintiff testified that he did not think he had blown his horn, but one riding with plaintiff testified several times that plaintiff sounded horn, defendant's petition for rehearing after affirmance of judgment for plaintiff will not be granted on ground that appellate court's opinion contained untrue statement that evidence was conflicting with respect to whether plaintiff sounded horn.

On petition for rehearing.

Petition denied.

Prior opinion, 127 P.2d 58.

Harry W. Horton and Reginald L. Knox, Jr., both of El Centro, for appellant.

Clarence B. Smith, of El Centro, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

The appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing. With one exception, nothing is presented other than questions of fact. It is asserted, however, that the opinion contains an untrue statement in that it is there said that "the evidence is conflicting with respect to whether respondent sounded his horn." As pointed out, the respondent testified to the effect that he did not think he had blown his horn. But counsel has overlooked the fact that the witness Collett, who was riding with respondent at the time, testified at least four times that the respondent did sound his horn, which supports the statement made.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Virgil Joseph Neal and Orville Steven Graham were convicted of second degree burglary, and defendant Graham appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph K. Coady and J. Howard Sullivan, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Appellant and his codefendant Neal were jointly charged in an information with crime of burglary in that on December 16, 1941, they entered the men's furnishing store operated by Harry F. Teeter at Hynes, California, with the intent "to unlawfully and feloniously commit theft." The cause was submitted to the trial court (sitting without a jury) upon the transcript of the preliminary hearing together with additional testimony concerning the purported confessions made by appellant Graham to the arresting officers.

From the judgments of conviction of the crime of burglary of the second degree, appeals were taken by both defendants. The appeal of defendant Neal was dismissed on June 22, 1942, leaving for the consideration of this court the appeal of defendant Graham from said judgment of conviction.

Appellant urges (1) that the court erred in finding him guilty before it determined whether his confession was free and voluntary; (2) that the evidence showed said confession to be involuntary and procured by fraud.

The record herein reveals that when Harry F. Teeter, who operated a men and boy's clothing store at Hynes, California, arrived at his store on the morning of December 17, 1941, he found articles of clothing, jewelry, etc., missing. Upon investigation he discovered the door to the store had been opened and a skylight broken. He testified that he locked the door before leaving the store the previous night and had given no one permission to enter the store; that he checked the items missing and estimated their value at $800; that on December 18, 1941, he recovered practically 100 per cent of the missing articles. On December 18th, Edward A. Fachman, a deputy sheriff, arrested appellant in company with the defendant Neal. At the preliminary hearing said officer was asked if he had a conversation with appellant and defendant Neal at the Norwalk police station after making the arrests (at which time appellant acknowledged he participated in the crime) to which question the witness replied in the affirmative and said that the statements made by appellant were free and voluntary. Appellant's counsel was permitted by the magistrate to propound a few questions to said officer on voir dire, after which appellant sought permission to put on evidence showing that the confession was not free and voluntary, to which latter request the objection of the prosecution was sustained. The hearing was continued to January 5, 1942, at which time appellant renewed his said request which was overruled, and at the conclusion of officer Fachman's testimony appellant's motion to strike on the ground that the alleged confession "was obtained by fraud and by duress and by blows," was denied.

On March 2, 1942, when the cause came on for hearing before the trial court, appellant offered to submit the same upon the transcript of the preliminary hearing together with the testimony of three witnesses (then present in the court room), in the event the trial court wished to interrogate them regarding the circumstances under which the appellant confessed to the crime charged against him. The prosecution stipulated that the cause might be submitted on the said transcript and that all prosecution witnesses might be excused except the officers who had testified at the preliminary hearing with respect to appellant's confession being free and voluntary.

After reading the transcript of the preliminary hearing, the trial court commented at length upon the conduct of the case, and, among others, made the following remarks:

"There is a very serious question in my mind, gentlemen, as to the ruling made by the magistrate who heard this matter. * * * In fact, the court won't hesitate at this time to state that the magistrate was absolutely in error in not allowing the defendants to put on evidence on voir dire as to whether or not these statements were free and voluntary statements. * * * I will have to have additional testimony * * * to clear up a very important point as to whether or not the fundamental rights of these defendants have been invaded here. * * * I assume you will put both your clients on the stand and they will positively pick out a certain man or men, as the case may be, as the man who did the beating up here, if there was any such thing done, and it is a fact those officers should be here to either deny it or admit it, that is the thing, and then it is up to the court to draw his own conclusions. You know, this idea of an officer beating up on a prisoner, sometimes they ask for it, smart kids sometimes go popping off at an officer and the officer will only take so much, but that is not any reason or grounds for an officer to beat a fellow into submission, where he makes the statement that he is going to involve himself. As I say, I want to get all the facts. I do not want to simply go on the statement of an officer here, so far as he is concerned, he does not know of anybody having beaten up these boys."

Thereafter, the witness Joe Hernandez testified that he and two friends were arrested on December 18th and about eight or eight-thirty that evening were taken to the sheriff's substation at Norwalk and confined in the "tank" there for about two hours, charged with possession of a gamecock. Said witness stated that when he was put in the tank he saw appellant and shortly thereafter officers took appellant away; that about thirty minutes later appellant was brought back and was then "full of blood * * * he says those cops hit him * * * I notice he got blood all over his mouth * * * he was spitting blood * * * and then he cannot speak very good, you see, he say he got some pain in the stomach where the cop hit him * * * and then he was sick"; that appellant was not bloody when taken from the tank.

The witness Garcia testifying through an interpreter stated appellant was in the tank when he arrived a few minutes after eight p. m. of the day in question; that appellant was all right when the officers took him out; that appellant returned in fifteen or twenty minutes "complaining with his hand on his cheek bleeding, and then with pain, pointing to his stomach or abdomen." Said witness stated he could not speak English and understood about one word in twenty. It was stipulated that the testimony of the third man, Valenzuela, would be the same as that of Garcia.

Appellant was examined on voir dire and testified in great detail as to the beating and ill treatment he received at the hands of the deputy sheriffs and officers attached to the Norwalk station; and that finally because he "was afraid they would take me out and really give me a good beating up, and I said, 'Yes, I was with him (Neal)', and they said, 'That is all we wanted', so then they took me over and put me back in the hold-over tank."

Two deputy sheriffs took the stand and denied using force or violence on appellant and stated they saw no one else use force or violence on him in order to secure his confession; that they saw no marks, bruises or blood on appellant's person and that he made no complaints to them that force had been used on him. Two officers and the desk sergeant at the station corroborated the testimony of the deputies.

Appellant while on the stand testified that one officer (Foell) punched him in the stomach, while he (appellant) was seated in the chair with his feet on the floor, and knocked appellant six or seven feet without knocking the chair over. Said officer denied this charge and testified he saw no one strike appellant; saw no marks or bruises on his face during the day or night of December 18th.

After argument the cause was submitted, whereupon the trial court commented as follows: "Well, I am satisfied in this case that there has been no force or violence used, and it does not take any particular courage for this court to say that. I don't know any reason why the court ought to go in the face of the evidence presented here, or to turn around and get a little false courage and say he does not believe the officers and he believes the Mexicans. * * * Therefore, the court now feels that these confessions are now properly before the court and must stand as they were related by the officers at the time."

[1-3] From the foregoing it conclusively appears that before the trial court found appellant guilty it permitted him to introduce all the evidence he had available concerning the means by which his confession was obtained, thus effectively curing the error committed by the magistrate's ruling at the preliminary hearing. After hearing and considering the testimony of the police officers the court resolved the conflict created thereby against appellant, and concluded that his confession was free and voluntary. It is not a function of an appellate court to pass upon the credibility of witnesses, and the fact that the trial court believed the police officers rather than appellant and his witnesses was a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.

The evidence produced at the trial herein amply supports the trial court's judgment.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

Generally, where for any reason a trustee fails to protect trust assets from adverse claims, a beneficiary may do so and may be awarded counsel fees out of the assets if the defense is conducted in good faith and on reasonable grounds, and a different rule does not apply even though beneficiary is unsuccessful in litigation.

4. Building and loan associations 🔑42(16)

Where a savings and loan company's investment certificate holders brought suit to have a trust imposed upon certain assets of another company, and building and loan commissioner thereafter took possession of latter company's assets, and holders were successful in the litigation, and commissioner intervened therein and remained neutral throughout trial, and it was necessary for defendant company's best interests that suit be defended, superior court properly awarded defendant company counsel fees, costs and expenses of litigation to be paid by commissioner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Suit by John Eggert and others against Pacific States Savings & Loan Company and others to obtain a declaration that a certain agreement constituted a transfer of assets in trust for plaintiffs' benefit, wherein Ralph W. Evans, as Building and Loan Commissioner, intervened, and there was a judgment for plaintiffs. From an order directing Ralph W. Evans, as Building and Loan Commissioner, to pay fees of attorneys for Pacific States Savings & Loan Company, Ralph W. Evans, as Building and Loan Commissioner, appealed. After the transcript was filed, Ralph W. Evans resigned as Commissioner and Harley Hise, who was appointed Commissioner, was substituted as intervener and appellant.

Order affirmed.

George S. Dennison, of Los Angeles, W. G. Harmon, of San Francisco, and Alan G. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

O'Melveny & Myers, Louis W. Myers, Pierce Works, and W. B. Carman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

From an order directing appellant building and loan commissioner to pay respondent's attorney's fees in the sum of $36,270, together with costs and expenses advanced by said counsel, in an action wherein respondent resisted an attempt to place a trust upon assets which had been transferred to respondent Fidelity Savings and Loan Company, appellant[1] appeals.

So far as material here, the undisputed facts are:

May 23, 1931, Fidelity Savings and Loan Company (hereinafter referred to as Fidelity) transferred all of its assets to the respondent, Pacific States Savings and Loan Company (hereinafter referred to as Pacific States), pursuant to a written agreement, which provided among other things that Pacific States should issue to Fidelity or its investors approximately $23,000,000 of so-called Fidelity Definite Term Certificates and approximately $7,500,000 nominal value of Fidelity Participating Certificates. The definite term certificates were to be paid five years after the date of the agreement and to bear interest at 6 per cent. The participating certificates were to be paid out of any net proceeds which were to be realized from the subsequent operation and disposition or other "valuation" as defined in the agreement, by Pacific States of the acquired assets.

The term of the original agreement was for five years or to May 23, 1936. By supplemental agreement the maturity date of the certificates was extended to May 23, 1938.

June 17, 1931, appellant as building and loan commissioner of the state of California took possession of the assets of Fidelity which consisted solely of the Master Fidelity Definite Term Investment Certificate and the Master Fidelity Participating Investment Certificate issued under the agreement of May 23, 1931, between Fidelity and Pacific States, and of any rights of Fidelity under said agreement.

After execution of the agreement, holders of Fidelity investment certificates exchanged them for definite term and participating certificates to such an extent that the face amount of the master certificates held by appellant is approximately $750,000. Pacific States did not pay the definite term certificates in full on May 23, 1936, or at any time thereafter. October 28, 1938, holders of Fidelity definite term certificates and Fidelity participating certificates brought the present action against Pacific States to obtain a declaration that the agreement of May 23, 1931, between Fidelity and Pacific States did not constitute an outright sale but in fact constituted a transfer in trust for the benefit of plaintiff. March 4, 1939, appellant as building and loan commissioner for the state of California took possession of the assets of Pacific States. March 6, 1939, pursuant to section 13.12 of the Building and Loan Association Act, St.1931, p. 540, Pacific States commenced an action in the Superior Court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, contesting the action of appellant in taking possession of its assets. October 30, 1939, pursuant to the same section appellant filed in said Superior Court a written notice of his determination to liquidate Pacific States. March 16, 1939, appellant filed a complaint in intervention in the present action. The main question presented remained the same as before the intervention, to wit: Did the transfer of assets from Fidelity to Pacific States by the agreement of May 23, 1931, constitute an outright sale of the assets of Fidelity to Pacific States or a transfer in trust for the benefit of Fidelity, its creditors, and certificate holders?

July 7, 1941, the trial court held in favor of plaintiffs' contention that the agreement constituted a transfer in trust for the benefit of Fidelity, its creditors, and certificate holders, and, pursuant to appropriate petition of Pacific States, made the following finding, upon which is predicated the order here questioned:

[1] At the time the present action was instituted Ralph W. Evans was Building and Loan Commissioner for the State of California. After the transcript was filed herein he resigned as such commissioner and Harley Hise was duly appointed and qualified in his place and stead and by appropriate proceedings has been substituted as intervener and appellant in this case.

"2. The above entitled action was defended by Pacific States through its counsel of record, the firm of O'Melveny & Myers, in good faith and on reasonable grounds. The defense of said action was necessary for the proper protection and preservation of the business, properties and assets of Pacific States in the possession of intervener Ralph W. Evans, and said defense inured directly to the benefit of said business, property and assets in the possession of said intervener as Building and Loan Commissioner of the State of California and as well to the benefit of, primarily, the creditors and certificate holders of Pacific States and, secondarily, petitioner itself.

"3. Ralph W. Evans, intervener herein, heretofore intervened and appeared herein in the several capacities of (a) Building and Loan Commissioner of the State of California, (b) statutory liquidator of Fidelity Savings and Loan Association, (c) Fidelity trustee under order of this court dated on or about December 30, 1931, and (d) Building and Loan Commissioner in possession of the business, properties and assets of Pacific States. Said intervener in his various capacities has acted throughout the course of said action as a neutral and did not defend the above entitled action either on behalf of Pacific States, its business, properties and assets, or its creditors or certificate holders, or otherwise or at all.

"4. The reasonable value of the services rendered Pacific States, its business, properties and assets, and as well its creditors and certificate holders, in the defense of said action by said firm of O'Melveny & Myers was and is the sum of $36,270."

Appellant urges for reversal of the order two propositions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

First: The Superior Court of Los Angeles County is without jurisdiction to direct appellant to pay attorney's fees of respondent's counsel from the assets of Pacific States.

[1, 2] This proposition is untenable. Appellant after taking possession of the assets of Fidelity and Pacific States, occupied the status of trustee of the assets of each of said corporations (Evans v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 563, 573, 96 P.2d 107), and it was his duty as such trustee to take all reasonable means for the protection of these assets for the benefit of the respective corporations, their stockholders, investment certificate holders, and creditors. Hence, when plaintiffs sought to have a trust imposed upon certain assets of the Pacific States, it was appellant's duty to defend against this attempt to impress a lien upon the assets of the trust which he was administering. Hence, he properly voluntarily intervened in the present action and thereby the court acquired jurisdiction in personam over appellant, which conferred upon the court plenary powers with reference to all matters directly or incidentally arising with respect to the present litigation. (Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 197, et seq., 152 P. 542.)

Second: The trial court had no authority in an action of this nature to fix or allow respondent's attorney's fees.

[3] This proposition is also untenable. It is the general rule that, where for any reason a trustee fails to protect trust assets from adverse claims, a beneficiary may do so and may be awarded counsel fees out of the trust assets, if the defense is conducted in good faith and on reasonable grounds. (Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U.S. 527, 532, 26 L.Ed. 1157; see, also, Beach on Trusts and Trustees (1897), vol. 2, 1599, § 698.) See, also, for the application of the same principle to an analogous situation. (Anderson v. Great Republic Life Insurance Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 181, 190, 106 P.2d 75.) A different rule does not apply, even though the beneficiary is unsuccessful in the litigation. (Dingwell v. Seymour, 91 Cal.App. 483, 513, 267 P. 327.)

In the present case appellant as trustee of the assets of both Fidelity and Pacific States found himself on both sides of the present litigation with conflicting interests. It was to the interest of Fidelity that plaintiffs be successful; on the other hand, it was to the interest of Pacific States that respondent prevail. Therefore, appellant properly, after intervening in the action, remained neutral as between the conflicting claims and permitted respondent through its counsel to continue to contest the claim of plaintiffs. Plaintiffs were suing not as creditors of the Pacific States but as beneficiaries of an independent trust upon which they sought to impress a claim superior to any claim of the beneficiaries of the trust which appellant was administering as trustee of the Pacific States assets.

In view of the nature of plaintiffs' claim, the case of In re Pacific Coast Building-Loan Association, 15 Cal.2d 155, 99 P.2d 261, has no application, because in such case there was a contest between beneficiaries, both claiming under a single trust, while in the present case the parties had conflicting claims under independent trusts. Such case is likewise distinguishable from the present case, for the reason that in the Pacific Coast Building-Loan Association case, supra, the commissioner was in fact neutral, having no interest on either side but acting purely in his administrative capacity, while in the present case appellant had directly conflicting interests on both sides of the litigation.

[4] Applying the above rule to the facts of the instant case, since the trial court found, and it is not questioned that appellant remained neutral throughout the trial, that it was necessary for the best interests of respondent that the action be defended, and that it was defended in good faith and on reasonable grounds, it was proper for the trial court to award respondent counsel fees, costs, and expenses of the litigation.

For the foregoing reasons the order is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurred.

SHINN, Justice.

There is before us an appeal by defendant from an order denying his motion for change of place of trial. The action, which was brought in Los Angeles County, is for the recovery of damages for breach of contract. Defendant's motion as originally presented was for a transfer of the action to Sacramento County upon the ground that defendant resided in that county at the time of the commencement of the action.

[1] The law which controls in a case of this sort is found in section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the provisions of which the county in which the defendant resided at the time of the commencement of the action was the proper county for the trial unless defendant contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, in which case either the county where performance was to be had or the county of defendant's residence was the proper one for the trial of an action founded on such obligation (the county where the obligation is incurred is deemed the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary). It was necessary for the court to answer the following questions: (1) Did defendant reside in the county of Sacramento on March 7, 1941, the day the action was commenced? (2) where was the contract executed? and (3) was there a special contract in writing for performance other than in the county where the contract was executed? In support of the correctness of the court's ruling we have to assume that all of the material facts which were in issue were decided by the court in favor of plaintiff-respondent, namely, that defendant did not reside in Sacramento County at the time of the commencement of the action or that the obligation was incurred in Los Angeles County. The possible situation that the obligation may have been incurred in one county with a special contract in writing to perform it in another does not enter into the case, that is to say, there is no contention and, as will be seen from the contract itself, there could be none that performance was to be had in Los Angeles County.

According the greatest weight to the evidence which tends to support the implied findings in favor of respondent we think it showed without substantial conflict that the obligation was incurred in the county of San Francisco and that defendant resided at the time of the commencement of the action in the county of Sacramento. In either case Los Angeles County was not the proper county for the trial of the action.

The contract was dated November 15, 1939, and was executed by the contracting parties in San Francisco. In its material provisions it expressed an agreement between the parties as follows: (1) Defendant sold to plaintiff a going business in the manufacture and sale of frozen confections, to be paid for as follows: "The purchaser agrees to pay therefor the sum of $75,000, upon which the sum of $1,000 paid on signing this agreement shall be credited and the balance in cash or certified check payable on conveyance of title or when the seller may elect"; (2) plaintiff agreed to employ defendant for two years at a stipulated compensation plus actual and necessary expenses, and defendant agreed that he would to the best of his ability devote his whole time to increase and develop the business of the purchaser; (3) defendant agreed to reduce to writing certain new ideas about the business and to place the same in escrow with a bank at Sacramento, to be delivered to plaintiff within six months after the date of the agreement, defendant to receive 10 per cent of the net revenue derived from the use of said new ideas for a given number of years; (4) transfer of title and delivery of all papers should take place on the 22d day of November, 1939, at Sacramento, California, or at whatever other time or place was mutually agreed upon by the parties. On November 22, 1939, in the county of Los Angeles, a further agreement was entered into between the parties, which provided that instead of $75,000 cash plaintiff would pay $25,000 cash November 22, 1939, receipt of which was acknowledged by the agreement, that certain items which were to be prorated under the agreement, such as rentals, salaries, light, etc., should be adjusted within fifteen days after November 22, 1939; that $25,000 would be paid on or before May 15, 1940, and the entire balance, as adjusted, on or before May 15, 1941. Plaintiff agreed to deposit with a Los Angeles bank bonds satisfactory to the defendant sufficient to secure the deferred payments, the interest on the bonds to be paid to plaintiff. The adjustment was made, the bonds were deposited and transfer of title took place as agreed.

The complaint charged that the agreement had been breached by the defendant in certain respects, namely, that defendant for approximately a year prior to the commencement of the action failed and neglected to devote his time and ability to increase and develop the business and neglected said business, to plaintiff's damage, in the sum of $36,000; that defendant devoted a substantial part of his time and energies and resources to the development of a competing business, wilfully hindered plaintiff's business, and assisted a competitor by various alleged means and devices, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $25,000, and that defendant failed, refused and neglected to reduce to writing his new ideas concerning said business and to deposit such writing in escrow for plaintiff's benefit, as provided by the agreement, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $30,000. It will be noted that there was no breach of the agreement to transfer the business. It will also be noted that the obligations upon which the present action is founded were incurred by the terms of and at the time of the signing of the agreement which was executed in San Francisco. The agreement of November 22, 1939, which we will call the supplemental agreement and which was signed in Los Angeles, imposed upon the defendant no additional obligation except to forego the right to receive the total purchase price in cash and to accept payment upon other terms.

[2] Counsel are agreed that the trial court regarded the act of signing the supplemental agreement as the final act of the parties in the execution of the contract and held accordingly that the obligation upon which the action is founded was incurred in the county of Los Angeles, was to be performed there, since there was no written stipulation to perform it elsewhere, and that therefore the action was triable in Los Angeles County even though the defendant resided in another county at the time of the commencement of the action. We are not able to give the contract this construction and effect. The action is not founded upon any obligation of the defendant incurred by the supplemental agreement, if indeed, it could be said that he assumed an obligation at all, in a sense to be recognized here, in agreeing to extend the time for the payment of two-thirds of the purchase price. The supplemental agreement is so lacking in materiality to the issues involved that the case could be tried and determined without proof of the supplemental agreement itself. Respondent contends that the original agreement was incomplete, that the supplemental agreement "was an integral and necessary part of the contract between the parties and was the final act giving binding force and effect to the agreement of the parties." But if the supplemental agreement had never been made, the original agreement would have been complete and the purchase price, less $1,000, would have been payable in full in cash or by certified check on conveyance of title. The option was with defendant whether he would receive payment at some other time; his failure to stipulate a different time of payment would have detracted nothing from the completeness of the agreement. The action therefore could not properly have been held for trial in Los Angeles County upon the theory that the obligation was incurred in that county or upon the ground that it was to be performed there.

We now take up the evidence bearing upon the implied finding that defendant did not reside in Sacramento County. It was recited in the agreement of November 15, 1939, that defendant resided in Sacramento at that time and it is not disputed that he did reside there. Certain other facts were established without conflict by affidavits filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, namely, that defendant had resided in Sacramento from 1932 until after the date of the agreement; that he had three ice cream plants which he sold to plaintiff, one in Sacramento, one in Fresno and the third in Oakland, which he operated through a corporation, Frigid Process Company; that soon after plaintiff purchased these businesses a new corporation was formed under the name Frigid Process Corporation, which acquired the three mentioned plants and purchased one other in South Pasadena; that defendant became president and general manager of this new corporation; that at plaintiff's request he came to Los Angeles in December, 1939, managed the South Pasadena plant and the other plants as well; that he then took up his residence in Los Angeles and maintained an apartment there until December, 1940; that from April to July, 1940, he had headquarters in the South Pasadena plant but spent most of his time in Oakland, Sacramento, and other Northern California districts; while away from Los Angeles he was paid his traveling expenses by plaintiff; in July, 1940, the general home office of the Frigid Process Corporation was established in Los Angeles; from July, 1940, to December, 1940, defendant had no business headquarters; in December, 1940, at plaintiff's request, he established headquarters at a hotel in Oakland, where he lived until February 15, 1941, during which time he was paid his traveling expenses away from Oakland; that on the latter date he moved to Sacramento and continued to live there at the home of his brother-in-law, one Bertagna, and also rented an apartment in Sacramento, where he transacted his business, although he had callers, received his mail and telephone calls at the home of his brother-in-law; he did not charge to plaintiff and did not receive his expenses while in Sacramento subsequent to February 15, 1941.

It was not shown that defendant maintained a residence in Los Angeles at any time after December, 1940, when he moved to Oakland, nor whether he had any family other than his brother-in-law in Sacramento. It was not denied that from and after December, 1939, defendant spent the greater portion of his time away from Los Angeles on business of the company. No fact or circumstance was shown tending to prove that defendant expected to leave Sacramento after he moved there February 15, 1941, and to take up his residence elsewhere, or that he had any reason to do so. By affidavit he stated that it had always been his intention to return to Sacramento where he had always considered his home to be and tc keep that as his permanent home. His other residences in Los Angeles and Oakland were taken up at the request of his company and for business reasons. It was not shown that he owned any real estate either in Los Angeles or Sacramento counties. In support of the motion the brother-in-law, Bertagna, made affidavit that he had rented his home which he owned in Sacramento to defendant about February 15, 1941, and by affidavit of a witness on behalf of plaintiff it was shown that Bertagna had stated over the telephone to the witness that he, Bertagna, was renting the house himself and that the defendant was living there with him as his guest. Except in this minor particular the evidence bearing upon the question of residence was without conflict.

[3, 4] We do not find in the record any evidence which would support a finding that defendant resided in Los Angeles County rather than in Sacramento County. If his residence was not in one county it was in the other and all of the evidence is to the effect that it was in the latter county. The matter of residence is essentially one of intention. Defendant had resided in Sacramento seven years and had been engaged in business in that county for seven years before selling out to plaintiff. He returned there after a temporary absence due to the demands of business and the requests of the plaintiff. Upon this showing and except for an attempted amendment of the motion to change place of trial, the action in our opinion should have been transferred to the county of Sacramento.

[5, 6] We feel that we should add that in discussing the matter of residence we have had in mind that there is nothing in the record to show that the trial judge either believed or found that defendant did not reside in Sacramento County. We have been obliged to presume that he did so find because such a finding would have given support to the order. We doubt whether the order would have been the same had the decision depended solely upon the question of residence. In view of the admitted fact that the court construed the contract as one executed in Los Angeles County, the question of residence would have seemed immaterial as the action would then have been triable in Los Angeles County even though defendant lived in Sacramento County.

Another matter requires attention. Before a ruling was made on the motion defendant gave notice of an intended amendment so that his motion would request a transfer to the city and county of San Francisco or other proper county on the stated ground that the obligation sued on was incurred in San Francisco. Affidavits and counter affidavits were filed on the application for leave to amend. The motion for transfer to Sacramento County and the motion to amend came on for hearing at the same time and both were denied. As the right to amend is one which the court may withhold in its discretion we would be hesitant under ordinary circumstances to disturb such a ruling, but here there were unusual conditions. We believe the order must be reversed and that defendant's amendment should be allowed. There are several considerations leading to this conclusion. The most important one is that the case was improperly held in Los Angeles County for trial. We believe also that the court in declining to allow the amendment found that the execution of the supplemental agreement in Los Angeles County was decisive as to the proper county for the trial of the cause and that the city and county of San Francisco for that reason would not be the proper county for trial of the action. We believe defendant was shown to have the right to a transfer of the action either to Sacramento County or the city and county of San Francisco.

The order is reversed with directions that the action be transferred to the city and county of San Francisco unless defendant within a time designated by the court waives his right for transfer to the city and county of San Francisco, and if such waiver is made transfer shall be made to Sacramento County.

Action for divorce by Ruth Lyle against Clayton H. Lyle, wherein an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered awarding to defendant the custody of the minor children of plaintiff and defendant. McCOMB, Justice.

From an order awarding the custody of the parties' minor children to plaintiff on an application to modify the terms of an interlocutory decree of divorce, defendant appeals.

So far as material here, the essential facts are:

By an interlocutory decree of divorce the trial court awarded to defendant the custody of the minor children of plaintiff and defendant. Thereafter plaintiff made a motion to modify the decree by having the custody of the children awarded to her. At the time this motion came on for hearing the following colloquy occurred between counsel for plaintiff, Mr. Farr, and the court:

"Mr. Farr: I might state that we suggested Your Honor appoint an investigator. There are children involved.

* * * * *

"The Court: I understand that. I will have an investigator go into it."

Thereafter the court appointed an investigator who made a report which the court approved and the court thereafter ordered that the custody of the children be awarded to plaintiff. It is conceded that the entire evidence upon which the order was made consisted of an affidavit which plaintiff filed in support of her motion and the report of the investigator appointed by the court.

Defendant urges that the order should be reversed, for the reason that the court was without authority to delegate to an assistant the duty of investigating the conditions surrounding the children and bas- ing its order upon the report of such assistant.

[1] Defendant may not urge the foregoing proposition as ground for reversal of the order of the trial court, for the reason that the law is established that a party cannot successfully complain of error in the trial court which he has himself invited. (Van Der Veer v. Winegard, 41 Cal.App.2d 518, 521, 107 P.2d 97; Reed & Co. v. Harshall, 12 Cal.App. 697, 706, 108 P. 719; 5 C.J.S. (1937), Appeal and Error, p. 173, § 1501; 2 Cal.Jur. 847, § 496.)

[2] In the present case it is evident that the investigator was appointed at the suggestion of defendant's counsel and that no objection was made to the court's receiving and acting upon the investigator's report. Therefore, defendant has waived any error in the course followed by the trial judge.

The opinion of this court upon the use of investigators in domestic relations cases is ably expressed by Mr. Justice Hanson in Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 589, 122 P.2d 96, and the views therein expressed we again approve and commend to the careful consideration of the trial judges handling domestic relations cases.

For the foregoing reasons the order is affirmed.

Where an automobile indemnity policy contained exclusion clauses exempting insurer from liability if an accident occurs while automobile is being used under any of conditions therein specified, proof alone of existence of any of those conditions at time of accident suspends coverage under policy, and insurer's exemption from liability does not depend upon condition becoming cause of accident or even contributing to the casualty.

4. Appeal and error 🔑999(3), 1008(1)

The question whether indulgence in intoxicating liquor by automobile driver has affected driver's observation, alertness, or sound judgment, or has encouraged recklessness or caused drowsiness, is a "question of fact" to be determined by trial court or jury from the evidence adduced in particular case.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

5. Insurance 🔑665(4)

Even if phrase "had been drinking intoxicating liquor", as used in provision in automobile liability policy relieving insurer from liability if insured or driver had been drinking intoxicating liquor at time of accident could be construed as relieving insurer from liability only upon showing that drinking had some influence upon insured or driver in operation of automobile, evidence supported trial court's finding that liquor drunk by insured influenced his operation of automobile at time of accident, so as to relieve insurer from liability to injured person.

6. Insurance ⟹311(1)

An injured person suing upon a policy of public liability insurance is bound by limitations thereof to same extent as the insured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Minnie Bradley and another against the Pacific Employers Insurance Company, as insurance carrier of William Schassler, to recover the amount of two separate judgments for damages theretofore obtained by plaintiffs against Schassler on account of injuries received by them in an automobile collision. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Van A. Neher, of San Francisco, and Phillips & Munck, and Robert M. Corson, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Weinmann, Quayle & Berry, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The plaintiffs, Minnie Bradley and Georgia Wells, brought this action against the insurance carrier of William Schassler to recover the amount of two separate judgments for damages in the sums of $1,196 and $341 theretofore obtained by plaintiffs against Schassler on account of injuries received by them in a collision between an automobile owned and driven by Schassler and the one in which plaintiffs were riding. The defendant company denied liability upon the ground that certain conditions specified in the policy exempting the insurer from liability existed at the time of the accident. The trial court so found, and accordingly rendered judgment for defendant, from which plaintiffs appeal. Insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and judgment is the ground of appeal. The points urged in that behalf are without merit.

The insurance policy sued upon is known as a "Non-Alcoholic Policy." It is issued in consideration of a reduced premium. On the outside of the policy, at the top, in large red type, appeared the notation "NON-ALCOHOLIC POLICY"; and at the top of the first page, inside, also in large red type, appeared the notation "This Policy Contains Alcoholic Exclusions: See Section 2 Paragraph 'E' of the Conditions." The exclusions thus referred to provided: "This Insurance is Subject to the Following Conditions, Limitations, and Agreements: * * * 2. EXCLUSIONS. It Is a Material Condition of This Policy: * * * (E) The Company shall not be liable under Section Two (2) of the Policy, (1), if at the time of the accident intoxicating liquor is being carried in or on the automobile covered herein; (2) if the Assured or Driver had been drinking intoxicating liquor; (3) if the Assured or Driver was driving while intoxicated. For the purposes of this policy all beverages of any alcoholic content (except those beverages which are commonly known as 'non-alcoholic') shall be considered intoxicating liquor. Conclusive proof of the carrying, transportation or use of intoxicating liquor shall be either or all of the following conditions: (1) By the statement of the Assured, Driver, or any other person having knowledge of such possession, use or transportation of said liquor; (2) By the findings and/or reports of Police Investigators; (3) By the statement and/or testimony of witnesses in any trial or prosecution of any claim arising out of the accident." The basic findings of the trial court were that "* * * at the time of and within one hour prior to said accident * * * said William Schassler had been drinking intoxicating liquor within the definition contained in said policy of automobile insurance as set forth in paragraph II of these findings, and that said William Schassler exhibited evidence of said drinking at the time and place of said accident, and subsequent thereto, and that said facts were conclusively established within the provisions of said policy of automobile insurance by written statements signed and approved by said William Schassler, and by statements of other persons having knowledge of such use of said intoxicating liquor." The evidence supporting the foregoing findings consists of the testimony of Schassler, who was called as a witness by plaintiff, two written statements made and signed by him after the accident, and the stipulated testimony of a doctor. Schassler's testimony and written statements were to the effect that he had been drinking intoxicating liquor before the accident, and the stipulation covering the doctor's testimony was that he examined Schassler half an hour after the accident and that Schassler then "had liquor or alcohol upon his breath which was noticeable to the doctor."

Plaintiffs contend, however, that the exclusion clause in question is ambiguous, and that construed most strongly against the insurer placed upon the defendant the burden of establishing not only that Schassler had been drinking intoxicating liquor, but also that the drinking thereof "had some influence" on him in the operation of his car, and "some relevancy" to the happening of the accident; and that since Schassler claimed in his testimony and written statements that the intoxicating liquor he drank did not affect his "sobriety" and that he was not intoxicated, defendant failed to bring the case within the scope of the exclusion clause relied upon.

[1-3] The evidence showing that Schassler drank intoxicating liquor to the extent and within such close proximity of time to the happening of the accident that the liquor was noticeable upon his breath half an hour after the accident, is legally sufficient to support the trial court's finding that Schassler "had been drinking intoxicating liquor within the definition contained in the policy." It is doubtless true and in fact defendant concedes that the phrase "had been drinking intoxicating liquor" should be construed to mean had been drinking at the time of the accident, and not at some time remote thereto; but it is quite certain that defendant was not required to show that the fact that Schassler had been drinking intoxicating liquor was the proximate cause of the accident, for as held in the following cases, where an automobile indemnity policy contains exclusion clauses exempting the insurer from liability if an accident occurs while the automobile is being used under any of the conditions therein specified, proof alone of the existence of any of those conditions at the time of the accident suspends the coverage under the policy; and the insurer's exemption from liability does not depend upon the condition "becoming the cause of the accident or even contributing to the casualty." Coolidge v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 114 Cal. App. 716, 300 P. 885, 888; Sears v. Illinois Indemnity Co., 121 Cal.App. 211, 9 P.2d 245; Conner v. Union Automobile Ins. Co., 122 Cal.App. 105, 9 P.2d 863.

And even considering the case from plaintiffs' viewpoint, that defendant was required to show that at the time of the accident Schassler was affected, to some extent at least, in the operation of his car by the liquor he drank prior to the accident, the evidence presented, including Schassler's version of the happening of the accident, was clearly sufficient to justify the conclusion that such was the case. It appears therefrom that at the time of the accident Schassler, a chemist, 50 years old, lived alone in Emeryville, and that the events leading up to the happening of the accident, as related by him, were these: Earlier that evening he drove his car on a pleasure trip out Dublin Canyon, and returned home about 8:30 o'clock. Soon afterwards he drove over to Berkeley to eat dinner at a place called "Spengler's"; and he there drank a bottle of beer. He finished eating his dinner about 10 o'clock and returned home, remained there until about 11:30 o'clock and then concluded to take another ride. He had no definite destination in mind, so he drove out the Eastshore Highway through Richmond, thence north on San Pablo Avenue; and around midnight he stopped at a night club, called "Sunnyside Inn," in San Pablo, to get a drink. He stayed through the "floor show" and during his visit there drank two "coke highballs" consisting of whiskey and coca-cola. He left about 15 minutes after the "floor show" was over to drive home, but lost his way; and after driving around aimlessly for some time he eventually arrived back at Sunnyside Inn. He did not go in, but "got his bearings" and again started home. The night club is located on Market and Kearney Streets, and he had not travelled far along Market Street when the collision took place. Plaintiffs were travelling along Twenty-third Street, which is an arterial, and the intersection at Market is protected by stop signs on Market Street. Schassler, according to his statement, stopped at the sign, looked in all directions; but despite the fact that plaintiffs' car was then approaching the intersection with the headlights burning, he saw no cars in the vicinity of the intersection and he started across at four or five miles an hour. Just after he started he saw plaintiffs' car as it neared the intersection, travelling, so he stated, about 45 miles an hour, and he attempted to cross in front of it. The impact immediately followed. As appears from his testimony and written statements, he was considerably confused as to the time he entered the Sunnyside Inn, the time he left there, and how long he drove around while "lost." In one of his written statements he stated that he arrived there about 12:30 o'clock; that after leaving there he drove around for about 10 minutes, and left there the second time "around 1:45" (the accident happened about 2 o'clock); whereas at the trial he testified that he was in the night club, drinking, "around 12 o'clock"; that he did not remember exactly what time he left there but that it was "around 12:30." When asked "How long do you think you were lost?" he replied, "It must have been at least an hour, maybe more than an hour." He was then asked this question: "Well, the accident happened about an hour then after you had these drinks, is that correct?" and he answered: "I do not know the time exactly. I had no watch going and I don't know what time it was. That is only my judgment, an hour or half an hour or two hours. I don't know exactly."

[4-6] In disposing of appeals in negligence cases the reviewing courts, on numerous occasions, have held that the indulgence in intoxicating liquor by the driver of an automobile may and often does have a tendency to affect his keenness of observation, alertness, or sound judgment, or to encourage recklessness or cause drowsiness; and obviously the question of whether in any given case a driver has been affected in any of the ways mentioned is one of pure fact to be determined by the trial court or jury from the evidence adduced in that particular case. In view of the somewhat erratic conduct on the part of Schassler after leaving the night club the first time, there is no legal ground upon which it may be held on appeal, as a matter of law, that his driving was not influenced, to some extent at least, by the indulgence in the intoxicants he acknowledged having taken before the accident. True, he claimed the liquor he drank did not affect him in any way in the driving of his car; and he may have honestly so believed. But, if material, that was the question of fact the trial court, rather than Schassler, was called upon to decide; and it is apparent that the surrounding circumstances were such as justified the trial court in disagreeing with Schassler's conclusion. It follows, therefore, that even though the exclusion clause here involved is susceptible of the construction contended for by plaintiffs, the evidence is legally sufficient to support the trial court's finding; and since an injured person suing upon a policy of public liability insurance is bound by the limitations thereof to the same extent as the assured (Western Machinery Co. v. Bankers I. Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 488, 75 P.2d 609), plaintiffs herein were not entitled to recover on the policy.

Accordingly the judgment is affirmed.

2. Criminal law 🔑814(20), 1173(2)

It is proper to refuse an instruction as to a lesser offense or degree included in offense charged where evidence warrants a conviction, if at all, only for the higher offense or degree, but error in giving such an instruction under such circumstances is not reversible unless it appears that defendant has been prejudicially affected thereby.

3. Criminal law 🔑1172(7)

Where defendant was charged with assault with a deadly weapon, and evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of the crime as charged but defendant was convicted of simple assault, an instruction that jury could find defendant guilty of simple assault as being an offense included in the offense charged was not reversible error, notwithstanding that defendant denied that he had struck or stabbed prosecuting witness. Pen.Code, § 245.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Roy D. McPherrin, Judge.

Amado Cota was convicted of simple assault, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Reginald L. Knox, Jr., of El Centro, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon under section 245 of the Penal Code, it being alleged that on a certain date he committed such an assault by stabbing and cutting the person of one Jesus Sua. A jury found him guilty of simple assault and he has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] It is admitted that Sua was badly injured through a knife wound inflicted by someone. The appellant throughout has contended that he is not the person who inflicted the wound and that he was not present when the act was done. It is conceded, as it must be, that the evidence is sufficient to have supported a conviction of the crime as charged. It is earnestly contended, however, that there is no evidence of any felonious act other than the stabbing of Sua with a knife; that if the appellant committed that act he was guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon and not of the lesser crime; that the court erred in giving an instruction in which the jury was told that it might find the appellant guilty of simple assault as being an offense included in the offense charged; that this instruction was prejudicial to him; and that since he was either guilty of the offense as charged, or not guilty, he is entitled to a reversal. In this connection the appellant has moved to correct the transcript in order to show that this criticised instruction was given at the request of the People and not of the appellant. It appears from an affidavit of the trial judge that this instruction was requested by the People and that no instructions were requested by the appellant. For present purposes, we will grant the motion and consider the instruction as one given at the request of the People.

[2] It is well established in this state that it is proper to refuse an instruction as to a lesser offense or degree included in the offense charged where the evidence warrants a conviction, if at all, only for the higher offense or degree. People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 P. 143; People v. Galloway, 104 Cal.App. 422, 286 P. 476; People v. DiDonato, 90 Cal.App. 366, 265 P. 978. It has also been held in this state that it is error to give such an instruction under such circumstances, but it has frequently been held that such error is not reversible unless it appears that the defendant has been prejudicially affected thereby. In People v. Tugwell, 32 Cal. App. 520, 163 P. 508, 511, where this matter was discussed and the authorities considered, the court said: "Counsel for appellant say the jury might have disagreed, but we cannot indulge in such presumption. On the contrary, since the jury found that defendant unlawfully killed Maude Kennedy, the presumption is that, had the instruction complained of not been given, the jury would have found him guilty of murder. Therefore, conceding the effect of the erroneous instruction was to cause the jury to bring in a verdict for a lesser offense, nevertheless defendant is in no position to complain, since he is not prejudiced by reason thereof." In People v. Washburn, 54 Cal.App. 124, 201 P. 335, 336, the appellant, who was charged with an assault with a deadly weapon, was convicted of simple assault in accordance with an instruction authorizing such a verdict. In considering a contention similar to that here made the court there said: "There can be no presumption that any of the jurors had any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, or that if said instruction had not been given, a verdict of not guilty or a disagreement would have resulted. We cannot impute any misconduct or want of integrity to any of the jurors, and we must hold that, while believing the defendant guilty of the greater offense, they found some circumstance of mitigation that inclined them to exercise this clemency. At any rate, it cannot be said that the error was prejudicial or resulted in a miscarriage of justice." To the same effect, see People v. Alderson, 105 Cal.App. 202, 287 P. 362, where the giving of a similar instruction resulted in a verdict of simple assault although the evidence indicated guilt of a higher offense.

[3] The appellant argues that such cases are to be distinguished from the instant case in that in all of the cases cited the defendant admitted the commission of the act in question but pleaded self defense or other justification, whereas here this appellant at all times denied that he had struck or stabbed the prosecuting witness. It is, therefore, argued that in such a case as this where the appellant is guilty, if at all, of one crime only, it was error to instruct the jury that it may convict him of a lesser and included offense and that such error is prejudicial in that the appellant's chance for an acquittal was lessened. In People v. Alderson, supra, and in some of the other cases cited in the briefs, but to which we have not referred, it does not appear whether or not the defendant admitted the act in question while claiming justification. In People v. Tugwell, supra, it does appear that the defendant strenuously denied that he was the person who had taken the life of Mrs. Kennedy. In our opinion, the distinction thus relied on is not sufficient to take this case out of the rules which have been rather consistently followed in this state.

[4] The entire question here was whether the appellant was the person who had inflicted the knife wound in question. If the jury had had any reasonable doubt that he was that person it was its duty to acquit him and it was so instructed. Having found him guilty at all they necessarily found that he was the person who had inflicted the wound and, having so found, it cannot be assumed that in the absence of this instruction they would have acquitted the defendant in flagrant disregard of the facts found, of their duty and of the court's instructions. It is more reasonable to believe that the giving of this instruction afforded the jury an opportunity, which it improved, to deal more leniently with the appellant than was otherwise warranted by the evidence which they accepted as true, than to believe that it found that the appellant was not the person who inflicted the wound but disregarded that finding and found him guilty anyway. So far as disclosed by, or may be inferred from, the record, the appellant was benefited rather than prejudiced by this instruction which, although it should not have been given, was too favorable to him.

It may be further observed, although not controlling here, that an affirmance of this judgment will be much more beneficial to the appellant than would be a reversal. He was sentenced to six months in the county jail with credit for time already served. It would seem to appear that his sentence will be completed before any judgment of this court can become final and any necessity for a new trial would now probably injure him to a far greater extent than any error of which he complains.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Declaratory relief action by William Duff Howard against Albert Austin Bennett and others. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Reversed, with directions.

Walter G. Danielson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harvey L. Silbert, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial before the court without a jury in a declaratory relief action for the purpose of having construed certain provisions of a will, defendants appeal.

These are the undisputed facts:

Lilly B. Howard died testate November 9, 1938. November 16, 1938, her will was duly admitted to probate in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County sitting in probate. June 13, 1939, plaintiff filed in the superior court the present action, seeking to have the court declare plaintiff's rights under the terms of decedent's will, should he defend and prosecute actions concerning property which some of the beneficiaries of decedent claimed to belong to decedent's estate.[1]

By appropriate proceeding defendants questioned the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the present proceeding.

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

Where a superior court sitting in probate can give full relief, does it have exclusive jurisdiction to construe the terms of a will in an estate which it is administering so as to deprive the superior court in general of jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory relief action for the purpose of construing the terms of said will?

[1] This question must be answered in the affirmative. Section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a declaratory relief action, was not designed to deprive the superior court sitting in probate of its exclusive jurisdiction to construe the provisions of a will and determine the rights of the parties thereunder. (See Pennington v. Green, 152 Kan. 739, 107 P.2d 766, 768; In re List's Estate, 283 Pa. 255, 129 A. 64; In re Lochrie's Estate, 340 Pa. 145, 16 A.2d 133, 138; Stewart v. Herten, 125 Neb. 210, 249 N.W. 552, 554.)

[2] It is the general rule in California that the superior court sitting in probate has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the persons and share that each has in the estate of a decedent (§§ 100, 1020, 1021, Prob.Code; Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, 162 Cal. 433, 123 P. 247; Trout v. Ogilvie, 41 Cal.App. 167, 174, 182 P. 333; Meilink v. Gianelli, 100 Cal.App. 615, 616, 280 P. 561.

McCaughna v. Bilhorn, 10 Cal.App.2d 674, 52 P.2d 1025, is not here in point, for in the cited case the superior court sitting in probate could not, as in the instant case, settle the entire controversy between the parties. The plaintiff had filed his claim with the estate, which had been rejected. He was, therefore, relegated to an action on the civil side of the superior court to establish his claim and in so doing he properly sought to have the court determine the rights as to which he was in doubt under the provisions of the will.

[1] The paragraph in the will which was in question read as follows:

"Ninth: In case any legatee or devisee or beneficiary mentioned or referred to in this my Will, for whom or for whose benefit I have made any provision therein, shall endeavor in anywise to contest in any court, or before any tribunal, this will or the validity thereof, or its due and proper execution, or the provisions applicable to him or her, or any other provision of this my will, or shall commence any suit or action, or submit to any court or other tribunal, or be a party to any pleading or proceeding, which suit, action pleading or other proceeding assails or draws in question the validity or operation of any of the provisions of said will, or shall in any way question my acts in making this will, or any of its provisions, then and in that event such legatee, devisee or beneficiary shall thereupon forfeit and shall thenceforth cease to have any right, title or interest in or to any portion of my estate, or any property devised or bequeathed hereunder, or any income therefrom; and any and all provisions in this will in favor of or for the benefit of such person are hereby absolutely revoked and eliminated and any and all rights or interests which such person would otherwise have had hereunder shall as wholly fail as if such person had predeceased me; and I further direct that any expense incurred by my executors in defending any contest in or about, or in respect to this will, or the provisions thereof, shall be paid from my estate."

[3] In the case now before us the superior court sitting in probate was in a position to settle and determine all of the rights of the parties and it was not necessary for plaintiff to resort to the civil side of the superior court.

For the foregoing reasons the general rule above stated applies to the facts of the present case and the superior court sitting generally was without jurisdiction to entertain the present action.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to dismiss the action.

Record established that evidence on second trial of action to have deed absolute in form declared to be a mortgage was different from the evidence on the first trial, and decision rendered on appeal following the first trial was not the "law of the case" on subsequent appeal.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is the second appeal by the defendant Stewart in the above-entitled action.

The first appeal terminated in the decision entitled Davis v. Stewart, 31 Cal.App.2d 574, 88 P.2d 734. On the second trial many items of evidence were introduced. The issues made by the complaint, the answer, and the replication thereto were tried and copious findings were made thereon. No finding is now attacked but the defendant relies on the doctrine of "the law of the case."

The property is located a short distance south of the city of San Rafael in Marin county. It is across from and slightly north and west of the "Y" formed by the intersection of Highway 101 and the San Quentin-San Rafael Highway. Specifically it is referred to and identified in the transcript as parcels numbers 1, 2 and 3. Parcel No. 1 was acquired by J. E. Davis from the estate of Frederick Schuemann by deed dated October 25, 1929. No improvements were then on the property. Improvements have since been added, including buildings housing a service station with living quarters, an auto court with ten cabins and living quarters for the operator, a store, another service station, a cafe, and in the rear a frame shack and some long sheds. Parcel No. 2 was acquired by the same grantee from the same grantor by deed dated October 25, 1929. No improvements have been placed on it. Parcel No. 3 was acquired by J. E. Davis from William Siebe and wife by deed dated November 2, 1931. On that parcel two buildings have been constructed at a cost of $2,500 each.

The defendant A. L. Stewart sold and delivered to J. E. Davis a quantity of dirt used for filling. The first sale was for $1,688 evidenced by a promissory note dated October 1, 1931, payable April 1, 1932, at 6 per cent. The second sale was in the sum of $1,062. The two sales amounted to $2,750. J. E. Davis and Alice M. Davis executed to Stewart a note for $2,750 payable $50 monthly including 6 per cent interest. To secure said note they executed a trust deed covering parcel No. 3 only. The trust deed provided for and secured additional indebtedness if incurred. Later Stewart delivered additional filling in the sum of $4,038. The total deliveries then amounted to $6,788 and were secured by said trust deed. A computation shows that said obligation, according to the terms of the note, would not have been paid until twenty years had expired. Notwithstanding the terms of said contract Stewart filed a materialman's lien on July 18, 1932, for $6,788 on parcels 1 and 3. Prior to that date parcels 1 and 2 had been conveyed to plaintiff, Alice M. Davis, and prior to July 18, 1932, plaintiff had executed to J. E. Davis a general power of attorney. At said time a number of encumbrances were of record. A debt against parcel 1 in the sum of $3,250 in favor of Bank of America was secured by a deed of trust dated May 4, 1931. An obligation in favor of A. Bonaiti in the sum of $1,250 was secured by a deed of trust against parcel No. 1. Against parcel No. 3 an obligation in favor of William Siebe to secure the payment of $1,000 was secured by a trust deed, dated October 31, 1931. Against the same property stood the trust deed above mentioned in favor of the defendant Stewart in the sum of $6,788. There also stood against said lot a judgment secured by an attachment in favor of William R. Cole for the sum of $1,300.

When the defendant filed said lien J. E. Davis protested claiming that the promissory note and trust deed would defeat the materialman's lien. The defendant's attorney advised him to the same effect. Thereupon the defendant proposed that the actual facts and actual agreements regarding the dirt be concealed and that the lien be foreclosed and in that manner all encumbrances would be undercut and eliminated. Davis rejected the proposal. However he was willing that the lien be foreclosed, that time for payment for the dirt be accelerated, that the parcels be sold to Stewart at the foreclosure sale, if Stewart would pay the claims of other creditors and if the property could be redeemed upon payment of the aggregate indebtedness to Stewart. This was agreeable to Stewart. He had his attorneys prepare a written statement of such agreement. That tentative agreement was produced at the trial. It purported to cover parcel 3 only. The document was signed by this plaintiff and by this defendant. Almost immediately both Mr. and Mrs. Davis were served with summons in an action to foreclose the mechanic's lien. On September 10, 1932, Davis addressed a letter to Stewart claiming that the agreement just mentioned did not state the oral understanding between the parties. Stewart replied admitting the fact and asking for a suggestion. The tentative agreement was therefore abandoned and a new agreement was written consolidating and refinancing all the debts owed by the Davises.

Before taking up the new instrument it is helpful to note that at the time it was written the Davises had invested $19,000; that they had rejected offers respectively of $17,000 and $18,000; that they considered the value of their property $30,000; that the income therefrom was around $400 per month.

It is likewise interesting to note that at the same time there was owing to defendant Stewart $6,788 evidenced by notes payable $50 per month, 6 per cent interest, and extending over a period of twenty years; that said debt was secured by a trust deed covering parcel 3 only.

It may also be noted that at the same time the defendant Stewart had such credit at the banks that he could borrow up to $20,000 on his unsecured note, however the Davises had attempted to borrow from the banks and could not do so. Under these circumstances Stewart represented to the Davises that all of their property must be made available to him and by him used as security in order to obtain money from the bank for refinancing their debts.

The consolidating and refinancing of the debts was worked out by a plan under which Stewart became the sole creditor of the Davises in the sum of $13,479.29, payable within five years from September 27, 1932, with interest at 7 per cent per annum, and secured by the three parcels of realty owned by the Davises, together with the rents, issues, and profits therefrom, and the possession thereof. Pursuant to this plan the Davises executed a deed of the property to Stewart. He thereupon borrowed from his banker the sum of $6,542.46 at 6 per cent secured by a deed of trust on the property. This sum was used to pay the general creditors and clear the title. The property also became security for the payment to Stewart of his dirt claim of $6,788, with interest. The plan necessarily required the dismissal of the foreclosure action instituted by Stewart, and the wiping out of the junior deed of trust held by him covering parcel No. 3. The notes given by the Davises to evidence the dirt claim of $6,788 were retained by Stewart.

The items making up the sum of $13,479.29, earlier mentioned, are these: General creditors, $6,542.46; Stewart dirt claim, $6,788; interest on the dirt claim, $148.83. In computing the sum of $148.83 as interest on the said $6,788 from June 2, 1932, Stewart exacted interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, instead of 6 per cent per annum as provided in the said notes given by the Davises.

All expenses of the plan thus worked out were paid by the Davises. They stripped themselves of the $455 which they had on hand in cash. They paid the fees and expenses of Stewart's attorney. They paid for the title insurance policy issued to Stewart, and they paid for the title insurance policy issued to the bank. They paid for recording the deed to Stewart, and they paid for recording the deed of trust from Stewart to the bank. They paid all taxes, and they turned over to Stewart the fire insurance policies covering the buildings on the property.

That the plan thus worked out was mutually beneficial is not susceptible to doubt. It operated to the benefit of Stewart by accelerating the time of payment for the dirt, by increasing the rate of interest, and by improving the security for payment. The time of payment for the dirt was reduced from twenty years to five years or less; the rate of interest was increased from 6 per cent to 7 per cent; and three parcels of realty together with the possession thereof and the rents, issues, and profits therefrom, were substituted as security in place of a junior deed of trust on one parcel of realty without buildings. And the plan operated to the benefit of the Davises, for it set up, during a time of depression, a moratorium of five years for the payment of their debts except insofar as their property could respond to the payment thereof.

The plaintiff personally and her husband both testified that the contract was intended solely as a security to protect the defendant's claim of $6,788 for filling delivered, and $6,542.46, the amount of other claims paid or to be paid by defendant for the Davises. The defendant on the other hand claimed it was an absolute sale. However the record shows a sale was never discussed and the value of the property was never discussed by the respective parties. The contract was expressed in three several instruments set forth in the complaint—about thirty-six folios. One of the papers is a deed. If a sale was intended 90 per cent of the other written material was wholly idle stuff. After the delivery of the contracts Davis remained on the premises under the terms of the contract to account to the defendant. The defendant entered the transaction on his books and kept accounts with the properties as a single item. Although he collected a large amount in rents he never accounted therefor in paying state or federal income taxes. After the documents were delivered Davis built, at his own expense, on the properties, with the full knowledge of the defendant, two buildings at a cost of $2,500 each; that is in the total sum of $5,000. But defendant made no objection, neither did he attempt to direct the location, architecture, or manner or nature of the construction. In doing that building Davis incurred debts in the sum of $825. That sum was paid by defendant and was by him added to the price paid, $13,479.29, and was to bear interest at 7 per cent and be payable September 27, 1937, all as provided in the agreement set forth in the plaintiff's complaint.

The defendant claims that his deed dated September 27, 1932, was a deed absolute and not a mortgage; and that this court so held when deciding the first appeal, Davis v. Stewart, supra. He further contends said decision has become the law of the case. Sheets v. Southern Pacific Co., 1 Cal.2d 408, 411, 35 P.2d 121. In that connection he claims the evidence on the second trial was the same as on the first trial.

[1, 2] A comparison of passages contained in the decision on the first appeal and the evidence in the record does not support appellant's contention. Referring to pages of said decision and the evidence in the record before us the following propositions appear. (1) As stated on page 576 of 31 Cal.App.2d, 88 P.2d 734, fraud was not proved. But the evidence is that plaintiff did not claim fraud but she did claim that the written instruments did not correctly express the agreement made by the parties. (2) As shown on page 577 of 31 Cal.App.2d, 88 P.2d 734, the former decision held that all of the competent evidence on the first appeal indicated the contract was an absolute transfer. But the evidence in the record before us is that a sale was never discussed by the parties and that the written instruments were intended as security to pay debts incurred and moneys paid out for the plaintiff's account, and that the words negativing a mortgage were inserted to enable the appellant to use the deed to be made in his favor to secure a loan at his bank. It also shows that on September 6, a written instrument was prepared covering defendant's claim in the sum of $6,788 for dirt delivered. It did not cover the other debts but was otherwise similar in form. That instrument was immediately abandoned by the parties and the written instruments under attack were made and executed. (3) Again on the same page it is stated that the only competent evidence of the intention of the parties at the time of the transaction is in harmony with that expressed in the written instruments. The evidence in the present record is to the contrary. It shows that Mr. Davis negotiated with defendant and acted for himself and as attorney in fact for Mrs. Davis. It also shows that from the beginning he and the defendant negotiated for a mortgage and not for a sale absolute. (4) On page 578 of 31 Cal.App.2d, 88 P.2d 734, it is stated that the owners did not, either by said instruments or otherwise, undertake to repay the defendant the amount of his lien for $6,788 or the amount of the other existing debts which defendant paid for them. The evidence before us is directly to the effect that to pay all of said items the contracts under attack were executed. (5) Again on the same page it was stated if the owner had treated the transaction as a mortgage and had sought to foreclose it the answer would have been that there had been a retraxit as to the lien claim of $6,788 by the voluntary dismissal with prejudice and that there was no promise to repay said sum. But the evidence shows that the defendant entered a retraxit only of his materialman's lien and not of the debt theretofore secured by said lien. Said debt remained, evidenced by a promissory note signed by the Davises and said notes defendant still holds. (6) Again on the same page it is stated that there was no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to pay interest unless the option was exercised and if the defendant sought to foreclose he could not have collected interest. That fact is in favor of the defendant's contention but the written instruments contain an option to sell back to the plaintiff. While not conclusive that fact was a circumstance to be considered in favor of the plaintiff in determining whether the agreement was a mortgage or a deed absolute. Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22, 27. Therefore we think it is clear that the evidence before the court on the second trial was quite different from the evidence before the court on the first trial. It follows that the decision rendered on the first appeal is not the law of the case. Royal Ins. Co. v. Caledonian Ins. Co., 182 Cal. 219, 223, 187 P. 748.

[3, 4] Moreover it is perfectly clear that the contract made by the parties by the instruments pleaded in plaintiff's complaint either was or was not a mortgage. If, as shown above, it was a mortgage, the judgment as rendered in favor of the plaintiff must be affirmed. If it was not a mortgage but was a deed absolute, the distinction is not helpful to the defendant. The agreement was made September 27, 1932. By the terms of said agreement the Davises were given an option at any time within five years to repurchase from the defendant. That time extended to September 27, 1937. This action was commenced September 23, 1936. Considering the involved facts hereinabove recited and the contentions of the respective parties no reason appears why the bringing of said action was not both proper and necessary. The trial court received evidence and made findings showing the exact amount of disbursements made by the defendant and the amount of each item of interest that accrued in his favor. It also made findings as to the several items the defendant had received as rents, issues, and profits from said properties. Further it made exact findings as to the amount of the purchase price to be owing by the Davises and due the defendant under the terms of said agreement. The latter sum was so fixed and determined to be $5,907. The defendant does not contend that it is an erroneous sum. We have found no error in the computation. It was made in strict compliance with the provisions in the contract creating the option in favor of the plaintiff. The practice followed by the trial court was in exact compliance with the rules governing the exercise by an optionee of his rights. Reed v. Parker, 33 Wash. 107, 74 P. 61; Hoyt v. Union Nat. Bank, 115 Kan. 167, 222 P. 127; Clancy v. Tremblay, 155 Wash. 558, 285 P. 453; Parmenter v. Kellis, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 965, 968.

[5, 6] Although the plaintiff has contended that the agreement made by the parties was a mortgage and the defendant has contended it was a deed absolute, such facts do not limit this court from determining the rights of the parties. The court has the power, and it is its duty, when the plaintiff's complaint has been answered to grant the plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue. Code Civ.Proc. § 580. In Estrin v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 670, at page 678, 96 P.2d 340, at page 344, the court said: "A party is entitled to 'any and all relief which may be appropriate under the scope of his pleadings and within the facts alleged and proved, irrespective of the theory upon which they may be alleged. (Citing cases.)'" We think the trial court followed that rule in framing its findings and ordering the relief it ordered in the instant case.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Personal injury action by Leola Huff Balzeca against Carolyn Lorentzen. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

George K. Ford and Simpson Finnell, Jr., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund Gerald Brown and Harold C. Brown, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from an amended judgment and order of the court, following a jury verdict, awarding plaintiff the sum of $1,500 damages for personal injuries, and attorney's fees of $500. Labor Code, § 3706, St.1937, p. 271.

Respondent in performing her duties as apartment house manager for appellant was injured by a fall from a ladder while she was replacing an electric light bulb. She claims that the ladder furnished by appellant collapsed as the result of the unsafe condition in which it was maintained. Immediately after the accident, and while respondent was still lying upon the floor, appellant ascended the same ladder and completed the work of replacing the globe.

An attorney living in the apartment house called upon the Industrial Accident Commission shortly after the accident and, representing himself to be the attorney for appellant, stated that while the latter did not carry compensation insurance, she admitted liability and that she would pay respondent compensation and furnish hospital and medical care. The commission so advised the respondent by letter, sending a copy thereof to the attorney. Incidentally both the attorney and the appellant informed the commission that the matter of compensation insurance had been overlooked, and they immediately applied for its issuance. Appellant contended at the trial that she had discharged respondent six days prior to the accident; nevertheless the latter was still living in one of the apartments which was furnished her as part compensation for her services as manager, and apparently was still performing duties in connection with the house.

Appellant urges that there was prejudicial error in the refusal of the trial court to give certain specified instructions on the question of unavoidable accident; also that the record fails to show any authority on the part of the attorney (who did not represent her in the present action) to make any admissions to the commission, and that it was prejudicial error to permit officials of that body to testify to such statements, made neither at a hearing nor a trial.

[1-3] While two of appellant's proposed instructions on the question of unavoidable accident were refused, the court, at her request, did instruct the jury in part as follows: "* * * if you find that the evidence herein shows by a preponderance thereof that defendant did use reasonable care to supply plaintiff with the ladder in question, or that plaintiff sustained the injuries by reason of her own negligence or through an unavoidable accident, then you will find a verdict for the defendant." This instruction was more favorable to appellant than she was entitled to have given. In her opening brief, she states her position as follows: "Defendant at the trial contended that it could well be inferred that the fall of plaintiff was due to an unavoidable accident. That is, considering the hazardous position that she placed herself standing on top of the ladder, requiring a steadying of her position with her hand against the wall, and with the other hand reaching upward and her head tilted toward where the bulb was to be placed." Under the provisions of Labor Code, § 3706, it is not a defense to an action "that the employee was guilty of contributory negligence, or assumed the risk of the hazard complained of." Labor Code, § 3708, St. 1937, p. 271. Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 117 P.2d 850. Ordinarily, an instruction upon the so-called doctrine of unavoidable accident should contain a definition of the term, but in that regard our attention is called only to the following instruction, number IX, requested by appellant: "* * * if you find that plaintiff's injury resulted from an unavoidable accident, for which no one was to blame, then this completely exonerates the defendant." The language is merely tautological and is no more enlightening than the matter contained in the instruction given.

Appellant charges prejudicial error in permitting certain witnesses to recount statements claimed to have been made by the attorney who investigated the circumstances of the accident and, as stated, called upon the Industrial Accident Commission in appellant's behalf with relation thereto. There is testimony in the record that appellant requested the attorney to "take care of it for me." The point stressed on appeal is whether the statements constituted admissions beyond the scope of the attorney's employment, and whether their admission in evidence was prejudicially erroneous. Without deciding the scope of the employment, or the attorney's authority to make the alleged statements, which were not made as a part of and during a legal proceeding (Zurich G. A. & L. Ins. Co., Ltd., v. Kinsler, 12 Cal.2d 98, 81 P.2d 913), the vital question, whether authorized to make the statements or not, is, was the error, if any, prejudicial.

Whatever statements were made—and there is a conflict in the evidence thereon—grew out of the following circumstances: At the time of the accident appellant was subject to a penalty by reason of the fact that she did not carry compensation insurance. The attorney, her tenant, was primarily interested in helping his client avoid the penalty. He interviewed several representatives of the commission and persuaded them that her failure to carry such insurance was unintentional. In addition, on behalf of his client, he informed them, as evidenced by a letter to respondent from the office of the commission, of which a copy was furnished the attorney, "that all your hospital and medical care and compensation due you personally will be taken care of by Mrs. Lorentzen and that she in fact has already paid a certain amount on account of the hospital bill * * * that within a few days there will be a payment of compensation to you for lost time." This understanding was performed in part by appellant, who paid for hospitalization, etc. The record disclosed the following testimony given by a representative of the commission: "A. He first referred to a conversation over the telephone that I had participated in with him, and then stated that he was acting as attorney for Mrs. Lorentzen, and that—while I cannot reproduce his exact words, he stated to the effect that she was not insured at the time of the injury to Mrs. Balzeca, but they were admitting liability, and the compensation and medical treatment was to be paid and furnished according to the provisions of the law. Mr. Brown [attorney for respondent]: Q. Did she say that Mrs. Balzeca was working for her at that time—did he say that? A. To the best of my recollection he did."

Appellant in her brief makes the following statement: "The witnesses * * * made it clear that at no time was the liability for negligence mentioned or discussed with either the attorney or the defendant, but that at all times the subject matter under discussion was whether or not a criminal liability would lie for failure to insure."

That there is a difference in admitting criminal liability under compensation insurance, and liability for negligence, needs no discussion, since compensation in a case of this character is due without regard to whether the employee has been negligent. The court instructed the jury as follows: "The liability, if any, of the defendant is entirely different from her liability under the Labor Code under which the plaintiff can recover through the Industrial Accident Commission compensation fixed by the Labor Code entirely irrespective of and independent of any question of negligence of her employer."

Relative to testimony that the attorney admitted respondent was working for appellant at the time of the accident, there is a direct conflict. Regardless, however, of the statement claimed to have been made by him in this regard, there is ample evidence in the record to substantiate respondent's contention that she was at the time still in the employ of appellant.

[4] Irrespective of the correctness or incorrectness of the admission of the evidence concerning statements made by the attorney to representatives of the Industrial Accident Commission, we fail to find that appellant was prejudiced thereby.

Appellant does not contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment. The record shows that the trial of the real issues did not result in a miscarriage of justice. Const. of Calif. art. VI, § 4½.

The judgment is affirmed.

Louis Arby Huston was convicted of committing lewd and lascivious acts, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

Defendant was convicted after trial before the court without a jury of violating section 288 of the Penal Code. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The evidence being viewed most favorably to the People (respondent), the essential facts are:

In the spring of 1940 defendant on two separate occasions committed an act prohibited by section 288 of the Penal Code, to wit, he kissed the private parts of the prosecuting witness, a female of almost twelve years of age.

[1] Defendant urges for reversal of the judgment two propositions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

First: The evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment.

This proposition is untenable. We have examined the record and are of the opinion there was substantial evidence considered in connection with such inferences as the judge may have reasonably drawn therefrom to sustain the facts hereinabove mentioned and each and every other material fact upon which the judgment of guilty was predicated. For example, the prosecuting witness testified that on two separate occasions defendant committed acts interdicted by section 288 of the Penal Code. Inconsistencies and discrepancies in the testimony of the prosecuting witness are matters for the sole consideration of the trial judge and, where, as in the instant case, there is substantial evidence to support the trial judge's findings, this court will not disturb them because of inconsistencies or discrepancies in the testimony of the prosecuting witness. (See People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 265, 269, 108 P.2d 732, for a full statement of the applicable rule.)

This proposition is likewise untenable. After the first trial of the present case, this court reversed a judgment by which defendant was convicted and ordered a new trial. (People v. Huston, 45 Cal.App. 2d 596, 114 P.2d 607.) Upon the second trial defendant, his counsel, and the district attorney, waived a jury trial and the case, by stipulation of both parties, was submitted to the trial judge upon the transcript of the testimony of the first trial, excepting therefrom the testimony which this court had held to be inadmissible. By this stipulation defendant waived any objection to any other evidence which was contained in the transcript, it being the general rule that a party waives an objection to the introduction of evidence unless such objection is interposed in the trial court. An objection to the introduction of evidence may not be made for the first time on appeal. (10 Cal.Jur. (1923) 824, § 111; Hurd v. Walker, 9 Cal.App.2d 525, 527, 50 P.2d 1074.)

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are and each is affirmed.

An ordinance providing for adoption of a personnel system by city and stating that ordinance should apply to all offices, positions, and employments in service of city, except those specifically exempted therefrom, was not invalid on ground that it did not comply with requirement of statute authorizing adoption of ordinance that ordinance should designate the departments, appointive officers or employees of city who were to be placed under the merit system. Original mandamus proceeding by Benjamin F. La Mar against the City Council of the City of South San Francisco and others to compel the council to make certain appointments and to adopt certain rules.

Writ issued.

Gregory, Hunt & Melvin, Bradford M. Melvin, and William C. Danielson, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Kirkbride & Wilson, of San Mateo, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandate. The petitioner is an elector and taxpayer in the city of South San Francisco, county of San Mateo. The respondents are the duly elected and acting members of the city council of the city of South San Francisco. On December 1, 1941, said council adopted ordinance 216 creating a personnel system. Said ordinance took effect January 14, 1942. Among other things said ordinance provided as follows:

"Section 1. Adoption of Personnel System. Pursuant to the authority granted to the legislative body of any city within the State of California under the provisions of Chapter 48, Statutes of 1935, and in order to establish an equitable and uniform procedure for dealing with personnel matters through a department of personnel, and to place municipal employment on a merit basis so that the best qualified persons available shall be brought into the service of the city, the following personnel system is hereby adopted.

"Section 2. Department of Personnel. There is hereby created a department of personnel which shall consist of a board of review and a personnel clerk. The board of review shall consist of three members to be appointed by the city council.

"The first board to be appointed shall, at its first meeting, so classify its members by lot that one shall serve for a term which shall expire February 15, 1942, one shall serve for a term which shall expire February 15, 1944, and one shall serve for a term which shall expire February 15, 1946. At the expiration of each of the terms so provided for, a successor shall be appointed by the city council for a term of six years.

"Vacancies on the board of review, from whatever cause, shall be filled by appointment by the city council for the unexpired term. Each member of the board shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. A four-fifths vote of all the members of the city council shall be required to appoint a member to said board or to fill any vacancy thereon or to remove any member of said board from office prior to the expiration of his term of office.

"Section 4. Personnel Clerk. The city council shall appoint a personnel clerk whose duty it shall be to act in the capacity of clerk for the personnel system. The duties of the office of personnel clerk may be combined with those of any other office in the event the work involved does not warrant, in the discretion of the city council, the creation of a special position.

"Section 5. Competitive Service. The provisions of this ordinance shall apply to all offices, positions and employments in the service of the city, including all persons employed in the public library of said city, except:

"(a) Elective Offices. Provided however, that, in the event the people of the city shall, at a general municipal election or special election held for that purpose, elect to change the status of any one or more elective officers of the city to that of appointive officers, then at the expiration of the term of office of any such officer, the person holding the office at the time of the expiration of said term, providing that he shall have served in such position for a period of at least six months continuously, immediately prior to the expiration of said term of office, shall assume regular status in the competitive service without preliminary examination or working tests and shall thereafter be subject in all respects to the provisions of this ordinance.

"(b) Positions on appointive boards, commissions and committees.

"(c) All police officers whose compensation is not paid by said city.

"(d) The poundmaster and any deputy poundmaster. Offices, positions and employments not exempted above shall constitute the competitive service of the city."

After the adoption of said ordinance the respondents failed and refused to appoint the "Board of Review" and the "Personnel Clerk" and to adopt rules pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of said ordinance. Having alleged the foregoing facts, the petitioner prays for a writ commanding the respondents to make said appointments and to adopt said rules.

[1] The petitioner contends that his application for a writ of mandamus is the proper remedy, and that he, as an elector and taxpayer, is entitled to make the application. Neither of said propositions is controverted by the respondents. The petitioner further contends that the abovementioned facts warrant the issuance of a writ. Platnauer v. Board of Supervisors, 65 Cal.App. 666, 225 P. 12; City of San Diego v. Capps, 32 Cal.App. 461, 163 P. 235. The respondents do not question the soundness of those decisions but contend they are inapplicable to the facts of the instant case. The above-mentioned ordinance was adopted under the authority of section 2, Statutes of 1935, page 380, as amended Statutes of 1939, page 2040, Deering's General Laws Supp. 1939, Act 1401. That section is as follows: "§ 2. In said ordinance creating such system said legislative body shall designate the departments, appointive officers or employees of the city which shall be placed under such merit system or civil service system; such legislative body may from time to time, by ordinance, add additional departments, appointive officers or employees of the city to the list originally designated in the ordinance creating such system. Said legislative body shall not have the authority to withdraw any departments, appointive officers or employees from the operation of such system, either by an outright repeal of the civil service ordinance or otherwise, unless and until the withdrawal thereof shall have been submitted to the qualified electors of said city at a special or regular municipal election held in said city and shall have been approved by not less than a two-thirds vote of the electors voting on such proposition." (Italics ours.) Having cited said section the respondents proceed to compare the provisions of section 5 of the ordinance with the calls of the statute and they contend that the ordinance is invalid because it does not purport to "* * * designate the departments, appointive officers or employees * * *." In that connection they further contend that the ordinance does not contain a "list" of said departments, etc. Continuing they assert that as the ordinance did not contain the recitals prescribed by section 2 of said statute the ordinance is void. Myers v. Stringham, 195 Cal. 672, 675, 676, 235 P. 448. However by the provisions of section 5, supra, the ordinance applies, with certain designated exceptions, to "all offices, positions and employments in the service of the city," and by that broad recital all are designated. "The greater contains the less." Civ.Code, sec. 3536. If between the provisions of section 2 of the statute and the provisions of section 5 of the ordinance there were a conflict, to that extent the provisions of the ordinance might be claimed invalid. Marculescu v. City Planning Comm., 7 Cal.App. 2d 371, 46 P.2d 308. Respondents do not make any showing to the effect that the provisions of the ordinance do not comply with the provisions of the statute and we see no material variance.

[2] It follows that the ordinance was valid in all respects. It also follows that the writ of mandate should issue as prayed for. It is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles A. Paulsen, Judge.

Suit by Benton A. Graham, as administrator of the estate of Victor Graham, deceased, and others, against Thomas M. Smither, to cancel a lease with an option to purchase land and to quiet title to the land. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Thomas M. Smither in pro. per.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The defendant has appealed from a judgment which was rendered against him in a suit cancelling a lease and option to purchase land on the ground of failure of consideration and that it was procured by means of fraud.

Zeph D. Graham and his brother Victor owned equal undivided interests in sixty-seven acres of unimproved land within the area of the Central Valleys Project in Shasta County. Victor died in 1933, possessed of that interest in the land in question. He left surviving him several heirs. An administrator of his estate was not appointed until March 13, 1939.

Zeph D. Graham was 67 years of age. He lived at Redding, where he was engaged in teaching music. He had formerly engaged in some placer mining, including a little unsuccessful prospecting on the land in question. The defendant claimed to be a mining engineer who was employed in the land department of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company at San Francisco. About the time the first contract on the Shasta Dam Project was awarded, this appellant made numerous trips to Shasta County and interested himself in procuring from owners of land within that area at least five or six similar leases for nominal rental with accompanying options to purchase the lands. Another one of these leases, to which reference is made by the appellant in this record, was cancelled by the trial court on the ground of fraud and failure of consideration. On appeal that judgment was affirmed. Palm v. Smither, 52 Cal.App.2d 500, 126 P.2d 428. It seems apparent that the appellant procured the lease in the present case, as he evidently did in the Palm case, to tie up the title with an accompanying option to purchase the land, with the purpose of speculating on the probability of selling it for a greatly increased price to the United States Bureau of Reclamation for use in the dam project, and that he fraudulently represented that he was president of a mining company, and that he intended to prospect the land in good faith for gold or other valuable minerals.

The owners of the land were not formerly acquainted with the appellant. On August 27, 1938, Mr. Smither went to Redding and interviewed Zeph Graham, representing himself to be a mining man and president of the East Belt Mining Company. He said, "I would like to get permission to prospect for gold and minerals [on your land]. * * * We will go in and put down holes all over the place, prospect holes all over the place." He produced a proposed lease and option which he had previously prepared. He first tried to obtain the lease for 2½ cents per acre per year with the privilege of renewing the lease each year for a period of ten years. He offered to insert an option to purchase it during the term of the lease for the sum of $340. The evident inference, derived from the terms of the lease and from the oral conversation, was that the mining corporation would promptly prospect the premises and if it discovered gold or other valuable minerals in paying quantity, the option to purchase the land would be at once exercised. When the appellant subsequently saw Benton Graham, the brother of Zeph, to secure his signature to the lease, he told him, "I am going to start operations to prospect * * * right soon."

Zeph refused to agree to the offered rental or to the purchase price. He said they orally agreed to an annual rental of 25 cents per acre per year, and to a purchase price of $1,000. The appellant deceived him by pretending to write in the lease the agreed amount of rental of 25 cents per acre. Instead of that sum he inserted in the lease the sum of 2½ cents per acre. Zeph signed the lease with that understanding without reading it, and with the agreement that the appellant would procure the signatures of all of the other heirs of Victor Graham, deceased, who, he was then told, was dead. The agreed rental was an insignificant sum. A check for $2 in payment of rent was all that the appellant ever sent to the lessors. Zeph testified that the only consideration for signing the lease was his expectation that the prospecting would be promptly prosecuted so that if minerals were discovered in paying quantity the option to purchase the land for the sum of $1,000 would be exercised at once.

The appellant did subsequently secure the signatures of three other heirs of Victor Graham, deceased. The signatures of the three remaining heirs were never obtained. The lease was promptly recorded so as to create a cloud on the title to the land. There is a conflict of evidence regarding the activity in prosecuting the prospecting enterprise, but Zeph testified that no prospecting was ever performed by the appellant during the first year of the lease, or at all. The lessee did testify that he went over the land in May, 1939, and took some specimens of soil, but that they didn't look good to him, and he never had them assayed. He admitted that he neither sank shafts nor dug holes in the process of prospecting.

At the expiration of the first year of the lease the appellant attempted to renew the agreement on the same terms contained in the written document, which was promptly refused. In the meantime, Zeph had a bona fide offer of $3,200 for the land from the United States Bureau of Reclamation for use in the Shasta Dam Project. Notice of rescission of the lease and option was served on the appellant in September, 1939, on the grounds of fraud and failure of consideration, specifying the deceit and failure previously mentioned. This suit for cancellation of the lease and to quiet title to the land was then commenced. The court adopted findings favorable to the plaintiffs in every material respect. It was determined that the defendant was guilty of fraud from the inception in procuring the lease, and that he had no intention of prospecting the land for valuable minerals. A decree of court was accordingly rendered, cancelling the lease for fraud and failure of consideration, and quieting title thereto in the plaintiffs.

The findings and judgment are adequately supported by the evidence. All of the necessary elements of fraud, sufficient to warrant the cancellation of the lease and option, are shown by the record. With full knowledge of the fact that the land is situated within the Central Valleys Water Project, and that it would be greatly enhanced in value on that account, the appellant failed to disclose that fact to the lessors; he deliberately deceived them by representing that he was a mining man and president of the East Belt Mining Company, which was then a defunct corporation whose charter had been forfeited for failure to pay corporation taxes; he fraudulently represented to the lessees that he or the mining company would promptly sink shafts, dig holes "all over the property" and conduct prospecting investigation for gold and other valuable minerals at once, and that if the minerals were discovered in paying quantity the option to purchase the land for the sum of $1,000 would be exercised. That was the sole object of the lessors in making the lease. Mr. Zeph Graham so testified. The record satisfactorily shows that the appellant never intended to prospect for minerals. Evidently his only purpose was to tie up the title and hold it for speculation, believing the Shasta Dam Project would result in greatly increasing its value. The appellant failed to prospect the land in good faith. According to his own testimony, his taking of specimens on one occasion in May, 1939, just before the term of the lease was about to expire, was a mere sham and pretense. He never even had those specimens assayed. He fraudulently inserted in the lease, which he had previously prepared for the occasion, the rental sum of 2½ cents per acre instead of 25 cents per acre, as the parties agreed, and he failed to secure the signatures of all of the heirs of Victor Graham, deceased, as he promised to do. There was no real effort on the part of the lessee to perform the most important provision of the lease, that of prospecting for minerals, at any time within the term of that contract. The lease merely extended for one year with the privilege of renewal. Even though the time for performance was not specifically stated in the lease, it was understood that operations would be commenced promptly, or at least within a reasonable time. It is unreasonable to assume the lessee was not required to commence prospecting during the entire term of the instrument, or that he was entitled to a renewal of the contract in spite of the fact that he made no real effort to perform the work which was the inducing cause of the execution of the lease by the owners of the property.

[1] For the foregoing reasons, we are satisfied the evidence supports the findings and judgment, and that the court was warranted in quieting title to the property in plaintiffs.

[2] The making of promises regarding material facts, which induces one to execute a lease or contract, or to alter his position to his detriment, constitutes actual fraud which will justify the rescission of the document. § 1572, subd. 4, Civ.Code; 12 Cal.Jur. 738, § 22; Palm v. Smither, 52 Cal.App.2d 500, 126 P.2d 428; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich, 138 Cal.App. 760, 33 P.2d 455; Cox v. Klatte, 29 Cal.App.2d 150, 84 P.2d 290.

[3] It is not necessary that each of the false statements shall be supported by the evidence. It is sufficient to warrant a rescission of the instrument if a single material statement is fraudulently made, provided that statement were relied upon and became an inducing reason for the execution of the instrument. Stewart v. Crowley, 213 Cal. 694, 3 P.2d 562; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich, supra.

[4-6] The court did not err in receiving oral evidence of the circumstances surrounding the making of the lease and option in question. That testimony was competent in support of the allegation of fraud relied upon by the plaintiffs as a ground for cancelling the instrument. Darrow v. Houlihan, 205 Cal. 771, 272 P. 1049; Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 81, 195 P. 922; Jones on Evidence, Civil Cases, 3rd Ed., p. 660, § 435. Moreover, the appellant waived his right to challenge the oral evidence by failing to object to it at the trial. It is too late to object to evidence for the first time on appeal. Howard v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 253, 257, 105 P. 2d 971, 130 A.L.R. 1003; Palm v. Smither, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOHNSON et al. v. ATKINS et al.

Civ. 12065.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 15, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Aug. 14, 1942.

1. Contracts 🔑220

Where, from nature of contract and surrounding circumstances, parties from beginning must have known it could not be fulfilled unless, when time thereof arrived, some particular condition continued to exist, under doctrine of "frustration", in absence of warranty that such condition of things shall exist, contract is to be construed as subject to implied condition that parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible or purpose frustrated from such condition ceasing to exist without default of either.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Frustration".

2. Contracts 🔑309(1)

Where contract is terminated through "frustration" of the object thereof, the arbitration clause of contract is likewise thereby suspended as to all matters and disputes which have not already arisen, unless couched in such terms as will except it out of the results that follow from frustration generally.

3. Contracts 🔑309(1)

Where the assumed possibility of a desired object or effect to be attained by either party to contract forms the basis on which both parties enter into it, and such object or effect is, or surely will be, frustrated, under doctrine of "frustration", a promisor who is without fault in causing the frustration and who is harmed thereby is discharged from the duty of performing his promise, unless a contrary intention appears.

4. Contracts 🔑309(2)

Where from the nature of the contract it is evident that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the person or thing, condition or state of things to which contract relates, under doctrine of "frustration", the subsequent perishing of person or thing, or cessation of existence of the condition will excuse the performance, a condition to such effect being implied even though promise may have been unqualified.

5. Sales 🔑172

Where it was understood by parties to contract for the sale of copra for shipment to named ports in Colombia that purpose of adventure was the shipment of copra for resale to Colombian buyer and that such shipment could not be made without a permit from Colombian government, under doctrine of "frustration", cancellation or denial of such permit without fault of the buyer terminated the contract, including the arbitration clause thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Proceedings by J. B. Sprague Johnson and others against David Atkins and others to prevent submission to arbitration of questions of rights and obligations of the parties under a contract for the sale of copra to petitioners for shipment to Colombia, and to contest the award of the arbitrators. From a judgment or order confirming the award of arbitrators, petitioners appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellants.

William A. Boekel and John D. Gallaher, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment, or order, confirming an award of arbitrators made after the trial court had denied appellants' opposition to the petition for arbitration.

The controversy arises out of a c. i. f. contract for the sale of 500 tons of copra to the appellants for shipment to Puerto Colombia, or Barranquilla, Colombia, from San Francisco or Oakland. Two hundred tons were shipped and paid for when the buyer learned that no more copra could be shipped to that country, because permission for entry was either cancelled or denied by the Colombia authorities. The buyer paid to the seller incidental expenses incurred in handling the remaining 300 tons, and requested the seller to make other disposition of the remainder for their account. The seller refused and sent the controversy to arbitrators appointed under the rules of the San Francisco foreign commerce association, which rules were made a part of the contract. The arbitrators ruled that it was the duty of the buyer to secure the permit and made their award in favor of the seller. The buyer first protested the submission to arbitration and then contested the award in suitable proceedings before the superior court.

On this appeal the appellants present three grounds for a reversal of the judgment, or order. (1) That the rules of the association do not cover a c. i. f. contract —that is a contract calling for prepayments of costs, insurance, and freight— but that they are limited to contracts covering sales made "Ex Dock, Ex Warehouse, f. o. b. Carrier, Port of Entry." (2) That, assuming the contract to be subject to arbitration, the arbitration clause fell when the object of the contract was frustrated. (3) That the award is void because it failed to comply with the rule requiring the arbitrators to fully set forth the facts of the case.

Because of the views herein expressed it is unnecessary to consider either the first or the third point raised. If, through frustration, the contract was at an end arbitration was not proper under any interpretation of the rules, and it would then become immaterial whether the award was in proper form.

[1] "We may assume without deciding that the contract was one that called for arbitration under the rules of the association, because we prefer to rest the judgment upon the firmer foundation that the trial court should have tried the issue whether the contract was terminated by frustration of the commercial venture contemplated by the parties in the execution of the contract, and hence the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to make the award." The doctrine of frustration is well stated in Straus v. Kazemekas, 100 Conn. 581, 124 A. 234, 238, where the court says: "Where from the nature of the contract and the surrounding circumstances the parties from the beginning must have known that it could not be fulfilled unless when the time for fulfillment arrived, some particular thing or condition of things continued to exist so that they must be deemed, when entering into the contract, to have contemplated such continuing existence as the foundation of what was to be done; in the absence of any express or implied warranty that such thing or condition of things shall exist the contract is to be construed as subject to an implied condition that the parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible or the purpose of the contract frustrated from such thing or condition ceasing to exist without default of either of the parties. 12 A.L.R. 1275."

[2] The doctrine has been given wider scope and application in the cases following the World War of 1914 where contracts for the sale of specific materials, and for the shipment on named vessels, or to specific ports, were made impossible of performance by war restrictions, embargoes, or seizure of the vessel. Numerous cases on the subject are to be found in the English reports; the earlier cases refusing to apply the doctrine, and the later uniformly accepting it as a settled rule of law, which not only declares a termination of the obligation, but a suspension of the arbitration clauses of the contract. The latest case called to our attention is Hirji Mulji et al. v. Cheong Yue etc. Co., English Law Reports, [1926] App.Cas. page 497. That case involved a dispute between the contracting parties whether the frustration of the object of a charter party by reason of the requisition of the chartered vessel in war time put an end to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. The holding was that, since the contract came to an end by the frustration of the commercial venture, the jurisdiction of the arbitrator terminated with the contract and he therefore had no power to award damages for failure of performance. The case arose in the British court in Hongkong which approved an award of the arbitrator allowing damages for the breach, and rejecting the defense of frustration. The award was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Hongkong, two justices dissenting. On appeal to the privy council this judgment was reversed, all justices concurring. Defining the doctrine upon which the court rested its opinion it was said (p. 510): "Frustration, on the other hand, is explained in theory as a condition or term of the contract, implied by the law ab initio, in order to supply what the parties would have inserted had the matter occurred to them, on the basis of what is fair and reasonable, having regard to the mutual interests concerned and of the main objects of the contract: see per Lord Watson in Dahl v. Nelson, Donkin & Co., 6 App.Cas. 38. It is irrespective of the individuals concerned, their temperaments and failings, their interest and circumstances. It is really a device, by which the rules as to absolute contracts are reconciled with a special exception which justice demands." Many of the earlier cases to the contrary, upon which the judgment no doubt was based, are considered and their rule rejected in this later opinion. It is further said (p. 505):

> "All these arguments, it will be seen, resolve themselves, on examination, into the fundamental inquiry, whether in law and fact frustration had been brought about before any dispute arose with regard to frustration or its cause or its consequences. The arbitration clause is but part of the contract and, unless it is couched in such terms as will except it out of the results, which follow from frustration, generally, it will come to an end too. This must be so, if the law is, that the legal effect of frustration is the immediate termination of the contract as to all matters and disputes which have not already arisen.
> "Throughout the line of cases, now a long one, in which it has been held that certain events frustrate the commercial adventure contemplated by the parties when they made the contract, there runs an almost continuous series of expressions to the effect that such a frustration brings the contract to an end forthwith, without more and automatically. They are too numerous to be cited exhaustively, but there are few expressions to the contrary and none in recent cases."

It was then said that a great many charter parties had been dealt with during the last few years on contracts held to have been frustrated by reason of requisitions during the war period; that Bank Line v. Arthur Capel & Co., [1919] App.Cas. 435, settled the rule that the contract was terminated by these events. It was further said that (p. 509), "whatever the consequences of the frustration may be upon the conduct of the parties, its legal effect does not depend on their intention or their opinions, or even knowledge, as to the event, which has brought this about, but on its occurrence in such circumstances as show it to be inconsistent with further prosecution of the adventure."

[3, 4] The same principle is followed in our own cases. In Restatement of the Law of Contracts, section 288, it is said: "Where the assumed possibility of a desired object or effect to be attained by either party to a contract forms the basis on which both parties enter into it, and this object or effect is or surely will be frustrated, a promisor who is without fault in causing the frustration, and who is harmed thereby, is discharged from the duty of performing his promise unless a contrary intention appears." California cases in support of the text are Hackfeld & Co. v. Castle, 186 Cal. 53, 198 P. 1041, and La Cumbre G. & C. Club v. Santa Barbara Hotel Co., 205 Cal. 422, 271 P. 476. In the Hackfeld case the contract called for the shipment of honey "from Honolulu via Tehuantepec to Hamburg." The Tehuantepec route was discontinued before the time for shipment because of unsettled political conditions in Mexico, and the war of 1914 had caused an embargo on shipments to Hamburg. The buyer refused to accept delivery of the portion of the goods not shipped and the seller sued for the loss. In affirming a judgment for defendant the Supreme Court held that the provisions for the manner of shipment were essential to the performance of the contract and that the contract must therefore be deemed subject to the implied condition that the parties be excused in case, before breach, performance became impossible by reason of the prescribed route ceasing to exist. In the La Cumbre case the golf club had a contract with the hotel company giving privileges of membership to guests of the hotel in consideration of specified monthly payments. The hotel burned down and the company refused to make the payments to the golf club. In an action by the latter the Supreme Court followed the rule of the Hackfeld case and cited with approval the statement in 13 C.J. 642 (see 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 464, p. 956): "Where from the nature of the contract it is evident that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the person or thing, condition or state of things to which it relates, the subsequent perishing of the person or thing, or cessation of existence of the condition, will excuse the performance, a condition to such effect being implied, in spite of the fact that the promise may have been unqualified."

[5] Following the same rule, but addressed particularly to appellants' contention that the frustration of the purpose of the contract left nothing to arbitrate under it, are Hanes v. Coffee, 212 Cal. 777, 300 P. 963; Stetson v. Orland Oil Syndicate, 42 Cal.App.2d 139, 108 P.2d 463; and Friedlander v. Stanley Productions, 24 Cal.App.2d 677, 76 P.2d 145. The application of these cases and of the Hirji Mulji case, supra, is apparent. The rules of the foreign commerce association, which were expressly made a part of the contract, provide: "Rule 513. Arbitration—Any dispute arising under contract shall immediately be submitted to arbitration before a committee of the Foreign Commerce Association of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce under its Rules." In the Hirji Mulji case, supra, the court said: "The arbitration clause is but part of the contract and, unless it is couched in such terms as will except it out of the results, which follow from frustration, generally, it will come to an end too. This must be so, if the law is, that the legal effect of frustration is the immediate termination of the contract as to all matters and disputes which have not already arisen." It will be seen that here the arbitration clause contained no such exceptions. Here the arbitrators based their award upon the finding that "After full consideration of all points, the arbitrators were unanimously of the opinion that Seller had filled his part of the contract and was estopped from making shipment by Buyer's inability to secure the necessary permit from the Colombia authorities. It was clearly the duty of Buyer to furnish such permit. * * *" As a special defense to the petition the appellants herein pleaded that from the inception of the transaction all parties knew that the copra could not be shipped into Colombia without a permit issued under the authority of that government, that the obligation to secure such a permit rested upon the buyer, but that the contract obligated the seller to deliver the necessary shipping documents for transportation of the copra to one of two designated ports in Colombia, and all parties understood that it would be impossible to procure such documents without the permit. Other facts were pleaded in support of the issue that the commercial adventure was from its inception understood to be a purchase here for resale to a Colombian buyer and that a permit, or license, for shipment to a Colombian port was essential to the purposes of the adventure; that this purpose was thus frustrated by conditions beyond the control of the buyer. Evidence was tendered, and an offer was made to prove this special defense, and the trial court sustained objections to the offer and ordered the evidence stricken. This was error. The evidence was directed to the very meat of the controversy. If the facts alleged are true the contract was terminated and no arbitration was permissible.

The judgment is reversed.

2. Attorney and client ⚷149

Where principal purpose of agreement between attorney and client was that attorney should establish client's claim against an estate, and attorney carried out agreement, which assigned to him a one-fourth interest in the claim, by obtaining a final judgment against estate, and agreement did not require attorney to represent client until judgment was paid in full before being entitled to consideration for agreement, attorney's executrix was not precluded from recovering a one-fourth interest in judgment on ground that attorney had not prior to his death performed services constituting the consideration for agreement.

3. Attorney and client ⚷153

Where attorney and client made an agreement for attorney's services in establishing client's claim against an estate and assigning a one-fourth interest in the claim to attorney for his services, and attorney obtained a final judgment for client, attorney's claim to an interest in judgment was not subject to a credit for sums received by attorney for representing client in unrelated proceedings for separate maintenance.

Where agreement between client and attorney calling for latter's services in establishing client's claim against an estate and assigning a one-fourth interest in claim to attorney for his services provided that attorney accepted assignment in full payment for services, and attorney obtained a final judgment for client, attorney's claim to an interest in judgment was subject to a credit representing sums allowed for attorney's fees in proceedings against estate.

On or about May 15, 1932, plaintiff's testator, E. A. Kline, an attorney at law and husband of plaintiff Ethel Kline, entered into an agreement with defendant Sidonie Weintraub reading as follows:

"Agreement

"This Agreement, made this ——— day of May, 1932 by and between Sidonie Weintraub of the City of Los Angeles, State of California, party of the first part, and E. A. Kline of the same place, party of the second part,

"Witnesseth:

"Whereas, the party of the first part is desirous of protecting her rights as against the Estate of Solomon L. Weintraub, her husband now deceased, particularly under an agreement for the payment to her of the sum of $20,000.00 on his death, which agreement was duly executed by party of the first part and her said deceased husband, and which agreement was violated by her said husband in making a will directly contrary to the provisions of said agreement, and

"Whereas, she is desirous of obtaining the services of said E. A. Kline, as her attorney in presenting that matter and taking care of her interest within his discretion as an attorney and if necessary bring action for the recovery under said contract.

"Now therefore, This Agreement Witnesseth:

"The party of the first part hereby retains the party of the second part as and for her attorney to carry out the objections and purposes as above set forth and in consideration of services already rendered and to be rendered by said party of the second part she hereby agrees to pay him for said services and hereby, as security therefor, absolutely assigns, sets over and transfers unto him one-fourth (¼) of all her right, title and interest in and to said agreement and all moneys which may be derived therefrom and all moneys which may be paid on such agreement either by suit, compromise or settlement, and also all costs and necessary disbursements which may be incurred in the event of any action which may be filed on or under said agreement.

"The party of the second part hereby accepts such retainer and assignment to be in full of his services rendered in reference to said agreement.

"It is hereby agreed between the parties hereto that the party of the second part may, if he desires to do so, retain any other attorney to act with or for him in said matter, but if he shall do so he shall pay said attorney or attorneys so retained or employed by him out of the share hereby assigned to him as aforesaid by the party of the first part.

"In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

"Sidonie Weintraub,
"Party of the First Part.

"E. A. Kline,
"Party of the Second Part."

July 18, 1932, Mr. Kline, as attorney for Mrs. Weintraub, filed an action against the estate of her deceased husband for the purpose of establishing as a claim against his estate the agreement with her husband referred to in the contract between Mrs. Weintraub and Attorney Kline. Mrs. Weintraub prevailed in this action and obtained a judgment against her deceased husband's estate for $20,000, and also for the sum of $600, which had been awarded to her for attorney's fees in a separate maintenance action which she had instituted against her husband on September 3, 1931, and in which action Attorney Kline represented her.

To and including June 19, 1937, the executor of Mr. Weintraub's estate paid Mrs. Weintraub $12,750 on account of the judgment against the estate, of which sum one-fourth was paid to Attorney Kline. May 12, 1937, Attorney Kline, on behalf of Mrs. Weintraub, filed an action which resulted in a declaratory relief judgment clarifying the judgment previously rendered in Mrs. Weintraub's favor against the estate of her deceased husband. Thereafter Attorney Kline died and the executor of Mr. Weintraub's estate ceased to make any further payments to Mrs. Weintraub. She employed Attorney Harry F. Sewell to enforce the payments due her. Thereafter through various proceedings an agreement was reached whereby the executor resumed payments on the unpaid balance of the judgment against Mr. Weintraub's estate.

Defendant Sidonie Weintraub urges for reversal of the judgment three propositions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

First: The evidence is insufficient to sustain the material findings of the trial court.

[1] This proposition is untenable. Appealing defendant has not supported this proposition by the printing of references to evidence of any character tending to show that the findings of the court are not supported by substantial evidence. The law is established in this jurisdiction that when the point is urged on appeal that the evidence is insufficient to support findings of the trial court and no part of the evidence is printed or referred to, an appellate court will assume that facts cited by plaintiff (respondent), as in the instant case, supporting the findings were proven by competent evidence at the trial. (Johnston v. Johnston, 48 Cal.App.2d 23, 25, 119 P.2d 158; Skidmore v. County of Tuolumne, 35 Cal.App.2d 525, 529, 96 P.2d 178.)

Second: Attorney Kline had not prior to his death performed the services which constituted the consideration for Mrs. Weintraub's agreement with him.

[2] This proposition is likewise untenable. A fair interpretation of the agreement between Attorney Kline and Mrs. Weintraub discloses that the principal purpose of the agreement was that Attorney Kline should establish Mrs. Weintraub's claim against the estate of her deceased husband. This he did by obtaining a judgment against the estate, which became final.

It is to be noted that the agreement says, "Whereas, she is desirous of obtaining the services of said E. A. Kline as her attorney in presenting that matter and taking care of her interest within his discretion as an attorney and if necessary bring action for the recovery under said contract." It is obvious that this provision in the agreement referred to the establishment of Mrs. Weintraub's claim against the estate of her deceased husband. Attorney Kline established this claim, as we have heretofore pointed out by obtaining a judgment on behalf of Mrs. Weintraub against the estate of her deceased husband. There is nothing in the agreement which required him to represent her until the judgment was finally paid in full before he should be entitled to the consideration for the agreement, which was an assignment of a one-fourth interest in the claim which she had against her husband's estate and all moneys derived therefrom.

Third: Defendant, Mrs. Weintraub, was entitled to two separate credits against plaintiff's claim, because Attorney Kline had received (a) $617.50 as attorney's fees in a separate maintenance action which he had instituted on behalf of Mrs. Weintraub on September 3, 1931, and (b) $600 from the executor of Mr. Weintraub's estate in the litigation which resulted in the establishment of Mrs. Weintraub's claim against her husband's estate.

[3] (a) The $617.50 received by Attorney Kline for representing Mrs. Weintraub in her separate maintenance suit was for services performed in that suit and was not in any way related to the services which he agreed to perform under the contract which is the basis of the present suit, and therefore the trial court properly refused to allow this as a credit against plaintiff's claim.

[4] (b) The agreement between Attorney Kline and Mrs. Weintraub provided, "The party of the second part hereby accepts such retainer and assignment to be in full of his services rendered in reference to said agreement." Clearly, therefore, Attorney Kline was not entitled to receive and retain the $600 allowed for attorney's fees in the action which he filed against the estate of Mr. Weintraub, and the appealing defendant should have been allowed an additional credit of $600.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is modified by striking therefrom paragraph 2, which reads as follows:

"2. That out of the sum of $2,350.00 that has so far been paid to defendant and cross-complainant, Sidonie Weintraub, since the death of E. A. Kline, deceased, by the said defendant Weintraub estate, the plaintiffs herein were and now are entitled to the sum of $587.50, being one-fourth thereof", and by striking from paragraph 4 the figures $16.75 and inserting in lieu thereof $4.25. Otherwise the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurred.

KELL et al. v. JANSEN et al.

Civ. 6766.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 21, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⚷1012(1)

The weight of evidence was for trial court, sitting without a jury.

2. Mines and minerals ⚷125

Evidence established that gold dredging tailings were negligently deposited in natural channels of creek, so as to authorize recovery for destruction of landowners' diversion works, ditch and bridge resulting from such negligence combined with unprecedented flood.

3. Negligence ⚷61(1)

Although no one is responsible for that which is merely the act of God or an inevitable accident, when human agency is combined therewith and neglect occurs in employment of such agency, a liability for damage results from such neglect.

4. Mines and minerals ⚷125

Evidence established that negligence in depositing gold dredging tailings in natural channels of creek combined with unprecedented flood to destroy landowners' diversion works, ditch and bridge, so as to authorize recovery for such destruction.

5. Mines and minerals ⚷125

In action for destruction of landowners' water diversion works, ditch and bridge caused by negligent depositing of gold dredging tailings in natural channels of creek, combined with unprecedented flood, cost of repairing damage and restoring plaintiffs' premises to their original condition was proper measure of damages if it amounted to less than value of premises prior to injury, and otherwise value of premises was proper measure.
